BRO. GRANT:—I want to say a few words to the brethren and sisters through the Crisis about our campmeeting. Last fall there was much good done, although the adversary raised quite an opposition; yet the good Lord blessed the efforts made to the salvation of some, which to my mind pays well for all the trouble we had. I am aware that the arrangements were not made to our full satisfaction, yet we did the best we knew how. And now, as regards our meeting next fall, it is generally understood that there is to be one, but there is no committee appointed. What is to be done? I have prayed about it some, talked about it more or less, thought about it much, and have come to this conclusion; that some one must volunteer to take this matter in hand. The Lord will bless us in this coming meeting, and the judgment is just at hand. What we do to save others, and help others through to the end of the journey, must be done quickly. There is no time to be lost. So we will have a campmeeting, either on the same ground where it was last year, or near by, to commence Monday, Sept. 3rd, to hold through the week and over the following Lord's day, if the Lord will.

Who will take hold with me to make the arrangements? Come, brethren and sisters, the Lord is coming, and that soon. Do let us be faithful, that we may have a crown of life. I rejoice to know the kingdom is near, and that soon, very soon, this conflict will be over. Hold fast, Brn. and Srs., and pray for me. Yours, waiting in hope,

New Preston, Ct. H. J. BALDWIN.

MORE CALLS FOR HELP.

From a Brother in Oxford, Me.

BRO. HERRON:—We organized a Sabbath-school yesterday, with twenty-two scholars, and a prospect of more. We are of different views, but I pray that God will enable us to labor together in union. We are destitute of a Library. Can you do anything for us? Have you any Question Books, and, if so, will you send me one for examination?

Please send me ten copies of the Young Pilgrim, and I will try what I can to get up a club.

We have sent you by express a $10.00 Library, our Scriptural Question Book, and the Pilgrims. If the school should ever be able to pay for them, in whole or in part, they can do so by contribution to the Sunday-school Fund.

From a Brother in Morenci, Michigan.

DEAR BRO. HERRON:—We were but three believers in the Lord's coming, in this place, and now the Lord has added another. We are poor in this world's goods, and though we are not able to pay preaching brethren for coming here to preach, yet we believe the Lord can bless us, and help us to do some good, without preaching. So we have started a weekly prayer meeting, and a Sunday-school, with seven scholars for a beginning. If you could send us a few Sunday-school books, they would be very thankfully received.

We will do the best for you that we can. We have no means of our own, and there is no money left in the S. S. Fund. We have already sent out, for the help of new Sunday-schools, nearly $50.00 worth of books, with less than $20.00 in the Fund to get them with. The rest we had to beg from the publishers. Just as soon as the Lord shall send in $5.00 more, by the hand of some one of his kind stewards, we will endeavor to send you a $10.00 Library, and before, if we can.

O, for a Sunday-School Society of our own! and books of our own, which shall be free from prevailing errors, and teach only truth! Shall we ever have them? Let us thank God that a beginning is already being made in that direction by the publication of "Young Pilgrim Stories," in tract and book form. They will be ready in tract form in a few days, at 5 cents each by mail, postage paid, or 25 cents per dozen. Send on your orders to this office.

We are glad that so many new Sunday-schools are springing up in various places. We pray that there may be a still greater awakening in this direction all over the land. There are hundreds of places where flourishing Sunday-schools ought to be in operation to-day. Who will go to work at once, and see what they can do? Let there be a general rally everywhere in behalf of Sunday-schools and the young, and generous and liberal contributions to help the poor and needy with books and papers. W. B. H.

LITTLE WANDERERS' HOME.

To-day, the 29th of June, we have on hand, for the purchase of a house for this object, $1000.00. My heart is filled with gratitude to Him who hears and answers prayer. I feel that all that I have received of the Lord has not been given to me for any merit on my part, but has been given through the unmerited love and favor of God. I expect that the same grace will furnish a thousand dollars more, then another thousand, and so on, that the work of rescuing the little lambs of Jesus may be successfully carried on.

I have the sympathies and the co-operation of the brethren and sisters in Philadelphia, and from the commencement of my labors here I have received from them, during the last seventeen months, nearly $500.00 for preaching and for missionary purposes. Out of this sum, I have had to pay $5.00 per week for my board. I have visited and labored in other places, such as New York, Boston, and a number of other cities and towns in New England, in these seventeen months. In addition to monies received from Philadelphia, I had given me last year a new summer coat and hat, hose, etc.; a new black suit, of coat, pants, and vest; and within a few weeks I have received a present of a new suit, coat, vest, and pants, for summer wear. Bundles upon bundles of clothing have been given to the poor of our mission, and the brethren have often visited our meetings and Sabbath school.

It is impossible, I think, to hire a house for the care of the little ones given us. Few care to let their houses to a family where there are a half-dozen white children; and none care to let their houses where there will be a family of thirty or forty colored children gathered into it. Hence we must buy, and feeling that the Lord has led us to enter upon the work, we believe that he will supply everything that is requisite to carry it on.

Some think that the Lord will come this year or next, and that our institution is not needed. Such an idea is erroneous. Those who hold such an opinion virtually leave their Master to suffer in some damp cellar, dark and poorly ventilated room, wretched garret, or miserable shed, with no bed to sleep on, half-clad, and half-fed. They leave him in filth and degradation. How so? Because they believe all little children will be saved in the kingdom of heaven; yet they say, "It is not necessary to provide a home for them; let them alone." Shame on such christianity. It is not christianity. Christ will say to such when he comes, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me." If they leave them to suffer in such dens of Satan for six months or a year, they leave their Master, or him whom they call so, to suffer thus long. A sorry kind of religion that.

But the Lord lives, and I still trust in him. He knows when and where to knock for the means, and I leave all in his hands. The Lord is our strong tower. He has dealt wonderfully with me. I dare not trust in man; not that I do not love the brethren and sisters; not that I do not have confidence in them; but because the Lord knows all about their circumstances, and by calling upon his name, he moves upon the hearts, and he does all the judging and condemning. Thus I can move about in this direction with freedom. Some have hoped ere this to have helped us in our work, and if I had been depending on them solely, I should have been sadly disappointed.

Pray for us; and may grace, mercy and peace abide with all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. Yours, etc., in the highways, P. H. BURBANK.

COME TO CAMPMEETING.

As the time draws near for our campmeetings, I thought I should like to say a few words. We hope all that can come will come. We hope the ministers will come, and come filled with the Holy Spirit. Come prepared to preach the pure and plain word of God. Come prepared to tell us something about "the old paths." Come with the determination that you will preach to please the Lord. If it is pleasing in his sight, all will be well. Come prepared to tell us something about the prophecies. Come with a large share of the Spirit in your hearts; then you can preach much better.

Come, you that can tell us plainly about the signs of the times; will you come? We could name many things that we would like to have you come and preach; but we say again, come filled with the Spirit. Come and point sinners to the way of salvation. We say once more, come and preach to us the words of the blessed Jesus. Will you come?

Now a few words to the brethren and sisters that come to hear. Come with your hearts uplifted to God in prayer, that you may hear and obey. Come with your hearts all right; then, if you happen to hear anything that does not harmonize with all your peculiar views, you can keep patient about it. Come with a mind to tell us all about how the Lord has dealt with you. Come prepared to take up your cross, and God will bless. Will you come and try it?

Next will be a few words to backsliders. Will you come and confess all of your heart-wanderings? I expect of all the people in the world to be pitied, you should receive the largest share. May God help and open the way for you to come, that you may once more take up your cross. O think how God loves you; how he wants you to come back. Will you come? We pray, we beg, we entreat, we cry, Come. Will you come? We will try and do you good.

A few words to the poor sinner, if such an one happens to see this, and then I close. Will you come and hear some of this preaching, that I have been talking about? Will you come and see for yourselves? Will you come and get acquainted with some of these people you so much hate? Come and hear them sing their sweet songs of praise. Come and hear them tell what the Lord has done for them. Come, we will try to do you good. Come and give your hearts to Jesus, love and serve him here, and by and by when he comes have a crown to wear.

In conclusion, I will say to the preachers, and all the rest, pray before you come; pray while you are coming; pray when you get there; keep praying, and God will bless, souls will be saved, and we will be strengthened. Will you all come? May God help you to come. J. T. KIMBALL.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER SEVEN.

Bro. Grant:—With much gratitude, we received through Bro. Adams, last week, a check for 362 francs, which was most acceptable. May God bless abundantly the dear brethren and sisters who have contributed of their substance to sustain the preaching of the gospel of the kingdom in Europe. We have recently received from Italy very interesting and important news, as follows: "The Chamber of Deputies have made a very important decision; they have voted the suppression of all religious corporations. After a warm debate, the Chamber approved the first article of the bill in question, which reads as follows: Orders, corporations, and regular and secular religious congregations and conservatories, and retreats that permit life in common, and have an ecclesiastical character, are no more recognized by the State. The houses and establishments appertaining to the said orders, corporations, congregations, conservatories and retreats, are suppressed!" "The hall of five hundred was filled to overflowing, and when the President, Mons. Mari, proclaimed the adoption of the first article, by a nearly unanimous vote, a tremendous and prolonged acclamation responded from all parts of the hall. Some speakers wished to establish exceptions of certain orders. M. Massari, among others, pleaded in favor of the Abbey of Monte Cassino, a rich and celebrated Monastery, situated in the Neapolitain, said to have been founded by St Benoil, in 529, the Cradle of the Order of the Benedictins, which contains immense riches, as well in manuscripts as in objects of arts. But the Chamber had passed the bill, and would accept no amendment." Thus the word of God, Rev. 2: 22, and 17: 16, is accomplished, and we have reason to expect great events the present year, and that the time of agony for the Papacy, as far as regards its temporal power, has come.

Dear brethren, may our zeal and diligence be redoubled; may we preach with a loud voice repentance and the coming of the Savior, with love and liberality. Since writing you last, I have met with much encouragement in my labors. Sunday, the 10th inst., I preached, according to previous request, twice at the German Baptist Conference near Locle, and the evening at the grande salle in the College of Locle. Many were assembled to hear, and the Spirit of God accompanied the preaching of his word. Four Baptist ministers were present at the German Conference, who were much interested in the truth presented, and seemed to receive it into good and honest hearts.

From Locle I went to the flourishing city of Chaux de Fonds, a few miles from the former place, and preached every evening in the college. But, as the congregation increased rapidly, and listened with eagerness, we were obliged to change the locality, and from yesterday evening, we have opened a course of lectures in the large salle "des armes reunie," and shall continue the next week, providence permitting. Father Hanhart, and his dearly beloved son, Bro. Jean David Hanhart, are with me. Father H. is laboring all the time for the mission, with earnest, indefatigable, and true christian zeal. His son has just come to-day from Fleuria, and will go with me, or alone, as the Lord will open the way before us.

The people manifest much interest indeed. Glory be to God. But the ministers here seem very enraged. Knowing, as we do well, the worldliness of the ministers of the Established Church generally, we can expect little but opposition from them, and especially from those who are regular smokers; and this will probably increase, as the people manifest an interest to hear.

We cannot expect they will provide us with places of assembly; and in order to meet this state of things, and give the people an opportunity to hear, it seems to me necessary to be independent of churches and colleges. We could be so, if we had a large tent, with portable seats, capable of holding one thousand persons, and I doubt not it would be well filled. It should be a good one, surmounted with a United States flag, bearing the name of "American Mission of the Second coming of our Savior, Jesus Christ." With it we could go freely from place to place, proclaiming the glad tidings of the kingdom. I feel, dear brethren and sisters, that it is the will of God that this enterprise should be accomplished; and I trust he will put it into the hearts of many of his faithful stewards to assist us in this great European Mission work. It should be done at once, for time is short. What we do for our Master must be done quickly.

Your brother in labor and hope,
M. B. Czechowski.

A GOOD WORK.

"The Bible Triumphant; being a reply to a work entitled 144 Self-Contradictions of the Bible, published by Andrew Jackson Davis. By Mrs. H. V. Reed."

In every age, since the Scriptures were written, the Bible has had its enemies; but none, perhaps, more blatant than the Atheistic-Spiritualists of the present day. The Bible condemns their theory and practice, and they, in turn, condemn the Bible. Gladly would they destroy the influence of that Holy Book. Hence the "144 Self-Contradictions of the Bible," which has been sent out into the world on its mission of infidelity, declaring, with brazen impudence, that the Bible is a contradictory book. But, with a master pen, sister Reed (better known to many as Lizzie A. Armstrong) refutes the charge, and shows that the Bible does not contradict itself. The work is well done, and it "hits the nail on the head" every time. Indeed, I think that Sr. Reed has nailed the sophistries of the compiler of the "Self-Contradictions" to the wall.

PENALTY FOR SIN.

Christ has suffered it. He died. From Adam's death-state, Christ raises ALL. If the penalty were endless misery, we must be without hope. Christ could not then secure hope for us. To endure endlessly "the death that never dies," would leave all in that terrible state eternally. Whatever God meant by the death penalty, he means us to understand it has been inflicted on his only begotten Son, Jesus the Christ. So I believe.

REPORT OF THE QUARTERLY CONFERENCE IN JEFFERSON, ME.

The Advent Quarterly Conference convened, according to notice, June 14th. It was heart-cheering to see the brethren and sisters come in from twenty-five towns, who had a mind to work, uniting with the brethren and sisters of Jefferson. The prayers and exhortations were very spiritual; the preaching instructive and timely, and the result was beneficial in the vicinity of the meeting.

Saturday, two were buried with Christ by baptism. Our morning meeting Sunday was very cheering. Union, love and zeal were characteristic of the meeting. At the close of the afternoon sermon, a sea captain arose and said, "I have been serving sin fifty-two years, and have made up my mind to serve the Lord." Others made up the same mind. A young lady found peace the next day.

Preachers present, N. Nason, N. G. Reed, James Dudley, Jesse Partridge, John Bomes, J. Carr, S. K. Partridge, L. Rhodes, H. S. Mitchell.

In the business meeting, voted to have the quarterly conference at Liberty Village, to commence Aug. 23d, and hold over Sunday; and also in South Hope, the last of September, the time to be appointed by the President. Adjourned to meet at Liberty, Aug. 23d.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Waterhouse.

Bro. Grant:—I would say that through the goodness of a beloved sister, E. Wilson, I have been highly favored and wonderfully blessed by reading the Crisis. I have been searching out the truth as it is in the gospel, and I can say, I love it, and mean to try and live in accordance with its teachings. I think I realize my utter nothingness and insufficiency, and the all-sufficient fulness and beauty of Immanuel. To those that believe, Christ is unspeakably precious. Do we; my christian friends, discern his loveliness? Do we rest entirely on him, and trust only in his righteousness and merits? Do we love the holy character of God, as delineated by the pen of inspiration? And do we hate all sin, because it is contrary to his holy will? If we possess these characteristic marks of the true disciple of Christ, we may take courage, and go on our way rejoicing; for time with us on earth is short. Jesus will soon come to make up his jewels, and gather all his faithful children home. His ways are ways of pleasantness, and all his paths are peace.

He is the centre of all perfection, the source of all felicity, the fountain of living waters, the giver of every good and perfect gift; who aways the sceptre of universal dominions, having all creatures and things under his control; whom cherubim and seraphim, angels and archangels, and all the redeemed, love, extol, and worship; before whose throne they cast their crowns in adoring wonder, ascribing all blessedness, might, power, and glory in one universal concert of praise. Let us lift up our heads and rejoice, looking forward to yon unclouded regions of mercy, unsullied by vapors, unruffled by storms, where celestial friendship never dies, never changes, never cools; and live in constant preparation, knowing that "the end of all things is at hand;" and be looking forward for the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, that when he appears, we shall appear with him in glory, and meet all our friends, and see Jesus in all his Father's glory.

Poland, Me. B. Waterhouse.

From Bro. C. P. Dow.

Dear Bre. of the Household:—I feel it a duty and privilege to say that I am still in the field of conflict, endeavoring to "fight the good fight of faith," that I may lay hold on eternal life. In all the field of my labor iniquity abounds, and the love of the greatest number waxes cold; yet there are some faithful ones who shine as lights in a dreary land. Such ones are the excellent of the earth, God's nobility, the followers of the Lamb. This is a time of peril unsurpassed; a time of grand, of awful moment; "an age on ages telling." Here, and every where, men's hearts are failing them for fear, while looking for the things which are coming on the earth. The Fenian movement has contributed its share to the fulfillment of Jesus' words; and lately, in Stanbridge and St. Armand's, a "reign of terror" has been realized by an invasion of Fenian forces from Franklin, Vt., numbering from one to two thousand armed men of war, who plundered and alarmed the entire section by their approach; robbing hen and turkey roosts, milking and then killing lean kine, hogs and sheep, despoiling property, and carrying off what valuables they could find. Most of the money, horses, and women left before they got there.

The main camp, sixty to a hundred rods from the sheltering wing of the American eagle, under whose fostering care they seem to feel safe, sending brave scouts miles into the unarmed country around, who were lords in supreme and undisputed dominion for the time; professing great anxiety to see and contend with the red coats, John Bull's war dogs; when suddenly their valor was tested, and the sincerity of their professions demonstrated, by their hasty, their welcome departure at the tidings of the approach of the veritable "Red," with all the needful concomitants; and the possible smell of British gunpowder, and apprehension of a hearty greeting of screeching balls from Armstrong guns. This story, told in a few suggestive words, will explain why I did not attend my last appointments in Bolton, Stukely, Magog, Barnston, and other places. Four weeks from the times, in the places named in my last published appointments, I will preach, the Lord willing. Love to all the faithful. Yours in hope,

No. Stanbridge, C. E. C. P. Dow.

From Bro. B. P. Stevens.

Bro. Grant:—We have just closed one of the best meetings that I ever attended. Truly the Spirit and power of God was with us through the entire meeting. There were many loved ones gathered here from all parts of the State, filled with the love of God and the joyful expectation of soon seeing Jesus. Glory to God, we feel sure; the evidence is clear and comprehensive. This grand truth pervaded all our exercises, and it could be truly said, How these brethren love one another. We trust it has made a lasting impression on hearts. The attendance was large, and the best attention given to the word preached.

Hoping to realize our hope soon, I remain as ever your brother in Christ,

Obituaries.

Dunn. Died in the triumphs of faith, in New Gloucester, Me., June 22d, 1866, Sister Sarah H. Dunn, wife of the late Rev. E. Dunn, aged thirty-six years, five months, and eight days.

Our beloved sister embraced Christ in early life, and soon after joined the Methodist denomination, and continued with them until seven years ago, when she embraced the doctrine of life and immortality through Christ, to be given at his second advent; and also the near approach of the Master to give deliverance to his people; and was at that time buried with Christ in baptism by Elder J. Patridge. She sounded this glorious message far and wide, and was an ardent laborer in the vineyard of the Master, until consumption fastened upon her, and through weakness she was forced to quit the field. In her last sickness, she was a great sufferer. She was confined to her bed some fourteen weeks, during which time she bore her sufferings with christian patience, never murmuring, but continually rejoicing in the blessed hope.

A few hours before her death, she aroused from her slumbering state, and looking up sweetly, asked to have her friends called to her bedside. She then commenced exhorting one after another to a faithful love to Christ; and then clasping her dying hands, raised her eyes toward heaven and offered up a fervent prayer for her children and friends; after which she sank into a peaceful slumber. A few moments before her death, she looked up to her aged, weeping mother, who was standing over her, and softly said, "O mother, I am almost dead," and sank in the embrace of the enemy death as sweetly as an infant sinks to rest in its mother's arms.

Thus ends the earthly course of one dearly beloved by all who knew her; and having lived a life of purity on earth, will soon awake to join the innumerable company in the song of victory over death,—"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Before her death, she selected the 25th verse of the 11th of John's gospel, for a text to be used at her funeral, which was used by Elder True Jordan, of Poland, Me. An attentive company gathered to pay their last respects to a long-loved and cherished friend. May the blessings of Almighty God sustain those mourning friends, is the fervent prayer of the writer.

Spear. Died in Biddeford, June 23d, 1866, of dropsy, after a sickness of five years, Frank W. Spear, aged fourteen years and three months.

Frankie was a good boy, kind and easy in his manners. When informed that he must die, it seemed to rally his whole soul, for he had a work to do. He said he loved Jesus, and was not afraid to die. His assurance of faith grew stronger as he gave vent to his feelings, and he became bold for Jesus and his word. His father had been a good father to Frank, but he had never heard him pray. So he called him, and with the love and affection of an only child, with his last dying words, entreated his father to give himself to Christ then, and begin to pray. The word he could not withstand, and the father and mother bowed with dear Frankie. Broken-hearted, he penitently confessed his sins and cried for mercy, when the Savior appeared to his relief. They all confessed, prayed, rejoiced, and promised each other to be faithful, and meet in the kingdom of God. The father promised the son that he would read his Bible, and with his mother continue family prayer, and live as the grace of God teacheth while life lasts. This was satisfactory to the darling boy. With joy and ecstacy he rejoiced and triumphed in the faith, and was "now ready to be offered."

He lived a few days to hear a father pray. O the joy to him, to see all bend their knees and bow down in a little group, all praying with and for each other. This was enough. Joy was unspeakable and full of glory. He now called his schoolmates and companions, and all that came within his reach, and with language more than human, urged all to seek Christ, praying for them. None could withstand the solemn appeals, and he could not leave them until they promised to give all for Christ, and meet him in the kingdom of God.

Thus passed the last days of Frankie Spear, when he fell sweetly asleep in Jesus. The funeral services were performed by Bro. Wm. H. Mitchell, who comforted all with the good hope of life at Christ's coming.

Damon. Died in Goshen, Mass., June 28th, 1866, Bro. Jared Damon, aged seventy-four years.

Bro. Damon was a firm believer in the great and glorious truths of the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, and their kindred doctrines. But he was stricken down in a moment, by a shock of palsy, and waits to share a part in the first resurrection. Words of comfort by the writer, from Psalm 37: 37.

E. M'Cullock.

Flint. Died in Sutton, N. H., June 8th, 1866, of consumption, Angeline E., daughter of Levi Flint, aged nineteen years.

Sister Angie embraced Christ some over one year ago, and was baptized by Bro. Hook, and lived a humble and devoted christian. Although so young, yet her firm hope in Christ enabled her to give up the world for a part in the first resurrection. May her young friends prepare to meet her where the inhabitants shall not say they are sick.

J. G. Smith.

Coverly. Died in Tuftonborough, June 22d, 1866, of consumption, Sr. Hannah Coverly, aged thirty years.

Some sixteen years ago, Sister Hannah gave her heart to God. The great and glorious truths of the Bible have been cherished by her with pleasure. She felt that she could resign all to the Lord, and thus peacefully passed away to awake soon when the trumpet sounds.

J. G. Smith.

Glidden. Died in Brookfield, N. H., May 10th, 1866, Sister Lovinia, wife of Bro. John Glidden, aged fifty-five years.

Our sister was one of the excellent of the earth, and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus. Our brother has met with a great loss. May grace sustain him, and the family meet in the kingdom of God.

J. G. Smith.

☞ The Pope's own sister recently died at Rome, in great poverty and misery. She was anti-Catholic, and the Pope wouldn't do much for her.

☞ It is stated that Austria, in a few weeks, will have 900,000 men in the field.

☞ A Detroit dispatch says accounts of destruction by the late tornado in Michigan continue to come in.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Southampton, June 27th.

The laying of the Atlantic cable would commence on the 30th of June.

The Italian army crossed the Mincio without meeting any opposition from the Austrians. It then pushed on toward Peruguro, but was repulsed by a short cannonade from the forts and strongholds. The Italian army was encountered by the Austrians in great force in the vicinity of Verona. A great battle commenced. The Austrians repulsed both wings of the Italian army. The Prussians had advanced unto upper Silesia and Bohemia. They easily repulsed the Austrian hussars owing to the effective power of the needle gun. Prince Charles' army met with no resistance in crossing the Bohemian frontier.

Sunday's engagement between the Austrians and Italians near Verona lasted all day and ended in the complete defeat of the Italians, who were commanded by the King. Both armies fought bravely. The Italians were repulsed at all points after a severe and bloody struggle. The Italians recrossed the Mincio on Sunday evening. Prince Amodeus was wounded. The Austrians captured 2000 prisoners. They then took Custozza by assault.

A Florence dispatch of the 25th says the papers there assert that the want of success in the first battle is but a new motive for redoubled energy and perseverance. The country has full confidence in the army, and the war against Austria will be continued until the complete liberation of Venetia has been accomplished.

An official dispatch, dated Brescia, evening of the 25, says: "To-day, in an engagement between the bridge of Coffaro and Loadzone, the latter were repulsed, leaving several killed and wounded."

The Prussians attacked Aswincia, in Gallecia, but were beaten off with loss by the Austrians.

Garibaldi intends marching through Tyrol direct to Munich.

A later telegram asserts that the Hanoverian army is still completely surrounded. The King of Hanover demanded twenty-four hours for deliberation on the conditions upon which his army is to capitulate. The demand has been granted. The King expects to receive assistance from the Bavarian army.

DOMESTIC.

Terrible Conflagration in Portland.

Portland, July 4. A terrible fire is raging here, having destroyed Brown's sugar house, and is sweeping through the city before a strong southerly wind.

July 6. The fire has swept completely through the city from the foot of High street to North on Munjoy, destroying everything in its track so completely that the lines of the streets can hardly be traced, and a space one and one-half miles long by a quarter of a mile wide, appears like a forest of chimneys, with fragments of walls attached to them.

The wind was blowing a gale from the south, and a tremendous sheet of flame swept along before it, devouring everything in its passage, and the utmost exertions of the firemen aided by steamers and hand engines from several other places, could only succeed in preventing it from spreading in new directions. Many buildings—perhaps fifty—were blown up to check the flames. The inhabitants could scarcely do more than flee with their families to the upper part of the city, saving such goods as they could carry, though every vehicle in the city was employed with excellent effect in moving goods.

The Custom House, being fire proof, escaped, though greatly damaged, and the Court records in the upper story were probably destroyed. The splendid city and county building on Congress street, which was nearly fire proof was considered safe, and it was piled full of furniture by the neighboring residents, and then swept away with all its contents.

Half the city is destroyed, and that half includes nearly all the business portion, except the heavy business houses on Commercial street.

All the banks are gone, all the newspapers, all but three of the printing offices, all the jewelers, all the wholesale dry goods stores, several churches, the telegraph offices, nearly all the stationers and the majority of nearly all the business places.

The fire is still raging below Cumberland street, working back to the westward, the wind having changed.

The conflagration, as may be expected was an incident of the Fourth of July. It commenced in the boat shop on Commercial street, and was caused by a lad firing a cracker among some shavings on the outside of the building, which set them on fire.

It is estimated that about 2000 buildings have been burned, and property destroyed to the amount of $10,000,000 which is probably insured for about one-half. The State valuation of the city was $28,000,000, and the real valuation must be over $30,000,000. Fully one third must have been destroyed.

Notwithstanding the fact that every tent sent here has been pitched and occupied, and every house is crowded to its utmost capacity, the painful fact confronts this community that nearly six thousand of their number are even now without roofs to cover them, making a total of not less than 12,000 persons, a majority of them women and children, who are houseless, homeless wanderers upon the face of the earth, utterly dependent upon the charitable instincts of their fellow-men and the protecting care of an Almighty arm.

Hundreds of strangers are also here from all sections, and it is a fact disgraceful to humanity to narrate in such a moment as this that hundreds of desperadoes are here for the very worst of purposes, the further spoilation of this smitten community. This last is a fact which has become well known by this time to the citizens, and they are making suitable preparations for the reception of these offscourings of society. Armed guards are to be posted to-night at every exposed point and at all places where any raid upon property is apprehended. Gen. Hooker has been requested by telegraph, by the city authorities, to send here a company of soldiers, and has responded in the affirmative. A body of marines are also on their way here from the Navy Yard at Portsmouth, so that if there is to be a contest the villains will meet with a hot reception. The police force of the city are broken down and worn out with herculean toil by day and night, so that they are absolutely unable to cope with any additional scoundrelism. Every resident of the city is jaded with labor, but outside villainy must not calculate too much upon this.

A man giving the name of Charles L. Sanborn, asserting his residence to be Parsonsfield, Maine, and his business an employee of the Grand Trunk Railroad, was arrested last evening on Munjoy Hill by the police, while he was in the act of setting fire to a house in that locality; and he is also charged with attempting to fire two more. His object is supposed to have been plunder—the design evidently being to create a new alarm in that distant section and thus draw away the people from the protection of their homes. He is safely lodged in the jail, together with a large number of other suspicious characters who have been arrested while prowling about the ruins.

Street lamps are urgently needed, the city being now, after nightfall, as dark as a coal cellar, especially under the foliage. The matter cannot be remedied all at once, however.

Baltimore, July 8. The Sun publishes the following account of a rumored revolt in Cuba, which they received specially from Capt. Rollins, of the steamship Cuba, which arrived yesterday from Havana, 4th inst:

A few hours previous to the sailing of the Cuba a citizen of Havana received a letter from Porto Principe, giving the particulars of a revolt in that place. The Cuban officials had not made public any account of the affair, but the statements of the writer of the letter are said to have created intense excitement in Havana. The substance of the letter is to the following effect:

About the 29th ult. information was sent by the civil and military authorities of Porto Principe to the Captain General at Havana, that in that place as well as the neighborhood, a spirit of revolt had been observed for some time past, and treasonable language was used openly in the public places.

The authorities at Havana, however, paid no heed to the warning until news came that a portion of the population had broken out in open revolt and declared for the "independence of Cuba," and "separation from the Spanish Government."

On the 1st inst. a military force, consisting of five companies stationed at Porto Principe, was sent against the insurgents to bring them to order. A fight ensued, in which a Colonel was killed and two or three officers mortally wounded. Three companies of the Spanish soldiers went over to the insurgents. The latter, thus reinforced and numbering now 7000 men, proceeded to the mountain region.

The moment this news was known at Havana three steamers were dispatched with troops to the place of revolt, but before they were fairly on their way, which was on the 3d, the stirring intelligence arrived that four steamers with 200 troops on board had made their appearance near Neuvitas bearing the Chilian flag, and effected a landing in the vicinity. All the discontented thereupon proceeded to the place of rendezvous, and it was believed the revolt had ramifications throughout the whole island.

Among those who left Porto Principe were 1600 negroes, who, it is asserted, were ordered by their owners to join the insurgents. The whole affair was looked upon as a general revolution of the natives to free themselves from Spanish rule.

New York, July 9. The thermometer again reached 90 yesterday. Thirty-three cases of sunstroke are reported, twenty-seven resulting in death.

Universalism.

Having formerly had seven years experience in Universalism, thereby knowing some of its workings, I desire to do what little I can in battling against this great error. I shall be glad to speak on that subject wherever doors may be opened, and, at the same time, circulate that unanswerable argument against Universalism.—"Universalism Exposed from the Inner Temple," now issued in tract form by the Adv. Chr. Pub. Society.

Address W. C. Stone, Crisis Office, Boston.

[illegible]

TUNE.—"Columbia, the gem of the ocean"; or, "Red, white and blue."

Mount Zion! sweet hope of long ages,
 Blest home of the ransomed so free,
A few more of life's fitful pages,
 And we thy bright glory shall see.
Thy bannered choir angels assemble,
 Their praises and tribute to bring;
And they shout till the air seems to tremble—
 Hosannahs to Jesus, their King!

Dark crimes, with their wild desolation,
 Seem threat'ning the world to deform;
Mount Zion!—how firm her foundation—
 Triumphantly rides thro' the storm:
With her garlands of victory around her,
 While pilgrims so joyfully sing,
(As her banner waves brightly before her),
 Hosannah to Jesus, their King!

Ye pilgrims of Zion, come hither,
 And the praises of Jesus we'll hymn;
May no heart in his cause ere wither,
 No eye in his service grow dim.
Oh, city of gems bright and shining,
 Thy praise through creation shall ring;
No death there, no tears, no repining—
 Hosannah to Jesus, our King!

Lone hearts that are throbbing with sorrow,
 And eyes that are weeping sad tears;
Look up! for the dawn of the morrow
 Thro' the night of your mourning appears!
O'er the hill-tops its light now is breaking,
 Where long a dark shadow has been;
There's a voice that the dead will be waking—
 Hosannah! 'Tis Jesus, our King!

See the prophets and martyrs arising,
 From caverns, from ocean and plain,
With our loved ones, once silently sleeping,
 For Jesus can wake them again.
They're coming! We soon shall behold them!
 How the music will peal as we sing—
(As again to our hearts we enfold them)—
 Hosannah to Jesus, our King!

COMITTING SCRIPTURE TO MEMORY.

THE BLESSINGS ATTENDING IT.

NUMBER ONE.

"More precious than rubies, or diamonds, or gold,
Its value is boundless, its price untold;
Let all earth's endearments, if need be, depart,
But my Bible, this treasure, I'll bind to my heart."

1. Committing Scripture to memory strengthens the memory. One special reason why so many forget precious Bible truths, let them slip, is on account of the slight impression they make on the mind and heart. What they hear is like seeds sown by the wayside; the fowls come and devour them up. Whereas by committing Scripture thoroughly and prayerfully, turning it over and over, and meditating thereon, the Holy Spirit brings it home with power to the inmost soul retentively. Passages thus committed sink deep in the heart, fixed indellibly.

2. This method of hiding the word in the heart, by a thorough, careful, prayerful committal, is the surest safeguard from sin. The Psalmist says, "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee."—Ps. 119: 11.

3. This way of hiding the truth of God's word in the heart is not only a preventive from sin, but it likewise leads to entire sanctification, the perfection of holiness. "My son, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee; so that thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding; yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path." Prov. 2: 1, 2, 3, 4, 9. "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you." "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word."

4. This hiding the word in the heart not only strengthens our faith, hope and joyfulness, but it destroys, likewise, a relish for light and trifling reading—novels and romances—sugar-coated poison.

"First fill the bushel with the wheat,
With wisdom—food for souls to eat;
The chaff, the fiction of the day,
Will find no place, and blow away."

The word of God can never be hid in the heart so surely and effectually as by committing it thoroughly to memory.

5. This method of studying the Bible will improve our style of communication, both in writing and in speaking. No style of composition is so sublime and beautiful as the inspiration of God.

6. Ministers of the gospel will receive great benefit in committing Scriptures as here proposed. It will not only enable them to quote readily from the sacred volume, but it will lead also to the choice of texts on which to found their discourses for the public ministration of the word.

7. Parents and teachers will be greatly advantaged by this committal. Indeed, to make a good teacher, either in a public or private capacity, a familiarity with the sacred Scriptures is indispensable.

8. In imparting religious instruction from the pulpit, the editorial chair, in Sabbath schools and Bible classes, in meetings for prayer, conference, and exhortation, in discussing theological subjects at all times and under all circumstances, in administering to the afflicted, the sick and the dying, what a great advantage it is to have appropriate passages of Scripture always at command, flowing spontaneously from our lips. David says, "I have more understanding than all my teachers; for thy testimonies are my meditation."

9. Children should begin early, very early, to commit portions of the Bible, both in the Old and New Testaments. This should be done correctly, precisely, word for word, as recorded by holy inspiration, and with great solemnity, reverence and godly fear. Whenever this Book of books is opened, let it be remembered by old and young, that the Author of it is God, the great I Am, the King of kings and Lord of lords, before whom angels and glorified spirits bow and do homage, saying, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord Almighty, the whole earth is full of his glory." Parents, this fearful responsibility rests upon you. Life or death may turn on the issue. Make this Book of books the text-book for your little ones.

The Bible is full of injunctions to parents on teaching their children the word of God. "Thou shalt teach them to thy children, lying down and rising up, in the house and by the way, line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little."

How important that the parent or teacher remember the injunction, "Search the Scriptures."

"The commandment is a lamp, and the law is a light." Imprint, then, upon the young mind, Bible truths, to be hid in the heart, ready to be applied by the divine Spirit whenever temptation assails.

The lawlessness and crime filling our prisons with victims, and parental hearts with anguish, can only be prevented by securing the allegiance of the human will to the divine commands. The Sabbath desecration, and all the progeny of vices that grow therefrom, the appalling disregard of human life, indicated by the continued developments of the times, would be arrested and banished, were the word of God to do its office upon the conscience. Surely, the wise parent and teacher will impress the mind of the child with Bible truth early and persistently. This is the divine prescription for the special guardianship of sons. See Prov. chap. 6.

Infinite wisdom could devise no better protection for the morals of the young, no better means for the right formation of character, than the early knowledge of his will.

This most important part of education every parent and teacher in a christian land may so control as to be able to say, when his offspring arrive at maturity, from childhood they have known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make them wise unto salvation.

"The Bible! 'tis a book divine,
Where heavenly truth and mercy shine,
And wisdom speaks in every line.
The Bible! in this book alone
We find God's will made known;
And here his love to man is shown."

10. Searching the Scriptures thus will assist greatly in our prayers, fill our mouths with holy arguments drawn from Scripture language, used by holy prophets and apostles, dictated by the spirit of the living God. Whole chapters and whole Psalms may be turned into prayers, supplications and thanksgivings. Persons familiar with the Scriptures, richly imbued with Bible knowledge, by daily committing and treasuring up the heavenly doctrines and precepts of inspiration, are uniformly consistent and happy in their approaches to God.

11. By thus storing the mind and heart richly with the exceeding great and precious promises of God, we easily and speedily bring them to bear in the hour of trial and temptation in every case of emergency and fiery onset of the tempter, the adversary of God and man. The Psalmist said, "Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee." "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." "Wherefore shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word."

12. In cases of blindness, of being shut out forever from all external objects, how unspeakable the blessing to have a fund of God's sacred truths stored in the memory for daily and hourly meditation and self-examination, rising up, lying down, going out and coming in.

13. The same is true of persons in sickness. Confined to beds of languishment, how very comforting, consoling, and strengthening it is to have immediate recourse to the Bible, to the many precious passages previously committed to memory.

14. Again, this committing the word of life should be a daily business. In the morning rising up, seek the earliest opportunity of committing some portion of this precious volume of inspiration; one, two, three, four, six, eight, or ten verses, as time may permit. And if convenient, repeat the same while seated at the breakfast, dinner and supper table, with suitable comments, or as a subject for conversation and spiritual improvement.—These same golden gems may likewise be turned over and over during the business of the day, revolved and re-revolved till the soul is on fire joyfully! Thus you will be able to say, with the sacred penman, "O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day. How sweet are thy words unto my taste! yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth. Through thy precepts I get understanding; therefore I hate every false way."—Ps. 119: 97, 103, 104.

15. Who can calculate the amount of light and glory that may burst upon our ecstatic vision when about to sleep the sleep of death, from being diligent students of the Bible. This treasuring up God's word in our hearts for daily and practical use, will doubtless render our dying moments most tranquil, peaceful and joyous, and also administer an entrance to us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Blessed thought!

Finally, our happiness in a future state, as eternity rolls on, may be greatly enhanced by this careful and prayerful committal of this Book of books, the law and the testimony. Sinner, you have no sure hope in Christ. Do you desire a saving knowledge of the Bible, the word of the living God? Commence immediately the searching of this light that shineth in a dark place, by committing certain parts of it to memory, with earnest prayer to the Father of Lights to enlighten your understanding, that you may "behold wondrous things out of his law," for the Holy Spirit to take of the things that belong to Christ, and to show them unto you. Follow up this committal with continued wrestlings at the throne of grace, till the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts, the hope of glory. God will bless his own word, make it "a lamp to your feet and a light to your path." "My word shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the things whereto I sent it."—Isa. 55: 11. O friends, one and all, begin anew the study of God's word, of treasuring it up in your hearts by way of this daily committal. Be patient in it, persevering, indefatigable; let no moment be lost; redeem the time for this special, all-important, glorious object. This thorough, careful, prayerful, committing the sacred oracles is the most effectual searching "the Scriptures" in accordance with the Savior's command.—John 5: 39. And furthermore, it is the most sure and speedy establishment in the assurance of faith, and the grace of entire sanctification. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." Select the practical parts of the prophets and apostles,—the Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the minor prophets; and above all, choose parts of the New Testament—the life of Jesus, the blessed Savior—the epistles of Paul, Peter, James, and John. It would be well to commit perfectly one of the evangelists—Matthew, Mark, Luke, or John. Then whole Psalms, and whole chapters in the prophets, in Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Thessalonians, Hebrews, Timothy, Peter, James, and John. Besides these general and more extensive committals of God's word, search out the most devout and practical portions of inspiration, the great and precious promises by which we are made partakers of the divine nature, and commit them thoroughly.

"O blessed volume divine,
Let everlasting thanks be thine
For such a bright display,
As makes the world of darkness shine
With beams of heavenly day."

"The words of the Lord are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times; quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Tim. 3: 16, 17.

"How pure the sacred word of truth,
The blessed book to guide our youth;
Given by our Father and our God
To guide to heaven through Jesus' blood.

Here brightest glories meet and shine;
Here mercy smiles in every line;
Here Justice with a frowning face,
Is answered by our Savior's grace.

Happy the soul that reads the page
That guides our youth and cheers our age,
Yea, blessed evermore is he,
O Lord, who learns to come to thee."

For the World's Crisis.

AN IGNORANT DESIGNER.

Being obliged to spend a Sabbath in Rochester, N. Y., and finding no opportunity to preach or hear concerning the kingdom of God, I found my way, by a notice in the paper, into a small school-room, No. 88, Main St., where were gathered about a dozen gentlemen and a lady, engaged in cyphering out Isa. 32: 1,—"Behold a king shall reign in righteousness." Having found this king to be a Jew, and that he would reign over Jews, the next thing to be settled was the kingdom. This was found to be Jerusalem, or the land of Canaan; but quoting some scriptures that rather strained upon the old Canaan landmarks, the following interesting sociable occurred:

Question. If the kingdoms of this world become Christ's, will he not reign over the Gentiles as well as Jews?

Ans. "In a certain sense."

Ques. When he takes to himself his great power and reigns, will he not "destroy those that corrupt the earth?"

Ans. "Yes, as nations, but not as individuals."

Ques. Is not the earth corrupted by sin?

Ans. "Yes."

Ques. Then when corrupters are destroyed, will not all sinners be destroyed?

No rap.

"I wonder how a person should come here with a design to teach such a doctrine as that," says one.

I am not teaching, but inquiring, and you do me wrong in charging me with a design before you know what I believe.

"But," says the third person, "the Greek word gee, for earth, means more than the earth; it means habitable globe."

How, then, do you understand Peter, when he says the kosmos that then was, and the gee that now is? (Out comes the Greek Testament.)

"No, it is the gee that then was."

I think not.

Third person,—"He is right; it is the kosmos that then was, and the gee that now is."

Very well. If the kosmos being overflowed with water caused the destruction of the inhabitants of the world, will the burning of the gee by fire be more favorable to the ungodly in the day of perdition, than the waters of Noah?

No rap.

Again, when Joshua came into the typical Canaan, he was commanded to make no league with the inhabitants of the land; will the antitypical Joshua make any league with the inhabitants of earth, when he rules with a rod of iron, and dashes to pieces as a potter's vessel?

Third person. "No man, unless he was ignorant of the Scriptures, would ever ask such questions as those."

And so I have fallen into the condition of the poor blind man among the Jews: "Thou wast altogether born in sin (ignorance), and dost thou teach us? and they cast him out." I have been branded with a design to bring in an unwelcome doctrine, and with ignorance, simply by asking questions which you invited me to do; and now I must go to watch over an afflicted daughter, and weep over the desolations of Zion in Rochester. H. PRATT.

P. S.—There is a fair chance, apparently, for my daughter to recover, though with months of suffering and wearisomeness. H. P.

BIBLE PRECEPTS.

A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John 13: 34, 35.

"God standeth in the congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among the gods. How long will ye judge unjustly, and accept the persons of the wicked? Defend the poor and fatherless; do justice to the afflicted and needy. Deliver the poor and needy; rid them them out of the hand of the wicked."—Ps. 82: 1-4. "They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless. Yet they say, The Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it."—Ps. 94: 6-7. "He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight."—Ps. 101: 7. "Whoso mocketh the poor reproacheth his Maker; and he that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished."—Prov. 17: 5. "Cursed be he that removeth his neighbor's landmark; and all the people shall say, Amen."—Deut. 27: 19. "The poor is hated even of his own neighbor; but the rich hath many friends. He that despiseth his neighbor, sinneth; but he that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he." Prov. 14: 20, 21. "Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is separated from his neighbor. A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall not escape."—Prov. 19: 4, 5. "He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."—Prov. 19: 17. "What mean ye that ye beat my people to pieces, and grind the face of the poor? saith the Lord God of hosts."—Isa. 3: 15.

WHAT SHALL I CARRY TO CAMP-MEETING?

If you desire to do good, and be edified, blest, and strengthened, carry patience with you. And if you hear any praying in the night, when you are anxious to sleep, don't fret about it, but join heartily with those who are praying. Campmeeting week is a "week of prayer"; and from the camp-ground prayers are constantly ascending, both by day and by night. And some get so happy that they are praising the Lord like Paul and Silas in the night season. And if you are kept awake a little while by the voice of praise, don't fret about that; but be patient, and "rejoice with them that do rejoice."

And do not go determined to force all your peculiar views upon every person you meet. Don't carry your "hobbies" there. If you speak in meeting, do not bring out "strong doctrinal points," which you know must give offence to some, while they may not benefit any. Bear in mind that all classes and denominations of christians are represented at campmeeting; and give to all the same liberty of private judgment that you claim for yourself. "And the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle to all men, apt to teach, patient."

Carry your Bible with you. If you ever worked at chopping in the woods, perhaps you remember how good your dinner tasted as you sat upon a log to eat it. You will find milk and honey there, in passages which never interested you before. The Spirit of the Lord will be there in power; and if you leave all your cares at home, and give yourself up entirely to his service, you may hope and expect to learn a great deal about the Bible while on the "mount." As our campmeetings are usually conducted, there is no place on earth so near the courts of heaven; and we may well say, "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand."

Go there expecting to meet your Savior. Go in meekness and humility; sit at his feet and learn of him. Get your lamp "trimmed and burning" before you start. Let your heart be filled with love to all men; especially to them who are of the "household of faith." May the Lord help us all to be in our place, and do just what he requires of us. I hope to be there (at Wilbraham), and expect the best time I ever yet experienced. Pray for me, that I may not be disappointed. I want to have my companion go with me; and I ask you to pray for her, that she may be greatly blest. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

NAPOLEON'S THOUGHTS AND PLANS.

(Concluded.)

But soft. Where is my map, the map of all the world? I conquer one republic, and by that same cry—Liberty—I'll conquer all the governments on earth, at least upon this continent of ours.

Where is the land wherein our principles have not unheeded worked, and are not working. The old monarchic governments are doting; everywhere the peoples, suffering under priestcraft, writhe for liberty. These governments have allied themselves with priests, they form concordats; but having used the priests, I'll reign supreme without them. Force and success shall sanctify my rule; and, as the man of peoples, I'll strive for universal rule. What country is not weak while I am strong? Prussia has her Poles, her subdivided councils; Austria her Hungarians; Turkey her Greeks, her Egypt; Italy, ah, Italy! imperial Italy! she has her Pope, and all his cardinals, and all the lazy, earth-consuming tribes, which find their haunts mid cells and monasteries.

Is there not here an empire worth my rule? Imperium in imperio is there now mid all these old priest-ridden monarchies. But I will gather to myself, mid all those elements of empire and of sway which shall at last o'er all predominate.

Who knows what may be at some future time? If revolution rises in one place—the very soil we tread on is volcanic—'twill in another; and, of all places chief, in Italy. Ah, then I will protect my friend the Pope; I'll send him troops to hold his capital—but only for himself. But being there at Rome, the seat of empire, there I'll stay. 'Tis easy to find reasons when one has power, and if none appear self-evident, why, then, I will create them. Liberty first, non-intervention second, confederacy last, shall be my watchword and my principles. Having the power, I will but intervene where hitches may occur in carrying out, and only then on colorable pretexts. Evermore still keeping up the cry—non-intervention, liberty of the peoples. Thus I'll form a chain around all else till ready to my hand there shall be formed a vast confederacy, whose links shall be each one a long oppressed nationality, and to them all I'll come their noble, grand deliverer!

'Tis but to lift the finger from a stop and revolution will begin to sound, and then that venerable man, the Pope, must be protected still; and so I'll linger on and gain a stealthy growth while other projects ripen to my hand.

But, nought too soon; no—that would peril all. The Emperor, mine uncle, wont to say, "wait till the pear is ripe;" and kings shall ripe and ripe, and rot and rot before the rising up of revolution. But when the harvest comes, I'll rule the winds and ride upon the whirlwind, gathering all beneath my potent, earth-compelling rule.

What matters it that I profess to serve the Pope, and cause my officers to seem to serve him too, while all men feel our spreading principles? Their presence is sufficient taking time to pull down all the Papal power and rule. And now, meanwhile, I deal with Austria.

She also holds a stake in Italy by priestcraft and by force; but Piedmont is her natural enemy, and in due time, all other things conspiring, I'll stir up Piedmont—war for an idea; uphold the threatened rights of Northern Italy, and make a vow to free all Italy from the Alps to the Adriatic. All, all Italy, seeking nothing for myself but to be deemed the friend of freedom.

Now Austria is but dull and all effete; her soldiers mere machines; while mine are taught all self-reliance, marching close or loose, fighting in rank or rushing loosely on, and we will beat them, and having done so, then I'll round off France, seize Nice and Savoy, amid clouds of reports, and using universal suffrage. A very easy thing, indeed, to do, when abstract power is once acquired; beside, that is the source from whence I rose; so all things work consistent as a whole, and to one end—my self-aggrandizement.

But all this while it must not be forgot there's England and there's Russia to be met. What would they say to my Italian views? and they are friendly to each other too, and both are powerful!

Where can I find some ground of contention to cause a separation and win Russia to my side?

There's the far East, where my great uncle strove to raise an empire! And in Jerusalem—French, English, Russian, Greek, are met, having their holy places. That's the chief spot where opes the door of hope, and there I'll strive for power, and see if Russia cannot be provoked, by my gaining the supremacy over the holy places, to break into a war with Turkey.

Turkey is as a dying man; some must ere long divide his spoils, and Russia has for years been looking towards Constantinople, and will only too readily be moved to quarrel and rush in.

I'll plan it so; for England, I can see, will then come forward, fearing the equilibrium may be disturbed, and this will bring her first to aid the Turk, and then I will come last; and aiding to put down Russia, so aiding Turkey, I will make peace mid all when Russia is in peril; so winning honor, winning Russia too, at least as far as England is concerned; beside the gain that will accrue from weakening Russia; so that course is fixed.

By peace I'll win my way; by war when absolutely needed, but still more by peace. Suddenly formed; interrupting all calculations of allies; putting all things into confusion, mystery, uncertainty; of which, by acting thus when having power, I'll hold the key.

A good idea! to be repeated, too, repeatedly!

This making peace leaves him who makes it at his chosen time still master of the situation. But mind this: still must there be an overwhelming force to give me power even to make peace; so to create that peace, and then to use it.

Nothing like strong battalions, numerous ships, a well provided commissariat; arsenals formed and filled; harbors repaired; new formed; railroads abundant and concentrated; factories of arms widely distributed, the better to escape notice; sailors and soldiers trained and dismissed, but ready for recall; all points of detail thoroughly dwelt on and carried through. While others sleep, and sleep for long they shall, wide awake, and they shall only rise to see me take the lead.

And now, the better to beguile the time, when all these things are put in ample train, there shall be feasts and balls and festivals, huntings and travels, hospitalities. Friends will I make of other potentates—personal friends as far as possible, and so the less my views will be suspected.

I will not show too bright nor yet too humble, but only as befits a rising man—a man who waits on others in some sort, and rather seeks to please them than to govern.

Ah! 'twill be long, eleven years at least, before my greater hopes can draw ahead; but patience, and work on. A time will come when all things shall be ripe. Russia allied with me, and England too—ah, how I'll laugh at each within my sleeve! Austria humbled; Spain gained by flatteries and show of power; Sardinia won, perhaps all Italy; Egypt seduced in secret to my views; Hungary ready to burst out in flames; Poland all ripe for insurrection; Algeria and Tunisia gained to me; the slaves of Russia ripening for revolt, —still all shall slumber and shall smoulder on, while to the East I turn my further views, proposing there to raise an empire and restore the Jews, and take at least half Turkey to myself.

For this end emissaries must prepare a cause of interference. The Jesuits will be useful; our Christians must be protected and encouraged, their local quarrels seen to and promoted, kept smouldering, so that at some given time some outbreak may occur to bring down all the fury of the Turk, and then I come as their deliverer.

Thus I'll deliver all, putting them first in tribulation, that I may seem to all their great deliverer. And then, I'll cause the Jews to be restored. But this, like all my plans, must be must secret; for in due time the Jews shall hail me Savior—their Messiah!

I said things must be secret—that's my plan. There's nothing spoils a grand conception so much as telling to another; it brings in confusion—spoils the unity; and it is better far to make some petty errors in performance, than by admitting and seeking to dovetail others' views to disturb the regular lines of thought. The mastery of a secret is itself a source of power. Men dread him whom they cannot fathom. And when I have gained power mystery shall aid it. Therefore I'll give no sign one moment sooner than I well can help of what I am about. I'll do the deeds; and facts accomplished can always be borne out, if not justified, where there is power; and if none can arraign me, and I am before them with facts, why then a little extra gaiety, excitement, wonders for nine days, will fill men's minds, and time will cover all.

I'll make things pleasant; that is what men like. All shall be gilded, softened by applause, a speech, profession, compliment; 'twill cost me nothing, and it pleases them; and novelty will still distract the changeful crowd. Well, then, I'll manage above all to be allied with England. She has respect and weight throughout the world; her character will give me weight, and I will use it as long and as far as ever it can be used; and clearly it can be so for some few years, while I am gathering strength. Amid professions of the utmost liberality, I'll gag the press and turn it to my use; and while I will allow no speech against me, I will permit and encourage all that can favor my views, and in due time I'll take a step in policy which never yet was used.

I note that novelties are stunning—causing sensation—are apt to rouse direct immediate counteraction; therefore I'll do what men can scarce expect, and with a seeming openness; I, and not yet I, but writers in my pay (so can I easily deny them,) will put forth future plans beforehand.

Here, well discerned, a pamphleteering system answers my view in two ways. For first, I will abate the edge of novelty, and then I'll gather what men think and say, and through that knowledge I will gain power to amend, and then get forth and act, and men shall surely feel—Why, this is nothing new—we knew it all before!

And so especially I'll win my way, times out of number!

Another plan I have too op my mind. When actual deeds shall speak to England and alarm her fears, I'll make commercial treaties with her merchants, and she shall think self-interest alone will tie my hands, for well she loveth gain. And with commercial views, old Babylon shall rise, and commerce shall commence her olden course upon the great Euphrates; thus I'll creep towards India. Meanwhile for Russia I will lay my bait; she shall go halves at first within the earth; the East I'll proffer to her eager arms, so shall she stand my friend; but once the West is mine, then soon the civilized West shall conquer all the uncivilized East.

And as for England!—ah! last of all, the time shall come to crush that little isle.

When all the world is nearly in my hands, I'll bring it all to bear against Great Britain. She is all scattered—I concentrated. Everywhere her commerce shall be attacked, her colonies invaded, her seaports stormed. Electric wires shall flash my orders at a given moment, rise in all climes, and crush Great Britain. She shall go down, and I will reign supreme; supreme throughout the world. Builder and architect of my own fortune! Happier than Napoleon's son, and greater; greater than he himself. I will transcend his glory. Never name shall be like my name. The image of all glory shall be my image. I, that great reality, like unto God, my power universal—But soft—I dream—I am but captive now!

Well, well, all's one for that. I'll let time shape; and there—an end. Now to my studies!

Thus he sat him down. He knew not it is writ:

"This matter is by a decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones; to the intent that the living may know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men!"

"OBEY YOUR PARENTS."

"Children, obey your parents in all things; for this is well pleasing unto the Lord."—Col. 3: 20.

Do you wish to please the Lord? We imagine we hear a thousand voices say, "Yes, sir." We may expect a great reward from Jesus when he comes, if he is pleased with us.

But will he be pleased with children who disobey their parents? Does any one answer "yes" to this last question? All can see that when we try to please the Lord by obeying our parents, we are giving comfort to father and mother also; for it grieves them when their children will not obey them.

The reason children are required to obey, is because their parents have had the most experience in the world, and know what is best, better than the young. Our parents are anxious to have us keep out of wickedness; and they know the snares of Satan better than we do. Yet perhaps the place where we are most anxious to go is the very one where the Lord does not wish us to be seen, neither do our parents; and because they love us, they request us to stay away. It may seem hard to us at the time; but when we obey cheerfully we feel much better afterwards.

Again, we may desire something that we do not need, or which our parents are not able to get. In such a case, try to be contented, and think how many there are suffering for want of things that you enjoy.

We have sometimes heard children fret at their parents because they could not have such things as they wanted. Such children are not happy, because the Lord is not pleased with them; for no one can be truly happy who does not try to please the Lord. When your parents ask you to do any thing, never wait to be told the second time, but do it at the time they wish it done; and do it without fretting. You will feel much better to do so, comfort your parents, and please the Lord. If you wish to be ready to meet Jesus when he comes, be obedient and kind to your parents.

A FRAGMENT FOR THE YOUNG.

MR. EDITOR:—I was much pleased with the contents of the "Children's Corner," so neatly and tastefully arranged in the Crisis of June 27th, and in the next issue would like to tell the children what an old gentleman, who lived to be ninety-four years of age, had to say regarding health, and how to preserve it.

"A good while ago," said he, "I read in one of the newspapers of the day that a man had died at the advanced age of one hundred years; that he had never been ill, and had maintained through life a cheerful, happy temperament. I wrote immediately to the place where he died, begging to know if there had been any peculiarity in the treatment of himself which had rendered his life so happy; and the answer was as follows:—

'He was uniformly kind and obliging to everybody; he quarrelled with no one; he ate and drank merely that he might not suffer from hunger or thirst, and never beyond what necessity required; from his earliest youth he never allowed himself to be unemployed; drank neither coffee or tea; never used tobacco in any form.'

"I took a note of this in a little book, where I wrote all I was anxious to remember; and very soon afterwards I read in another paper of a woman who died at the age of one hundred and two years,—that she had never been ill, and always of a happy, contented disposition. I wrote to learn what means this woman had used for preserving her health to such an advanced age, and this was the answer:—

'She was a great lover of cleanliness, and was in the daily habit of bathing herself in water; never ate sweetmeats; drank neither coffee, tea, or wine; exercised daily in the open air; was early to bed, and early to rise.'

"Of this likewise I took a note in my little book. Some time after I read the death of a man who had enjoyed good health till he was one hundred and four years of age. Again I wrote, and this was the answer:—

'He was an early riser; never slept over seven hours; never was idle; worked chiefly in the open air; never permitted himself to sit or walk in a bent posture; did not use tobacco; drank neither coffee, tea, or wine.'

"After having read all this in my little book, I said to myself, 'You will be a foolish man indeed not to profit by the example and experience of these aged people.' I then wrote out upon a large card all I had been able to discover about these happy people, and suspended it over my writing-desk, so that I might have it always before my eyes, to remind me what I ought to do, and from what I should refrain. I conformed to its rules, and was much happier and in better health for it. In former times a walk of half an hour's length fatigued me; now I can walk miles without weariness. Imagine, then, the happiness I experience, for there are few feelings so cheering to the spirit as those of constant good health and vigor.

"But, alas! there is one thing in which I cannot imitate these happy people, and that is, that I have not been accustomed to all this from my youth."

Little children who read this, you are the fortunate ones who are able to adopt to perfection this kind of life, and live happily and usefully; then you will have nothing to regret in after years, as did my poor old grandfather. AUNT SARAH.

THE ROYAL KNIGHT.

BY M. D. W.

Quite different were the surroundings of the present subject of our pen from that of the poor plow-boy of Lincoln; and as we sketch briefly the history of Loyola, the royal knight, we shall see as great a contrast in his life-work, and its results. But I must first tell you what a knight is, for as this is a title not belonging to any one in our country, you may not all understand its meaning.

Among warlike people in the old countries, the title of knight was bestowed upon certain young men who belonged to the royal army, as a token of honor; it was a degree of rank, as General or Lieutenant is now in the United States army. We called this a royal knight, because he was trained up in the court of Ferdinand and Isabella of Spain, that same king and queen who sent out Columbus in search of a new continent.

This knight had been wounded in the great Castle of Pampeluna. As he lay upon his couch, he sought to while away the weary hours by perusing romances, and among them one day he found a Spanish legend of saints. This legend was a narration of the wonderful things said to have been done by very devout saints.

Now Loyola, though trained up in the royal court, is said to have been illiterate, and being of a visionary turn of mind, he drank in the strange stories he read, and resolved that he, too, would become a saint, and perform many wonderful things. He chose the Virgin Mary for his friend and protector, and vowed to be from henceforth her faithful knight.

I will tell you here that this Loyola was cotemporary with Luther, that is, he lived in the time of Luther, and was only eight years younger. But very great was the contrast between the two. Luther devoted himself to the defence of the gospel; he chose for his patron the Lord Jesus Christ, and vowed eternal allegiance to his cause. Loyola chose the mother of Christ for his patron, and devoted himself to the promotion of that religion which is associated with the worship of the Virgin Mary.

After spending a year among the poor in a hospital, he next sought the blessing of the Pope, and then set forth on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, with the same end in view. He went to Rome, and there held counsel with the leaders of the Catholic Church respecting a plan to restore to it a portion, at least, of its lost splendor.

At first only seven persons could be induced to rally around him; but their zeal and enthusiasm were so great that, as they traveled the country, they kindled a corresponding blaze in the hearts of many others, and their numbers rapidly increased.

Loyola regarded himself as an especial favorite of heaven, and divinely inspired. He had looked upon that holy Virgin face to face, and words of love had passed between them. Her son Jesus had also appeared to him. He had seen the sacred emblems of bread and wine changed into the actual body and blood of Christ. These things he boldly professed, and his deluded followers believed them true, and obeyed him in every thing. He divided different regions into various provinces, and appointed over each a ruler. This officer exercised absolute power over all under him, as fully as Loyola did over all. Every month there must be a return made to him of all that was going on, or contemplated, in these several provinces; and every three months these returns must be submitted to the General. Every member of this fraternity was known and watched, and if they disobeyed, or revealed any secret, they were dreadfully punished.

I have now, my young readers, given you a brief sketch of the history of Ignatius Loyola, the founder of the Jesuits, a secret order belonging to the Catholic Church, which has labored extensively, secretly and zealously, to bring back wanderers from the church again into its fold, and to convert others to their faith. Your parents can tell you more about this matter, if you desire to know.

Whose example, think you, is the most worthy of imitation—John Hunt's, the plow-boy, or Loyola's, the royal knight?

"THROW, BOYS, THROW!"

A good many years ago, in a town in England, one Sunday evening, three noisy and wicked boys filled their pockets with stones, and straggled into a meeting. Their intention was to insult and annoy the old man who was preaching, and they accordingly seated themselves at a convenient distance in the back of the meeting-house.

They had not been there long before one of them impatiently whispered,—

"What's the need of listening any longer to the blockhead? let's throw!"

"No; wait a minute and see what he makes of this point," replied his companion.

But his curiosity was soon satisfied, and he too exclaimed,—

"Confound him! it's just as I expected! throw, boys, throw!"

"Suppose we should give up this plan altogether," now spoke up the third.

"You're a fool!" said the two angrily. And they hastily left the church in a rage, while he remained and heard the preacher through.

Fifteen years passed away, and there was a notice given out that a celebrated preacher from abroad would speak in that same house on Sunday. A large congregation had gathered to hear him. The minister rose in the pulpit; but before he commenced speaking he paused, and leaned his head on the cushion, and was silent some minutes. The people thought he was sick. But he raised his head and said:—

"It is just fifteen years since I was in this house before. That night three young lads came into the meeting to throw stones at the preacher. Two of them went out, and the other remained. Now I want to tell you what the fate of those boys was. The first was hanged some years ago for a dreadful crime. The second is now in jail, sentenced to death for murder. And the third, my friends, the third—is he who is to address you now. Will you listen to him?"

It is a fearful thing to go on in sin. God will surely punish us sooner or later. No matter how much we may at first seem to prosper in wicked ways, the time will come when we shall be bitterly sorry for our evil doings. There is no place on the earth that the sinner can hide himself from the displeasure of the Lord. But his mercy is from everlasting to everlasting, to them that fear him and keep his commandments. Let us do right, and claim his blessing now, and share his glory at last. E. A. A.

TWO WAYS.

I know a boy who, when his little sister runs up to see what he is doing, and he does not want her so near, says, "Please, sissy, go away now; go, sissy, please." Is not that better than to cry, "Get out!" as some boys do, and perhaps make it rougher with a kick?

I know a little boy who, when he comes home hungry from school, runs into the kitchen and says, "Biddy, if you are not too busy, will you be kind enough to give me a cookie, or spread me a slice of bread and butter?" Biddy is happy to leave her work and oblige a boy who speaks so. Is it not more polite than to rush in and cry out "Give me something to eat, quick!"

I know a little boy who says, "Mother, if you are willing, I should like to go to Eddie Brown's candy pull to-night." And I know another who said, "I am going to Eddie Brown's, whether or no." Which way of speaking becomes a little boy best?—Chris. Adv.

HAPPY BIRD-HOMES.

A little boy once saw two nestling birds pecking at each other, and he asked his brother what they were doing.

"They are quarrelling," was the answer.

"O no, that cannot be," said the boy, "for they are brothers!"

What a happy life you might lead, if the little boy's thought of the birds could be a picture of your homes. How many happy bird-homes there might be, if brothers would not quarrel.

THE OLD PATHS.

Where are the paths our fathers trod,
Like men of courage bold?
They lived by faith and walked with God,
As Enoch did of old.
As priests to God, like Aaron, they
Were called from above,
To cry to men without delay
God's messages of love.

Ah! wo is me, they each could say,
If I refuse the call;
I freely give myself away
To him who died for all.
My home is sweet, my friends are dear,
With them I fain would dwell;
But dearer still do souls appear,
So home and friends, farewell.

Silver nor gold e'er called them forth,
Nor stopped them on their way,
They preached to men Christ's precious truth,
And looked to him for pay.
The love of Christ, a mighty chord,
Constrained them night and day
To cry, "Behold the Lamb of God,"
That taketh sins away.

They had no creeds to yoke the meek,
Nor notes to preach by rule;
They did not stop to study Greek,
Nor go to priestly schools;
They learnt the gospel from their King,
And ran where they were sent;
Trusting in God for every thing,
Like flames of fire they went.

O'er hills and dales, through storm and calm,
They ranged the country through,
Fearing that naught could do them harm,
If they were good and true;
They preached to men in sin enthralled,
To flee from death and woe;
God gave the sign that they were called,
Wherever they did go.

They saw the power of God displayed,
And hundreds bowed their knee;
They were opposed, but not dismayed,
But fought for liberty.
No high nor low was in their ranks,
But all of one degree;
E'er praising God and giving thanks
For love and unity.

CHURCH, OR ANARCHY?

NUMBER TWO.

Christians sustain a two-fold relation, first, to God; second, to each other; and both are necessary to constitute a christian. The second point has not always been noticed. It is considered that christians are simply those who love God; but God's commandment just referred to is proof that one is as essential as the other, and God makes one culpably guilty of falsehood, who says he loves God and hates his brother. If one would have an understanding with God, so that he can "assure" his heart before him, he must be right with his brother; i. e., be on terms of full, hearty, acknowledged christian fellowship.

But how is the fellowship to be acknowledged? Not by getting up in meeting and saying so, and letting that pass as the acknowledgment, for it must be recognized, as well as acknowledged, by the person who makes the confession of fellowship. In other words, the "full fellowship" is a complete, mutual affair. We will illustrate it. Here is a place where there are a number of professed believers in Christ. They have never had what we are contending for; viz., "church order," "full fellowship." Some have left the different sectarian churches because they could not remain there and preach the truth as to the coming of Jesus, and life through him; others have been converted from the world, and hold this faith; others, perhaps, do not fully hold it, but want to be free from sectarianism. They say they do not believe in "churches"; that they have come out of Babylon. But what is their state? Some fellowship, and some anarchy. Perhaps we can best state their condition by this formula:

We have A., B., C., D., E., F., G., H., I., J., with others. Now if we can find any fellowship there at all, it is so much toward our "church"; and if there is any want of fellowship, it is wrong, and will be acknowledged by all conscientious christians. What we wish to do is to bring them up where they should be, and then the "church" we are describing will be seen, and its characteristics understood. We will suppose that all these persons propose to come out clearly and definitely to the position we advise them to take. They meet together for that purpose. We have heard that there has not been, up to this time, a full fellowship. That old "stumbling-block," "Something's in the way," is among them. But they meet, and we request all who desire for themselves the position of full christian fellowship to stand on their feet. All do so; and we inquire of each by name whether he fellowships each and all the others? and whether they individually fellowship in return? We find that A. fellowships B., C. and D.; B. fellowships E., F. and G., but does not fellowship C. and D., though he does A.; C. does not fellowship E., and E. does not fellowship C., but does the others. There is trouble here certainly. They are not where they should be, that is evident. They have not got out of Babylon yet, for their favorite word, that has kept them so long where they are, means anarchy and confusion. They have come into Babylon, and now we ask them to "come out of Babylon" into "full christian fellowship." They agree to make christian character the only test of fellowship; and all the evils are removed, and each is fellowshiped by all and fellowships all. Mr. Objector, have you after all any objections to these brethren and sisters being free from the evils that have stumbled, tried and hindered them, and kept them apart so long? This is our church, in earliest history. Paul went about establishing churches, and we may safely follow in his steps, and reconcile those who were afar off from each other.

What a lamentable state of things exists when men and women, who profess to love God, and to believe in the near coming of Jesus, cannot fellowship each other; or when one, who does not give good evidence of being the Lord's, can go among them, talk in meeting, and perhaps gain the sympathy of some undeservingly, and there be no means to remedy the evil; no protection to those who are really trying to live as they should.

It is as really absurd to think of a number meeting in one place, professing to worship God together, and yet not fully acknowledging each other. It is a species of anarchy. There must be an understanding sufficient to agree as to the place of meeting; but why shrink back from the perfect agreement and full understanding as to confidence in each other? Then the many are one body in Christ, and every one a member of the others; otherwise it is not so. A number of professed christians in a place is not a church, just simply because there is a number. Broken fragments do not make a whole dish, neither do the different organs of the human bodies, separated and scattered about, make a living human organism. Read 1 Cor. 12, and it will be seen that our position is a correct one. "The body is one," says the apostle, not one member, but many; and he further teaches us that God hath set the members every one of them in the body, so as to make one complete whole. Now, although they are baptized into this body by the one Spirit of God, without which baptism there can be no true christian union; yet is evident from such exhortations of the apostle as, "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit" (Eph. 4: 3), that the individuals themselves have something to do about getting into the body, and keeping in it, as they certainly do in keeping out of it, or getting out when there is a body recognized. We certainly need something more than a lot of men and women professing religion, many of whom have perhaps no confidence in each other, to advance the cause of truth in the world. They should first convince the world that christians love instead of hate one another.

The story of the old gentleman and his sons illustrates this point well. The sons were quarreling and disagreeing constantly. The old gentleman called them to him and gave each a single stick to break. They did it with ease. He then took a bundle of sticks, on which he invited each to test his strength, but none could break the sticks when bound together. The father then reminded them that each separately would fail, but bound in one bundle of love and mutual agreement, they could resist opposing influences, each by the assistance of the other doing more than he could alone. So by a covenant together, christians can do more than they can alone, for they are then bound together in one bundle of love. O for the spirit of love to melt us into one.

There are many brethren and sisters in some places, who feel that there is something necessary to bring them into a better position than they are in, but how to get there is the question. They see that our company of A., B., C., D., and others are united, and they feel perhaps afraid to take the position, lest they be like the churches. They see the evils in which they are involved. They are grieved at the instances of dis-fellowship and schisms among those who should be all united, and must be to be saved; and they do not really know what to do. They are almost, or quite discouraged. Now we are prepared to say honestly before God, that there is no other way to remedy the evils than to come to the position of testing the fellowship, as those of our company above mentioned have done.

We have only incidentally glanced at a few of the evils existing where there is not full fellowship. We have not brought out the differences that existed between B., C., D., and E., and others. They are too lamentable to detail. The misunderstandings, unacknowledged wrongs, from obstinacy or otherwise; the standing aloof from the responsibility of being amenable to any one, and yet getting into the meetings and taking a part with others without fellowshiping half of them, or staying away, and so showing clearly that they are not of Christ, because not of the body; the backbitings, the evil surmisings, and talking about the conjectured or real faults of others generally, and without going first and telling the man his faults between two individuals alone, or by careful inquiries learning first whether the alleged fault had been really committed; are all common occurrences where there is no full fellowship; but where there is, they can not be found at all.

Jesus has given a rule in Matt. 18: 15–18, but there is no rule for those who have no agreement together, so that a man cannot go to another with authority, simply because he has claimed to be a christian. He may be all full of wrong. It may be an every day affair for him to get out of the way,—more likely than otherwise he keeps out all the time; and if that is the case, all your talk will be of no avail. You have no control over him, or he over you; and he may retort to you, "Physician, heal yourself; I never had any confidence in you; why do you come to me? Look after yourself first."

BE YEADY.

"Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

Readiness for life, its labors, its crosses, its temptations, its disappointments, its perils, its thousand and one deceptions, and sufferings, is a great thought, worthy of a serious and timely consideration. But readiness for the coming of the Son of man, the resurrection of the dead, the judgment of the great day, the reward of redemption and glory, is a thought that far surpasses in interest the thought that goes before; and no person should, for a single moment, or for any earthly interest, neglect a full and satisfactory preparation for these stupendous events. Delays now are fraught with incalculable danger, and whoever procrastinates renders himself a subject of God's displeasure and the cutting rebuke, "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."

I wonder at times with amazement, while my spirit is oppressed beyond measure, to witness the multitudes of religionists who are so utterly regardless of any manifest interest in these things. It is truly lamentable, and very much to be regretted by all who have the truth and cause of God really interwoven into their affections. Let any warm-hearted, zealous brother or sister, bearing the indelible marks of Christ, truth, and a spotless christianity, arise in any congregation outside of the church of Christ looking for his kingdom, and speak to them the word of God concerning Christ's appearing, and the heaven-ordained message so sweet, so cheering, so encouraging, so glorious, so full of interest, beauty, sublimity, and crowning glory, and his words fall on the ears of the major part with so little interest that they do not produce an Amen, praise the Lord, hallelujah, or response of any kind. Attend their prayer, social, and other religious gatherings, and their prayers, exhortations, songs, and sermons contain no aspiration that breathes forth with ardency of soul, "Come, Lord Jesus," and "Come quickly."

Read, whenever you will, their religious organs that come from week to week teaming with intelligence of one kind or another, but in all of them, notwithstanding the overflowing goodness and eternal glory of the doctrine of the second advent of Christ, our divine Savior, it finds no entrance there. The compositors set no types that stamp that consolation upon the soul of the almost wearied christian mariner, bound for that better land. Why, O why such an awful neglect and sacrifice of truth, so fully, ably, and faithfully presented in the Scriptures of truth? Is there an answer? Who can solve the problem? Professed believers in the divine revelation, have you no interest in so soul-cheering a theme?

Dr. Adam Clarke states one important truth touching this point, when commenting on 1 Cor. 15th chap. He says:—

"One remark I cannot help making: the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive christians than it is now. How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness throught it. And their successors in the present day seldom mention it! So apostles preached; and so primitive christians believed; and so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid; and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect."

The foregoing language speaks volumes, and who can read it without seeing that the professed people of God have widely departed from the original faith, hope, and practice of the primitive church. What has wrought this mighty change? such a great revolution?

All the family named in heaven and on earth must shed tears of sorrow over this sad departure from the word of God. Instead of the religious world looking for the second advent of the Son of God, the resurrection of the dead, judgment and restitution of all things, spoken of by the prophets for the restoration of their immortal joys, they are looking for death to crown them with these honors. O what a departure from the faith once delivered to the saints!

The more this great error is taught, the more rapidly the church and world degenerates; and, consequently, the more disqualified they are for the coming of Jesus. But I thank God from the deepest recesses of my soul, that the spirit of the Lord has raised up a standard against that cunningly devised fable, in these last days; and many are flocking to its support, and to the one gospel hope, viz., the coming of Christ to reward his people with honor, glory, immortality, and eternal life, in this earth restored to its primeval state.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, enjoying the one common faith, let us be diligent in so good a cause. Let us live for the "pearl of great price" by the hour. Suffer no worldly scheme, or sectarian charm, to neutralize your zeal, devotion, and watchfulness. Remember these are extremely perilous times, and growing more so every day. The times are very ominous indeed. Awful events are hanging over the whole earth. Like Belshazzar, the world is trembling, while wave after wave of perplexity and distress rolls over the nations. O, my Savior and my God, prepare us for the impending scenes of judgment, and for the rest that remains for the people of God. Be ready, then, with your whole armor on. You know not the hour when he cometh, whether at even, midnight, cock-crowing, or in the morning. You know not where you will be; whether in your bed, field, mill, at home, or abroad; out of church or in; upon your knees in importunate prayer, praying, "Come, Lord Jesus," and "Come quickly," "lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping;" therefore, "what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." Be ready.

My spirit sometimes becomes restless, and I feel I must leave all and go and warn the world; "But if any provide not for his own . . . house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." So I tarry and labor in a limited capacity. Yours hoping for a crown when Jesus comes,

THE GOODNESS OF GOD.

The goodness of God is an inexhaustible theme. No language is adequate to describe his goodness; but, feeling as I do now,—filled with love to God and love to man,—I shall endeavor to lay his goodness before you as far as God shall give me grace; hoping it may stir up some careless mind to love God and serve him, which is our most reasonable duty. Wherever we turn our eyes, we discover numerous tokens of the kindness and mercy of our heavenly Father, in supplying our wants, and in administering to our comforts. He openeth his hand and satisfieth the wants of every living thing. His providence, although extending over all worlds and living objects, is so minute as to number the very hairs of our heads. In all conditions, and in every circumstance of life, we are the objects of his care, his Fatherly protection. He it is who spreads out before us the variegated carpet of nature, to beautify the earth and gladden the hearts of the children of men. He it is who kindly supplies our morning, noon, and evening repast; who supplies the wonted repose that nature demands, and kindly draws over us the banner of love, to shield us from all harm. He it is who, when our Father and mother forsake us, takes us up and cherishes us with greater care than earthly parents ever can. Yes, when heart and flesh shall fail us, then will the Lord our God, in due time,—at the resurrection,—receive his faithful children to that abode, where they can bask in eternal sunshine at his right hand; where there will be fullness of joy and pleasure evermore.

But how lamentable it is, notwithstanding all that God has done for our comfort and happiness, man, by reason of sin and transgression, has fallen far below these enjoyments and blessings that God has so kindly set before us. Now what will be the consequence of this degradation? I answer, when trials, bereavements, sickness and despair overtake us, we shall be filled with pain and anguish, and pine away until death shall swallow us up. But God has not left us here without a remedy. God, through his infinite mercy and goodness, has given us a revelation, through the mediation of Jesus Christ, his beloved Son, whereby we can be restored. Yet how indifferent many are to the counsels laid down in the gospel of Christ. How thoughtless and unmindful of the destination to which they are fast hastening. Each day, each hour, each minute, wafts them nearer to its shores. Many heed it not, but are engrossed in the cares and turmoil of life, the pleasures and vanities of earth; therefore they forget that they are destined either for life or death. They travel on as though earth were only their abiding place, and its toys and trifles their only object of pursuit. It ought not so to be. The hope of a future life beyond the grave should cheer and animate us amid the varied scenes of earth, and urge us to new faithfulness in the discharge of our duties, and to "a closer walk with God." It should be our stay and solace in adversity, and our joy and delight in prosperity. Then would happiness be our lot, wherever we may be.

This subject, dear reader, cannot be too highly dwelt upon and appreciated; for, according to prophecy, Christ is soon coming to judge the earth; and we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to answer for the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or evil. Truly, God's word revealeth to us the sentence that is to be passed upon our conduct while here on the earth. Therefore, what manner of persons ought we to be in every good word and work.

Dear christian, be not weary in well doing. Press forward toward the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus, and eternal life will be your reward. O let our souls delight to dwell upon the goodness of God. Eternity alone can disclose to us the length and breadth and depth of the goodness of God.

RECONCILIATION.

"For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell; and, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven."—Col. 1: 19, 20.

Heaven and earth are often spoken of in Scripture as places of abode. Besides these, there is another place that we read of, viz., "hell." There is a general belief adopted by those who read the Scriptures, 1. That God lives in heaven. 2. That the devil lives in hell. 3. That, though we live on earth as yet, we must after death either live with God in heaven, or with the devil in hell.

The apostle says that Christ made peace. All was at enmity with God, by reason of the transgression of our first parents. In making peace, he reconciled God and man, and this wonderful plan of redemption included "all things" to be reconciled unto Christ; for it includes "heaven and earth,"—all is to be united to Christ. Eph. 1: 10. But the question arises, How is this reconciliation and union effected? We know what earth is, but to know what heaven is, we must learn from the word of God. The term heaven occurs about four hundred and seventy times in the Bible. If we take out the passages referring to things not beyond the skies, as 1 Kings 18: 45, "Meanwhile . . . . the heaven was black with clouds," by far the smallest part is left. Then among the balance are but few in which the term universe would not do equally as well. "The remnant . . . . gave glory to the God of heaven" (the universe). We also read of conversation, or walk and conduct, being in heaven. Of creatures and even war being in heaven. Rev. 12: 7. In the last instance, undoubtedly, the church is meant.

Thus I find a heaven spoken of hundreds of times, but never as a place where God intends to take his people after they die. If there is a heaven beyond the stars, it is something on which I think the Bible is silent. Earth was made for man, and the promise is that the people of God shall dwell in the land, or inherit the earth for ever. Ps. 37: 3, 9, 22, 29; Matt. 5: 5.

By regeneration (Matt. 19: 28) the earth will be prepared as the future abode of God's people, concerning which the apostle Peter said, "We . . . look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." This is the reward which the Savior has promised his disciples in heaven, though it is heaven upon earth.

Finally, when Jesus will have reconciled "all things unto himself," then the wicked will be destroyed; consequently, there will be no need of a hell, and a devil to torment the wicked; for the figure used by the Savior, everlasting fire that will not be quenched, makes their destruction certain, beyond all doubt. Then God will live with his people, as he has promised, and their Eden state will be restored unto them, and as believers in Christ they will then realize the promise, which is "everlasting life." In the Bible I find no heaven beyond the stars for the righteous, nor a hell for the wicked in the regions of eternal despair, where they curse God forever; but the wicked will be destroyed by the "second death," and the earth renewed for the abode of God's people.

A BAD THOUGHT.—A bad thought can steal into the most secret recesses of the heart, as a villain in the house at midnight can enter the most retired apartments. That thought can go where an intruder, less subtle and deceitful, could never have gone. It can make prize of the fairest, richest jewels in the soul. It has no business in your breast—its only errand there is one of mischief. It entered your heart without a welcome, or if with a welcome, so much the worse. Drive it out.

CHRISTENDOM IN THE LAST TIMES.

Extracts from a sermon by Rev. Stuart Robinson, preached before the Presbytery of Louisville, Ky., April 11th, 1866.—TEXT, 2 Tim. 3: 1–16.)

You will observe in the first place, that unbounded as is the confidence of the apostle in the power of the gospel, neither he in this place, nor the inspired writers anywhere else, give any countenance to the dreams so popular in these last times, of a progress of society under the gospel with its christian reforms and philanthropies, to a golden age of universal perfection. Nor do they give any ground for the infidel scoff and cavil, so popular also in these last times, that christianity is a failure; because, in spite of all the efforts of the church, the society, even of Christendom, is still so largely corrupt, insincere, selfish, God despising, sham-worshiping, sensual, devilish. Nay, they give no ground, either for the disappointments and despondencies of that Arcadian piety which, assuming the saintly perfection of the church, anticipated nothing but peace, purity, and love, within its sacred inclosures, and having failed to realize its ideal, falls back in censoriousness, uncharitableness, distrust, and unbelief. For it is evidently within the limits of christianized communities, and even of the church itself, that the apostle prophetically sees these "men that shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." That he anticipates the realization of this appalling list of sins within the limits of christianized communities, and among those making pretence to religion, is very manifest from the last item in the catalogue—"Having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof."

The predictions of the Scriptures uniformly represent that humanity shall go on from generation to generation, until the era of millennial glory, exhibiting the same depravity and the same passions, even under all the light of the gospel; and that the gospel, parallel with the progress of humanity, shall gather out of the corrupt generations Christ's elect, by the same exercise of divine power and grace that converts the most fierce and savage of the species. Nay, that even the visible church shall constantly be liable to corruption from the world without, and from unsanctified nature within its inclosures. And, therefore, not only shall the tares continue to grow with the wheat till the reapers come for the harvest, but not unfrequently the tares shall utterly choke out the wheat in large portions of the field.

Having drawn this general outline of the picture, the apostle proceeds to point out the influences at work in the church to produce such corruption of faith and morals. And here he presents certain portraits of character which may well lead us to study, with special interest, both the perils and the antidote in the infallible word of God which he sets before us.

The first of these special portraitures, in filling up the picture, is the religious pretence of the errorism of the last days. For observe, the special peril here described is not from the "scoffers," whose coming in at the last days the apostle Peter predicted, but rather from hypocrites whom both the apostles Peter and Jude predict and describe as "false teachers, who shall privily bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them" (2 Pet. 2: 1); and as "certain men crept in unawares, ungodly men turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, even our Lord Jesus Christ."—Jude 1: 4. Yet all this is done under the guise of a form of godliness. Nay, generally, as we see from the fulfillment, under the guise of a form of extra godliness. The church of Jesus Christ, as he hath organized it, is represented by them to be a laggard and a sluggard in the great movement of philanthropy for the regeneration of humanity. So far advanced is this new and improved form of godliness, that even Jesus and his apostles, though patronizingly smiled upon as well-meaning men, are regarded as far in the rear of the modern philanthropy. But especially are the apostles far in the rear of the improved form of godliness whose flexibility so readily adapts itself to the tastes of men, and thereby beguiles them into the kingdom of God. It devises, now a poetic religionism for the sentimental; now a gorgeous ceremonial for the lovers of the æsthetic; now penances for the self-righteous; now indulgences for the lovers of pleasure; now fires the zeal of bigots with "genealogies and old wives' fables"; and now assures the careless and sluggish Gallios that it is "no matter about belief if one is sincere." In short, while it quiets the cravings of the human soul for a religion of some sort, it skilfully adapts itself to every phase of human self-love and human weakness. It preserves, for policy's sake, the semblance of gospel religion; but under well feigned zeal for its outward form, it assiduously subverts its power.

A second feature in the picture is the very peculiar propagandism of this sham religion—"which creeps into houses and leads captive silly women,"—gunaikaria—in the neutre, and hence the word may well be taken as descriptive of the brainless of either sex. This is the remarkable characteristic of most mere formal religionism, that its propagandism expends itself, not in going forth to "the highways and hedges," nor "to the people that sit in darkness and the shadow of death," but in creeping within the inclosure of the covenant, either to seduce off its victims or to infuse into the weak minds self-conceit, self-righteousness, dissatisfaction with the law and ordinances of Christ's house, and suspicion and distrust of those who administer them.

A third feature in the picture of this sham religion of the last days is its purely negative character—"Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." How apt the description of that religionism which, while professing to accept the gospel as christians, assures us at the same time that nothing is settled as the positive truth of God, but all things are open to dispute as mere opinions. It has no faith, but only an opinion. Its gospel is not "credo"—I believe," but ever "nego"—"I deny." Its prayer and confession is not "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief," but "Lord, I deny, reject, eschew all creeds; reward thou mine unbelief." The creed, or rather the no-creed on which it founds its hope of salvation—no, not of salvation, for it neither needs nor would accept salvation—but on which it founds its hope of heaven, is, "I believe not God as maker of heaven and earth, since I know not whether heaven and earth were made, or only developed; I believe not Jesus Christ the Son of God, for all of us are in like manner sons of God; I believe not the Holy Ghost in any sense of a personal Spirit and sanctifier, but only as a figure of speech; I believe not that we are justified by faith, but every one of us will for our works be rewarded with God's favor. And as to other points, I have not been able to come to the knowledge of the truth; and even if I had, could not say I believe, since that would trammel free thought with a creed."

Another feature of the picture is the plausibility and ingenuity of the teachers of this sham religion; they shall be able so to counterfeit the truth as to deceive even the very elect. "As James and Jambres withstood Moses,"—counterfeiting the very miracles intended to demonstrate the presence and power of Jehovah with him, and destroying the effect of the miracle on Pharaoh's mind—"so do these also resist the truth." They counterfeit the very seal of heaven, and so counterfeit the current coin of Christ's kingdom, that the real people of the kingdom are imposed upon by their high-sounding phrases of faith and piety.

Brethren, those of you who are at all familiar with the current style of the insidious infidelity of these times—its pretended zeal for the honor of christianity—its affected sighings after a more spiritual faith than either Moses and the prophets, or Jesus and his apostles, teach—its noisy philanthropism—and its pretentious claims to have met the demands of science and the progress of modern thought—will readily perceive that the aged martyr here paints no ideal picture, nor a picture either of men and things only of the ages gone by!

PROMISE TO ABRAHAM.

BRO. GRANT:—With your permission, I will enlarge upon your answer to Bro. Driscoll's question, as to whether the "inheritance spoken of by Peter, 1 Pet. 1: 3, 4, as being reserved in heaven, is the same that God promised to Abraham. I answer, the promise to Abraham, of the possession of land simply, would not involve the inheritance spoken of by Peter, which is now "reserved in heaven;" but the promise of an "eternal," or "everlasting" possession of land, would involve it (Gen. 17: 8), because no mortal being could possess land, or any thing else, eternally. For, unless he received a change of nature, exempting him from death, he would die out of the inheritance; for corruption doth not inherit incorruption. Therefore, the promise of God to Abraham involves two parts in the inheritance; viz., life and land. Hence Paul hoped for "eternal life," according to that promise, Titus 1: 2. His hope was the "one hope" of the gospel. Eph. 4: 4. He hoped to obtain this promised life, at the appearing of Jesus (Titus 2: 13) by means of the resurrection of the dead (Acts 23: 6, and 26: 6, 8), or a translation into the immortal state at the last trump! Thess. 4: 16, 17. Therefore, first, the inheritance of eternal life is involved in the promise of God to Abraham; and secondly, the promise is not due until the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the just, when the inheritance will be given by Jesus, the appointed Judge (Acts 17: 31) to all his co-heirs, or saints of the Most High.—Dan. 7: 27.

Thirdly, until that time, the land to be inherited is under the curse and infested with such as offend, and them that doe iniquity.—Matt. 13: 41.

But, fourthly, the life to be then inherited is now, and until then, as Peter says, "reserved in heaven." For that life is not now in the saints, but in Christ; who is ready to reveal it in the last time. As Paul says, "Your life (eternal, which by the promise of God to Abraham and his seed, is to be inherited by all the saints) is hid with Christ in God" (and therefore at the present time in heaven); and when he who is your "life (eternal) shall appear, then shall" you "appear with him in glory;" or, then will you receive your inheritance of a glorious and immortal life; which qualification is necessary to the eternal possession of the land as covenanted by Jehovah himself.

Therefore, I close this subject by directing the attention of the reader to the words of the prophet David, Psalms 37: 34; "Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee,"—thy moral nature, and clothe it with an immortal vehicle, so that, having obtained the eternal inheritance of life now "reserved in heaven," you shall be qualified to "inherit the land," covenanted to Abraham and his seed. May both writer and reader be counted worthy of so glorious and eternally-enduring an inheritance, is the prayer of

C. F. SWEET.

P. S. As to man's being made immortal by eating of the tree of life, I would say, the tree of life was never designed to give life of any kind, but to preserve the life already given.

THE OLD PATHS.

Where are the paths our fathers trod,
Like men of courage bold?
They lived by faith and walked with God,
As Enoch did of old.
As priests to God, like Aaron, they
Were called from above,
To cry to men without delay
God's messages of love.

Ah! wo is me, they each could say,
If I refuse the call;
I freely give myself away
To him who died for all.
My home is sweet, my friends are dear,
With them I fain would dwell;
But dearer still do souls appear,
So home and friends, farewell.

Silver nor gold e'er called them forth,
Nor stopped them on their way,
They preached to men Christ's precious truth,
And looked to him for pay.
The love of Christ, a mighty chord,
Constrained them night and day
To cry, "Behold the Lamb of God,"
That taketh sins away.

They had no creeds to yoke the meek,
Nor notes to preach by rule;
They did not stop to study Greek,
Nor go to priestly schools;
They learnt the gospel from their King,
And ran where they were sent;
Trusting in God for every thing,
Like flames of fire they went.

O'er hills and dales, through storm and calm,
They ranged the country through,
Fearing that naught could do them harm,
If they were good and true;
They preached to men in sin enthralled,
To flee from death and woe;
God gave the sign that they were called,
Wherever they did go.

They saw the power of God displayed,
And hundreds bowed their knee;
They were opposed, but not dismayed,
But fought for liberty.
No high nor low was in their ranks,
But all of one degree;
E'er praising God and giving thanks
For love and unity.

CHURCH, OR ANARCHY?

NUMBER TWO.

Christians sustain a two-fold relation, first, to God; second, to each other; and both are necessary to constitute a christian. The second point has not always been noticed. It is considered that christians are simply those who love God; but God's commandment just referred to is proof that one is as essential as the other, and God makes one culpably guilty of falsehood, who says he loves God and hates his brother. If one would have an understanding with God, so that he can "assure" his heart before him, he must be right with his brother; i. e., be on terms of full, hearty, acknowledged christian fellowship.

But how is the fellowship to be acknowledged? Not by getting up in meeting and saying so, and letting that pass as the acknowledgment, for it must be recognized, as well as acknowledged, by the person who makes the confession of fellowship. In other words, the "full fellowship" is a complete, mutual affair. We will illustrate it. Here is a place where there are a number of professed believers in Christ. They have never had what we are contending for; viz., "church order," "full fellowship." Some have left the different sectarian churches because they could not remain there and preach the truth as to the coming of Jesus, and life through him; others have been converted from the world, and hold this faith; others, perhaps, do not fully hold it, but want to be free from [illegible]rianism. They say they do not believe in "churches"; that they have come out of Babylon. But what is their state? Some fellowship, and some anarchy. Perhaps we can best state their condition by this formula:

We have A., B., C., D., E., F., G., H., I., J., with others. Now if we can find any fellowship there at all, it is so much toward our "church"; and if there is any want of fellowship, it is wrong, and will be acknowledged by all conscientious christians. What we wish to do is to bring them up where they should be, and then the "church" we are describing will be seen, and its characteristics understood. We will suppose that all these persons propose to come out clearly and definitely to the position we advise them to take. They meet together for that purpose. We have heard that there has not been, up to this time, a full fellowship. That old "stumbling-block," "Something's in the way," is among them. But they meet, and we request all who desire for themselves the position of full christian fellowship to stand on their feet. All do so; and we inquire of each by name whether he fellowships each and all the others? and whether they individually fellowship in return? We find that A. fellowships B., C. and D.; B. fellowships E., F. and G., but does not fellowship C. and D., though he does A.; C. does not fellowship E., and E. does not fellowship C., but does the others. There is trouble here certainly. They are not where they should be, that is evident. They have not got out of Babylon yet, for their favorite word, that has kept them so long where they are, means anarchy and confusion. They have come into Babylon, and now we ask them to "come out of Babylon" into "full christian fellowship." They agree to make christian character the only test of fellowship; and all the evils are removed, and each is fellowshiped by all and fellowships all. Mr. Objector, have you after all any objections to these brethren and sisters being free from the evils that have stumbled, tried and hindered them, and kept them apart so long? This is our church, in earliest history. Paul went about establishing churches, and we may safely follow in his steps, and reconcile those who were afar off from each other.

What a lamentable state of things exists when men and women, who profess to love God, and to believe in the near coming of Jesus, cannot fellowship each other; or when one, who does not give good evidence of being the Lord's, can go among them, talk in meeting, and perhaps gain the sympathy of some undeservingly, and there be no means to remedy the evil; no protection to those who are really trying to live as they should.

It is as really absurd to think of a number meeting in one place, professing to worship God together, and yet not fully acknowledging each other. It is a species of anarchy. There must be an understanding sufficient to agree as to the place of meeting; but why shrink back from the perfect agreement and full understanding as to confidence in each other? Then the many are one body in Christ, and every one a member of the others; otherwise it is not so. A number of professed christians in a place is not a church, just simply because there is a number. Broken fragments do not make a whole dish, neither do the different organs of the human bodies, separated and scattered about, make a living human organism. Read 1 Cor. 12, and it will be seen that our position is a correct one. "The body is one," says the apostle, not one member, but many; and he further teaches us that God hath set the members every one of them in the body, so as to make one complete whole. Now, although they are baptized into this body by the one Spirit of God, without which baptism there can be no true christian union; yet is evident from such exhortations of the apostle as, "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit" (Eph. 4: 3), that the individuals themselves have something to do about getting into the body, and keeping in it, as they certainly do in keeping out of it, or getting out when there is a body recognized. We certainly need something more than a lot of men and women professing religion, many of whom have perhaps no confidence in each other, to advance the cause of truth in the world. They should first convince the world that christians love instead of hate one another.

The story of the old gentleman and his sons illustrates this point well. The sons were quarreling and disagreeing constantly. The old gentleman called them to him and gave each a single stick to break. They did it with ease. He then took a bundle of sticks, on which he invited each to test his strength, but none could break the sticks when bound together. The father then reminded them that each separately would fail, but bound in one bundle of love and mutual agreement, they could resist opposing influences, each by the assistance of the other doing more than he could alone. So by a covenant together, christians can do more than they can alone, for they are then bound together in one bundle of love. O for the spirit of love to melt us into one.

There are many brethren and sisters in some places, who feel that there is something necessary to bring them into a better position than they are in, but how to get there is the question. They see that our company of A., B., C., D., and others are united, and they feel perhaps afraid to take the position, lest they be like the churches. They see the evils in which they are involved. They are grieved at the instances of dis-fellowship and schisms among those who should be all united, and must be to be saved; and they do not really know what to do. They are almost, or quite discouraged. Now we are prepared to say honestly before God, that there is no other way to remedy the evils than to come to the position of testing the fellowship, as those of our company above mentioned have done.

We have only incidentally glanced at a few of the evils existing where there is not full fellowship. We have not brought out the differences that existed between B., C., D., and E., and others. They are too lamentable to detail. The misunderstandings, unacknowledged wrongs, from obstinacy or otherwise; the standing aloof from the responsibility of being amenable to any one, and yet getting into the meetings and taking a part with others without fellowshiping half of them, or staying away, and so showing clearly that they are not of Christ, because not of the body; the backbitings, the evil surmisings, and talking about the conjectured or real faults of others generally, and without going first and telling the man his faults between two individuals alone, or by careful inquiries learning first whether the alleged fault had been really committed; are all common occurrences where there is no full fellowship; but where there is, they can not be found at all.

Jesus has given a rule in Matt. 18: 15–18, but there is no rule for those who have no agreement together, so that a man cannot go to another with authority, simply because he has claimed to be a christian. He may be all full of wrong. It may be an every day affair for him to get out of the way,—more likely than otherwise he keeps out all the time; and if that is the case, all your talk will be of no avail. You have no control over him, or he over you; and he may retort to you, "Physician, heal yourself; I never had any confidence in you; why do you come to me? Look after yourself first."

BE READY.

"Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh."

Readiness for life, its labors, its crosses, its temptations, its disappointments, its perils, its thousand and one deceptions, and sufferings, is a great thought, worthy of a serious and timely consideration. But readiness for the coming of the Son of man, the resurrection of the dead, the judgment of the great day, the reward of redemption and glory, is a thought that far surpasses in interest the thought that goes before; and no person should, for a single moment, or for any earthly interest, neglect a full and satisfactory preparation for these stupendous events. Delays now are fraught with incalculable danger, and whoever procrastinates renders himself a subject of God's displeasure and the cutting rebuke, "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."

I wonder at times with amazement, while my spirit is oppressed beyond measure, to witness the multitudes of religionists who are so utterly regardless of any manifest interest in these things. It is truly lamentable, and very much to be regretted by all who have the truth and cause of God really interwoven into their affections. Let any warm-hearted, zealous brother or sister, bearing the indelible marks of Christ, truth, and a spotless christianity, arise in any congregation outside of the church of Christ looking for his kingdom, and speak to them the word of God concerning Christ's appearing, and the heaven-ordained message so sweet, so cheering, so encouraging, so glorious, so full of interest, beauty, sublimity, and crowning glory, and his words fall on the ears of the major part with so little interest that they do not produce an Amen, praise the Lord, hallelujah, or response of any kind. Attend their prayer, social, and other religious gatherings, and their prayers, exhortations, songs, and sermons contain no aspiration that breathes forth with ardency of soul, "Come, Lord Jesus," and "Come quickly."

Read, whenever you will, their religious organs that come from week to week teeming with intelligence of one kind or another, but in all of them, notwithstanding the overflowing goodness and eternal glory of the doctrine of the second advent of Christ, our divine Savior, it finds no entrance there. The compositors set no types that stamp that consolation upon the soul of the almost wearied christian mariner, bound for that better land. Why, O why such an awful neglect and sacrifice of truth, so fully, ably, and faithfully presented in the Scriptures of truth? Is there an answer? Who can solve the problem? Professed believers in the divine revelation, have you no interest in so soul-cheering a theme?

Dr. Adam Clarke states one important truth touching this point, when commenting on 1 Cor. 15th chap. He says:—

"One remark I cannot help making: the doctrine of the resurrection appears to have been thought of much more consequence among the primitive christians than it is now. How is this? The apostles were continually insisting on it, and exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness throught it. And their successors in the present day seldom mention it! So apostles preached; and so primitive christians believed; and so we preach, and so our hearers believe. There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid; and there is not a doctrine in the present system of preaching which is treated with more neglect."

The foregoing language speaks volumes, and who can read it without seeing that the professed people of God have widely departed from the original faith, hope, and practice of the primitive church. What has wrought this mighty change? such a great revolution?

All the family named in heaven and on earth must shed tears of sorrow over this sad departure from the word of God. Instead of the religious world looking for the second advent of the Son of God, the resurrection of the dead, judgment and restitution of all things, spoken of by the prophets for the restoration of their immortal joys, they are looking for death to crown them with these honors. O what a departure from the faith once delivered to the saints!

The more this great error is taught, the more rapidly the church and world degenerates; and, consequently, the more disqualified they are for the coming of Jesus. But I thank God from the deepest recesses of my soul, that the spirit of the Lord has raised up a standard against that cunningly devised fable, in these last days; and many are flocking to its support, and to the one gospel hope, viz., the coming of Christ to reward his people with honor, glory, immortality, and eternal life, in this earth restored to its primeval state.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, enjoying the one common faith, let us be diligent in so good a cause. Let us live for the "pearl of great price" by the hour. Suffer no worldly scheme, or sectarian charm, to neutralize your zeal, devotion, and watchfulness. Remember these are extremely perilous times, and growing more so every day. The times are very ominous indeed. Awful events are hanging over the whole earth. Like Belshazzar, the world is trembling, while wave after wave of perplexity and distress rolls over the nations. O, my Savior and my God, prepare us for the impending scenes of judgment, and for the rest that remains for the people of God. Be ready, then, with your whole armor on. You know not the hour when he cometh, whether at even, midnight, cock-crowing, or in the morning. You know not where you will be; whether in your bed, field, mill, at home, or abroad; out of church or in; upon your knees in importunate prayer, praying, "Come, Lord Jesus," and "Come quickly," "lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping:" therefore, "what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." Be ready.

My spirit sometimes becomes restless, and I feel I must leave all and go and warn the world; "But if any provide not for his own . . . house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel." So I tarry and labor in a limited capacity. Yours hoping for a crown when Jesus comes,

THE GOODNESS OF GOD.

The goodness of God is an inexhaustible theme. No language is adequate to describe his goodness; but, feeling as I do now,—filled with love to God and love to man,—I shall endeavor to lay his goodness before you as far as God shall give me grace; hoping it may stir up some careless mind to love God and serve him, which is our most reasonable duty. Wherever we turn our eyes, we discover numerous tokens of the kindness and mercy of our heavenly Father, in supplying our wants, and in administering to our comforts. He openeth his hand and satisfieth the wants of every living thing. His providence, although extending over all worlds and living objects, is so minute as to number the very hairs of our heads. In all conditions, and in every circumstance of life, we are the objects of his care, his Fatherly protection. He it is who spreads out before us the variegated carpet of nature, to beautify the earth and gladden the hearts of the children of men. He it is who kindly supplies our morning, noon, and evening repast; who supplies the wonted repose that nature demands, and kindly draws over us the banner of love, to shield us from all harm. He it is who, when our Father and mother forsake us, takes us up and cherishes us with greater care than earthly parents ever can. Yes, when heart and flesh shall fail us, then will the Lord our God, in due time,—at the resurrection,—receive his faithful children to that abode, where they can bask in eternal sunshine at his right hand; where there will be fullness of joy and pleasure evermore.

But how lamentable it is, notwithstanding all that God has done for our comfort and happiness, man, by reason of sin and transgression, has fallen far below these enjoyments and blessings that God has so kindly set before us. Now what will be the consequence of this degradation? I answer, when trials, bereavements, sickness and despair overtake us, we shall be filled with pain and anguish, and pine away until death shall swallow us up. But God has not left us here without a remedy. God, through his infinite mercy and goodness, has given us a revelation, through the mediation of Jesus Christ, his beloved Son, whereby we can be restored. Yet how indifferent many are to the counsels laid down in the gospel of Christ. How thoughtless and unmindful of the destination to which they are fast hastening. Each day, each hour, each minute, wafts them nearer to its shores. Many heed it not, but are engrossed in the cares and turmoil of life, the pleasures and vanities of earth; therefore they forget that they are destined either for life or death. They travel on as though earth were only their abiding place, and its toys and trifles their only object of pursuit. It ought not so to be. The hope of a future, life beyond the grave should cheer and animate us amid the varied scenes of earth, and urge us to new faithfulness in the discharge of our duties, and to "a closer walk with God." It should be our stay and solace in adversity, and our joy and delight in prosperity. Then would happiness be our lot, wherever we may be.

This subject, dear reader, cannot be too highly dwelt upon and appreciated; for, according to prophecy, Christ is soon coming to judge the earth; and we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to answer for the deeds done in the body, whether they be good or evil. Truly, God's word revealeth to us the sentence that is to be passed upon our conduct while here on the earth. Therefore, what manner of persons ought we to be in every good word and work.

Dear christian, be not weary in well doing. Press forward toward the mark of the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus, and eternal life will be your reward. O let our souls delight to dwell upon the goodness of God. Eternity alone can disclose to us the length and breadth and depth of the goodness of God.

RECONCILIATION.

"For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell; and, having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven."—Col. 1: 19, 20.

Heaven and earth are often spoken of in Scripture as places of abode. Besides these, there is another place that we read of, viz., "hell." There is a general belief adopted by those who read the Scriptures, 1. That God lives in heaven. 2. That the devil lives in hell. 3. That, though we live on earth as yet, we must after death either live with God in heaven, or with the devil in hell.

The apostle says that Christ made peace. All was at enmity with God, by reason of the transgression of our first parents. In making peace, he reconciled God and man, and this wonderful plan of redemption included "all things" to be reconciled unto Christ; for it includes "heaven and earth,"—all is to be united to Christ. Eph. 1: 10. But the question arises, How is this reconciliation and union effected? We know what earth is, but to know what heaven is, we must learn from the word of God. The term heaven occurs about four hundred and seventy times in the Bible. If we take out the passages referring to things not beyond the skies, as 1 Kings 18: 45, "Meanwhile . . . . the heaven was black with clouds," by far the smallest part is left. Then among the balance are but few in which the term universe would not do equally as well. "The remnant . . . . gave glory to the God of heaven" (the universe). We also read of conversation, or walk and conduct, being in heaven. Of creatures and even war being in heaven. Rev. 12: 7. In the last instance, undoubtedly, the church is meant.

Thus I find a heaven spoken of hundreds of times, but never as a place where God intends to take his people after they die. If there is a heaven beyond the stars, it is something on which I think the Bible is silent. Earth was made for man, and the promise is that the people of God shall dwell in the land, or inherit the earth for ever. Ps. 37: 3, 9, 22, 29; Matt. 5: 5.

By regeneration (Matt. 19: 28) the earth will be prepared as the future abode of God's people, concerning which the apostle Peter said, "We . . . look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." This is the reward which the Savior has promised his disciples in heaven, though it is heaven upon earth.

Finally, when Jesus will have reconciled "all things unto himself," then the wicked will be destroyed; consequently, there will be no need of a hell, and a devil to torment the wicked; for the figure used by the Savior, everlasting fire that will not be quenched, makes their destruction certain, beyond all doubt. Then God will live with his people, as he has promised, and their Eden state will be restored unto them, and as believers in Christ they will then realize the promise, which is "everlasting life." In the Bible I find no heaven beyond the stars for the righteous, nor a hell for the wicked in the regions of eternal despair, where they curse God forever; but the wicked will be destroyed by the "second death," and the earth renewed for the abode of God's people.

A Bad Thought.—A bad thought can steal into the most secret recesses of the heart, as a villain in the house at midnight can enter the most retired apartments. That thought can go where an intruder, less subtle and deceitful, could never have gone. It can make prize of the fairest, richest jewels in the soul. It has no business in your breast—its only errand there is one of mischief. It entered your heart without a welcome, or if with a welcome, so much the worse. Drive it out.

CHRISTENDOM IN THE LAST TIMES.

Extracts from a sermon by Rev. Stuart Robinson, preached before the Presbytery of Louisville, Ky., April 11th, 1866.—Text, 2 Tim. 3: 1–16.)

You will observe in the first place, that unbounded as is the confidence of the apostle in the power of the gospel, neither he in this place, nor the inspired writers anywhere else, give any countenance to the dreams so popular in these last times, of a progress of society under the gospel with its christian reforms and philanthropies, to a golden age of universal perfection. Nor do they give any ground for the infidel scoff and cavil, so popular also in these last times, that christianity is a failure; because, in spite of all the efforts of the church, the society, even of Christendom, is still so largely corrupt, insincere, selfish, God despising, sham-worshiping, sensual, devilish. Nay, they give no ground, either for the disappointments and despondencies of that Arcadian piety which, assuming the saintly perfection of the church, anticipated nothing but peace, purity, and love, within its sacred inclosures, and having failed to realize its ideal, falls back in censoriousness, uncharitableness, distrust, and unbelief. For it is evidently within the limits of christianized communities, and even of the church itself, that the apostle prophetically sees these "men that shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." That he anticipates the realization of this appalling list of sins within the limits of christianized communities, and among those making pretence to religion, is very manifest from the last item in the catalogue—"Having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof."

The predictions of the Scriptures uniformly represent that humanity shall go on from generation to generation, until the era of millennial glory, exhibiting the same depravity and the same passions, even under all the light of the gospel; and that the gospel, parallel with the progress of humanity, shall gather out of the corrupt generations Christ's elect, by the same exercise of divine power and grace that converts the most fierce and savage of the species. Nay, that even the visible church shall constantly be liable to corruption from the world without, and from unsanctified nature within its inclosures. And, therefore, not only shall the tares continue to grow with the wheat till the reapers come for the harvest, but not unfrequently the tares shall utterly choke out the wheat in large portions of the field.

Having drawn this general outline of the picture, the apostle proceeds to point out the influences at work in the church to produce such corruption of faith and morals. And here he presents certain portraits of character which may well lead us to study, with special interest, both the perils and the antidote in the infallible word of God which he sets before us.

The first of these special portraitures, in filling up the picture, is the religious pretence of the errorism of the last days. For observe, the special peril here described is not from the "scoffers," whose coming in at the last days the apostle Peter predicted, but rather from hypocrites whom both the apostles Peter and Jude predict and describe as "false teachers, who shall privily bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them" (2 Pet. 2: 1); and as "certain men crept in unawares, ungodly men turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, even our Lord Jesus Christ."—Jude 1: 4. Yet all this is done under the guise of a form of godliness. Nay, generally, as we see from the fulfillment, under the guise of a form of extra godliness. The church of Jesus Christ, as he hath organized it, is represented by them to be a laggard and a sluggard in the great movement of philanthropy for the regeneration of humanity. So far advanced is this new and improved form of godliness, that even Jesus and his apostles, though patronizingly smiled upon as well-meaning men, are regarded as far in the rear of the modern philanthropy. But especially are the apostles far in the rear of the improved form of godliness whose flexibility so readily adapts itself to the tastes of men, and thereby beguiles them into the kingdom of God. It devises, now a poetic religionism for the sentimental; now a gorgeous ceremonial for the lovers of the æsthetic; now penances for the self-righteous; now indulgences for the lovers of pleasure; now fires the zeal of bigots with "genealogies and old wives' fables"; and now assures the careless and sluggish Gallios that it is "no matter about belief if one is sincere." In short, while it quiets the cravings of the human soul for a religion of some sort, it skilfully adapts itself to every phase of human self-love and human weakness. It preserves, for policy's sake, the semblance of gospel religion; but under well feigned zeal for its outward form, it assiduously subverts its power.

A second feature in the picture is the very peculiar propagandism of this sham religion—"which creeps into houses and leads captive silly women,"—gunaikaria—in the neutre, and hence the word may well be taken as descriptive of the brainless of either sex. This is the remarkable characteristic of most mere formal religionism, that its propagandism expends itself, not in going forth to "the highways and hedges," nor "to the people that sit in darkness and the shadow of death," but in creeping within the inclosure of the covenant, either to seduce off its victims or to infuse into the weak minds self-conceit, self-righteousness, dissatisfaction with the law and ordinances of Christ's house, and suspicion and distrust of those who administer them.

A third feature in the picture of this sham religion of the last days is its purely negative character—"Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." How apt the description of that religionism which, while professing to accept the gospel as christians, assures us at the same time that nothing is settled as the positive truth of God, but all things are open to dispute as mere opinions. It has no faith, but only an opinion. Its gospel is not "credo"—I believe," but ever "nego"—"I deny." Its prayer and confession is not "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief," but "Lord, I deny, reject, eschew all creeds; reward thou mine unbelief." The creed, or rather the no-creed on which it founds its hope of salvation—no, not of salvation, for it neither needs nor would accept salvation—but on which it founds its hope of heaven, is, "I believe not God as maker of heaven and earth, since I know not whether heaven and earth were made, or only developed; I believe not Jesus Christ the Son of God, for all of us are in like manner sons of God; I believe not the Holy Ghost in any sense of a personal Spirit and sanctifier, but only as a figure of speech; I believe not that we are justified by faith, but every one of us will for our works be rewarded with God's favor. And as to other points, I have not been able to come to the knowledge of the truth; and even if I had, could not say I believe, since that would trammel free thought with a creed."

Another feature of the picture is the plausibility and ingenuity of the teachers of this sham religion; they shall be able so to counterfeit the truth as to deceive even the very elect. "As James and Jambres withstood Moses,"—counterfeiting the very miracles intended to demonstrate the presence and power of Jehovah with him, and destroying the effect of the miracle on Pharaoh's mind—"so do these also resist the truth." They counterfeit the very seal of heaven, and so counterfeit the current coin of Christ's kingdom, that the real people of the kingdom are imposed upon by their high-sounding phrases of faith and piety.

Brethren, those of you who are at all familiar with the current style of the insidious infidelity of these times—its pretended zeal for the honor of christianity—its affected sighings after a more spiritual faith than either Moses and the prophets, or Jesus and his apostles, teach—its noisy philanthropism—and its pretentious claims to have met the demands of science and the progress of modern thought—will readily perceive that the aged martyr here paints no ideal picture, nor a picture either of men and things only of the ages gone by!—Prophetic Times.

PROMISE TO ABRAHAM.

Bro. Grant:—With your permission, I will enlarge upon your answer to Bro. Driscoll's question, as to whether the "inheritance spoken of by Peter, 1 Pet. 1: 3, 4, as being reserved in heaven, is the same that God promised to Abraham. I answer, the promise to Abraham, of the possession of land simply, would not involve the inheritance spoken of by Peter, which is now "reserved in heaven;" but the promise of an "eternal," or "everlasting" possession of land, would involve it (Gen. 17: 8), because no mortal being could possess land, or any thing else, eternally. For, unless he received a change of nature, exempting him from death, he would die out of the inheritance; for corruption doth not inherit incorruption. Therefore, the promise of God to Abraham involves two parts in the inheritance; viz., life and land. Hence Paul hoped for "eternal life," according to that promise, Titus 1: 2. His hope was the "one hope" of the gospel. Eph. 4: 4. He hoped to obtain this promised life, at the appearing of Jesus (Titus 2: 13) by means of the resurrection of the dead (Acts 23: 6, and 26: 6, 8), or a translation into the immortal state at the last trump! Thess. 4: 16, 17. Therefore, first, the inheritance of eternal life is involved in the promise of God to Abraham; and secondly, the promise is not due until the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the just, when the inheritance will be given by Jesus, the appointed Judge (Acts 17: 31) to all his co-heirs, or saints of the Most High.—Dan. 7: 27.

Thirdly, until that time, the land to be inherited is under the curse and infested with such as offend, and them that doe iniquity.—Matt. 13: 41.

But, fourthly, the life to be then inherited is now, and until then, as Peter says, "reserved in heaven." For that life is not now in the saints, but in Christ; who is ready to reveal it in the last time. As Paul says, "Your life (eternal, which by the promise of God to Abraham and his seed, is to be inherited by all the saints) is hid with Christ in God" (and therefore at the present time in heaven); and when he who is your "life (eternal) shall appear, then shall" you "appear with him in glory;" or, then will you receive your inheritance of a glorious and immortal life; which qualification is necessary to the eternal possession of the land as covenanted by Jehovah himself.

Therefore, I close this subject by directing the attention of the reader to the words of the prophet David, Psalms 37: 34; "Wait on the Lord and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee,"—thy moral nature, and clothe it with an immortal vehicle, so that, having obtained the eternal inheritance of life now "reserved in heaven," you shall be qualified to "inherit the land," covenanted to Abraham and his seed. May both writer and reader be counted worthy of so glorious and eternally enduring an inheritance, is the prayer of

For the World's Crisis.

TRAVELS.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to give some encouraging news from C. W., having just returned from a four weeks' visit to the township of Howick, in Huron Co., some hundred and fifty miles from Buffalo. I was there last fall, as then noticed in the Crisis, and organized a church of ten members, ordaining Bro. Andrew Sims as their pastor. I was requested to visit them again last spring, and was greatly rejoiced to find that God had blessed the labors of Bro. Sims in the conversion of sinners during the winter and spring. One after another had come out very clearly, so that nine were baptized by him during the four weeks I was there. Of these, seven were young converts from among the youth, and two from the Congregational church. I baptized six last fall, who had been lately converted. Thus the blessed work of God's Spirit has been clearly manifested, and it is still going on. Some are weeping, like the woman at the feet of Jesus, and seeking for an evidence of pardon; and a general solemnity pervades in the neighborhood. I expect to hear soon of additions to the little flock. I preached in two new places in the township.

Advent views, especially on the doctrine of life only through Christ, seem to be spreading fast. Opposition exists every where; but the striking evidence that God blesses the gospel, as we preach it, is checking that opposition. Our more constant and fervent prayer should be that our Master would thus "stop the mouths of gainsayers" by the conversion of death-doomed mortals. By seeing that the heart, as well as the head, could be reached, I felt it duty to preach mostly on experimental religion, our sinful state, the work of the Spirit, and the evidence of a "good hope through grace." It is a year of God's special mercy to lost sinners, and controverted doctrines should be less dwelt upon than for a few years past, when the showers of God's grace have, in a great measure, been withheld, and only the intellect could seem to be reached by our preaching.

My heart has been crying glory to God for weeks for the long, long-prayed-for privilege of seeing sinners turning to God in heart where they hear God's whole truth, as we preach it; and hearing joyful young converts tell how they were called out of darkness into marvelous light; and hear them sing with tearful eyes and quivering lips the sweet old hymn—

"O how happy are they,
Who the Savior obey,
And have laid up their treasures above."

It is cheering to teach old christians "the way of God more perfectly," when they will hear, and learn that "the new heavens and the new earth" are not to be begloomed by the burning and wailing of the lost, but it is far more reviving—

"To see a prodigal return,
To see an heir of glory born."

The Lord in mercy bless us all frequently with such soul-cheering sights. Amen.

This church was severely afflicted by the death of their much-beloved Deacon Milne, soon after it was formed; but their sorrows, and that of his faithful wife, have been much lessened by the addition of six of her own children to the church, and two of her sons' wives—three since his death; and I think that more will soon come in. The church is far out of the route of traveling of any of our preachers; but this humility and praying spirit of Bro. Sims, and his loving flock, will protect them from foes, and make them powerful in battling for truth.

Bro. Sims had the joy of baptizing three of his own children the first time he baptized. It is quite evident that one or more ministers will be raised up in this church. Brn. were liberal in taking a large number of tracts and books to give out in surrounding neighborhoods, besides those I had from the C. P. S. They take the Crisis and The Christian.

"BY ADAM ALL DIE."

It is claimed by some that the penalty of Adam's transgression is eternal "conscious existence in misery," and by others that it is eternal death, or annihilation. The former proposition has been too often and too thoroughly refuted, to occupy time and space in this connection; but with the latter we have more particularly to do. It being assumed that the Adamic death is eternal death, it is likewise assumed that there is an exception, and that all who being in Christ fall under that death will be raised up, and that those who die by Adam out of Christ, "will not rise," but forever "remain in the congregation of the dead." Hence we have taught us by some the doctrine of no resurrection of the unjustified.

Such a proposition, and with such an exception, in view of scripture teaching and the light of reason, is palpably absurd. If the penalty pronounced upon Adam had been really eternal death, no one coming under that penalty could ever have a resurrection, or ever see life, consequently if Jesus of Nazareth suffered for the Adamic race that penalty, he could never have risen, even though he had by that death redeemed all the rest of the human family. The fact that he who suffered the penalty for Adam's transgression, in place of Adam's race, rose from the dead, is conclusive that that penalty was not eternal death.

If we show, then, that one has been raised from the Adamic death, we show that that death is not eternal death, and if it be possible for one to be raised from it, it is possible for all to be raised. We see that by Adam death, but not eternal death, is entailed upon all his descendants, and it matters not whether they are as vile as the adversary of all good, or as pure, harmless and undefiled as Jesus of Nazareth; by Adam all die. This thought ought to satisfy all reasoning minds that the Adamic death is not, neither can it be a punishment for any of the sins of the present life, for we die that death whether we sin or not. What then is Adamic death? It is simply the penalty for the transgression of Adam, necessarily entailed upon his descendants, because of their partaking of his nature, being Adamic by generation from him, and is not the punishment of any subsequent transgression. If therefore a man, who is a sinner, dies that death and never rises, he is not punished for his sins by death, but only suffers by means of Adam. We are driven then to this conclusion, that if there be no resurrection of any but justified persons, there can be none but temporal punishments for the transgressions of the present life. But the fact that there is punishment threatened upon the race of Adam for the transgressions of the present life, to be inflicted in the future, and beyond the lifetime of multitudes of such sinners who have lived, and still live, proves that there must be punishment beyond the Adamic death. And as no man without a resurrection can suffer (death) twice; and if that future punishment, the wages of the sins of the present life, be death, it follows that it must be a second death. Therefore, before any individual can suffer that punishment for the present life, he must be raised up from the Adamic death.—Gospel Banner.

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

We would say to those who wish to know the time when the great campmeeting at Wilbraham will begin, that it is appointed to commence Monday, Aug. 20th. It is also proposed to have preaching there on Lord's day, Aug. 19th. We expect a large number of tents will be put up on Friday and Saturday (Aug. 17th and 18th), and that our meeting on the 19th will be one of the best during the entire encampment. We recommend as many as can to be there on the 18th, and remain through the meeting. We expect a great and good meeting. We are anxious to see all our dear brethren and sisters once more at this great feast of tabernacles. It may be our last. Pray much for this meeting. Particulars soon.

"THE LAST TIMES."

In another column will be found an interesting article, under the above heading, from the Bishop of Oxford. We think his views are worthy of a careful consideration. Let the reader lay them up in his heart. These are truly "perilous times." Christian, gird on the armor, and be prepared for a terrible onset from the powers of darkness. The enemy of all righteousness is sowing the seeds of infidelity by the side of all waters, in all lands, and is making his greatest effort in this country, because here is where he finds his strongest opposition. Christians should rally to a man in defense of the "old paths,"—the faith once delivered to the saints. "Victory or death," should be the motto of every soldier of the cross. This is the hour for brave men in Christ to show their courage. Let good names, friends, homes, every thing, be laid on the altar, to be used for the glory of God.

"NOT A GOD OF THE DEAD."

Bro. Grant:—Will you please throw some light on the following passage of Scripture:—"Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living."—Luke 20: 37, 38.

Now did not Christ teach the Sadducees in the above language that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were living when God conversed with Moses from the bush? If so, must they not have been living in a separate state and condition from the natural body?

An Inquirer after Truth.

Lawrence, Ind.

It surprises us that people should think the foregoing scripture proves that man exists in a conscious state between death and the resurrection. We think it a very strong argument against such a view.

Let us examine the subject. The Savior was talking with the Sadducees, who denied "that there is any resurrection." They believed Moses' writings, and as he said nothing about the conscious existence of a soul or spirit after death, and as they had seen no plain passage declaring the resurrection of the dead, they had come to the conclusion that when a man died that was the end of him. With this belief in their minds, they asked the Savior what they considered a very hard question to answer—if there was to be a resurrection of the dead? and he met them with a quotation from Moses' writings, which clearly taught that the dead are to rise again: "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him."

Thompson renders the last clause,—"for to him they are all alive." As Paul says, "As it is written, . . . God . . . quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were."—Rom. 4: 17. Says David, "A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night."—Ps. 90: 4. The time is so short between death and the resurrection, when compared with eternal life, that it is hardly worth considering; so that "to him they are all alive."

We have known some endeavor to make a point on the phrase, "are raised," in ver. 37, claiming that the present tense of the verb shows that they were then alive, when Jesus spake. The same account in Mark 12: 25 reads, "when they shall rise from the dead." The old translation of Wiclif reads:—"And that dead men rise again." Wm. Tyndale, Cranmer, and the Geneva versions read,—"And that the dead shall rise again." Scarlett renders it,—"Now that the dead are to be raised." Wakefield,—"Now concerning the dead that they are to be raised." The Syriac reads,—"Now that the dead will arise."

Observe that the whole talk is about the dead, not something that can not die. According to the popular theology, God is not a God of the bodies of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, because he is not a God of the dead; but their bodies are dead; hence their bodies will never have a resurrection, if the theology is correct. As it is said the souls never die, then of course, it follows that it is impossible to raise them from the dead. Thus the Savior is made to sustain Sadduceeism, instead of proving the resurrection of the dead. But he is endeavoring to show that the resurrection of the dead is taught to Moses at the bush.

Now let us look at his argument. At the time that God sent his angel to speak to Moses in the burning bush, he says, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." When he spoke that, these patriarchs were dead; and when dead, they need no God to provide for them, and administer to their comfort; consequently, as Jesus says, "God is not a God of the dead, but of the living." Then, it follows, as God has declared himself to be their God when they were dead, and yet is only a God of the living, they must live again, in order that he should be their God. Thus the Savior proves the resurrection of the dead to the Sadducees, from the writings of Moses.

I.

"God is not a God of the dead."
But Abraham is dead.
Therefore God is not the God of Abraham.
Not true.

II.

Living men are not subjects of the resurrection.
But Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are living.
Therefore they cannot be raised from the dead.
Not true.

III.

"God is not the God of the dead," who live no more.
But Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will live again.
Therefore God is the "God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob."
This is true.

Important Foreign News.—It will be seen in the foreign news that the Prussians have gained a signal victory over the Austrians; and that the latter have ceded the kingdom of Venetia to Napoleon. This is a very important addition to the territorial dominion of the French Emperor. It gives him great power in Italy, and brings Austria at his feet. Thus far he is the principal gainer by the war, without the loss of a man. Truly he is a man of wonder. All the nations seem to be coming under his control. We shall wait with interest for the next movement.

BODY AND MIND.

The following from the Gospel Visitor is really a literary curiosity; or, perhaps more properly speaking, one of the theological wonders, mysteries, or "fables" (that's the word) of these last days. Read it, and see if you do not think so.

BODY AND MIND.

When we compare the two sublime pieces of mechanism we are struck with admiration. The body, which is animated by the mind, is scarcely analogous to it in any respect, though wholly dependent upon it for vigor and action. But when separated the body immediately meets with dissolution, and is no more. The body is well adapted to motion, and capable of being conveyed from place to place by the co-operation of the will and its peculiar structure. Though how tardy and impeded this bodily action, when compared with the flight of the mind! Why, it can travel a distance in the twinkling of an eye which would require the body, at the greatest speed imaginable, a period of more years than the drops in the ocean, or the sands of the sea shore. This coporeal frame is chained down upon earth by the law of gravitation, and can not rise above this earthly element any more than a river could ascend a steep mountain. But the active living principle within can range through space illimitable, and expatiate regions which perhaps would not sustain animal life a moment. The body is material and compound; the mind immaterial and uncompounded. The grave is the goal of the former; but the latter is destined to live through eternal ages. The former is doomed to dissolution as certain as the moral law is fixed and binding; but the latter is immortal as its Author. What a complicated structure is this clayey tenement, animated and kept alive by the immortal breath of life! It may be that sometimes the soul is despairing of this terrestrial stay and would fain be separated from the casket of clay to soar a disembodied spirit in regions of felicity: though however weary of giving life and action to its fast decaying tabernacle, so long as this ephemeral fabrication stands, the spirit must inhabit it and keep alive.

Again, the organic machinery of the body is impaired and its numerous functions refuse to act in unison, when the final termination is death, and the mind returns to God who gave it. Yet, again, the mind can kill the body by that great influence which it exerts over it in some instances. It can enslave the body and reduce it to a living skeleton, till not capable of sustaining life any longer. The body subsists on vegetable and animal matter; the mind is expanded and nurtured by the thought alone. Here we see in whatever particular we attempt to compare the two—matter and mind, there will be a contrast so great that they scarcely admit of comparison in any respect whatever. Though the same Author called both into existence, he designed the one to survive forever, while the other is only a temporary dwelling place for the probationary state of the mind, to stay only a few days. The "inward man" should therefore engage much of our attention, as it is this living principle which will either render eternal happiness or misery to its possessor in the bourne beyond the grave. We should bring the mind under due subjection to the will, and train it to intelligence and the knowledge of truth. The thinking faculty may be prone to evil, though the will may decline, and from this we are certain that the mind may be governed by the will. But should the mind incline to good and the will refuse, then the responsibility rests on the latter. The conscience will condemn the will in case of refusal to do right, though it may never condemn the mind. God never designed that this never-dying principle should be cast into dark despair, but that it should be refunded to him again with usury.

We know God to be the author of all good, and since he has given us the power of will over the mind, how carefully should we train and fit it for that high and holy calling! Now is the time to perform the three imperative duties which naturally devolve upon us:

1st. To pay Him that tribute so justly due to him. 2nd. To spare neither time nor means to save your soul. 3d. To love your neighbor as yourself; for to-morrow may bring you a summons to the grave, and deprive you of that eternal home prepared in heaven. O, may we attend to these important obligations ere death closes the scene of earthly prospects and we made to pine away an endless eternity. Know we not that God is lengthening out the brittle thread of life and extending his loving kindness and tender mercy from day to day that we may return from darkness to light? Soon the "doors of the Ark" will be closed, and the high rolling cloud-like wave will close over us forever.

Well, do you not think the foregoing ought to be put into the theological museum? Only think what a piece "of mechanism" the mind must be, to "travel a distance in the twinkling of an eye which would require the body, at the greatest speed imaginable, a period of more years than the drops in the ocean, or the sands of the seashore!" Truly we are lost in wonder! Only think what a time this wonderful "mechanism" would have while expatiating in "regions which perhaps would not sustain animal life a moment." This "immortal breath" must be a wonder to all beholders when it soars "a disembodied spirit" in such "regions of felicity." We should much prefer to enjoy the beauties of Eden restored, on the "new earth" which Peter looked for, which John saw in vision, and which the Lord promised, when he said, blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5: 5.

One might be led to think that the writer in the Visitor considered one of "the sublime pieces of mechanism" every thing in general, and nothing in particular. He calls it "the immortal breath," the "living principle," "the soul," "a disembodied spirit," "the mind," etc.

He says, "It is this living principle which will either render eternal happiness or misery to its possessor." We have yet to learn that man is only a "principle." A principle is not a being, but simply a law, or rule of action. We are aware that the demons, and their followers are teaching that there is no "personal God;" that he is nothing but "a principle in all matter," which is equivalent to denying any God at all; so, when one says that man, after death, is a "living principle," he might just as well say that each pain is a "living principle," and that when one dies, it goes to live with other pains, and "range through space illimitable, and expatiate regions which perhaps would not sustain animal life a moment."

The writer advances a new thought when he says:—"Should the mind incline to good and the will refuse, then the responsibility rests on the latter." We wonder if the writer believes the "will" is another man, or "living principle," distinct from "the mind?" Then he will have the body-man, the living-princle-man, and the "will-man, and how many more, we will not presume to say.

He goes on to say, "Since he (God) has given us the power of will over the mind, how carefully should we train and fit it for that high and holy calling." We would like to know what he means when he says, "how carefully should we train and fit it" (the mind,) for that high and holy calling." Who trains the mind,—the "it" of which he speaks? Does the word we represent our bodies? He then says, "to-morrow may bring you a summons to the grave and deprive you of that eternal home prepared in heaven." What does the "you" stand for? Why, he says, one who is to go to the grave, who might have gone to heaven. Does the mind go to the grave? This theology looks crooked.

THE MORAL SIGNS.

According to the Scriptures, "the last days" of the present dispensation are to be characterized by a great "falling away" among the professed disciples of Christ; causing a cold state of religion, and a sad conformity to the world. We think no candid person, who has a correct knowledge of the nature of christianity, can doubt but that we are now living in just such a state of things as Paul said should prevail "in the last days." See 2 Tim. 3: 1–5.

In Dr. Seiss' interesting work on "The Apocalypse," he says:—

When we survey the characteristics of our times,—the unrighteousness, the untruthfulness, the hypocrisy, the impiety, the crime, the hollow-heartedness, and the untold hidden iniquities which prevail in all circles of church, business and state; when we consider the wickedness which are perpetrated by people who call themselves christians, and the shameless worldliness of professors of religion, and the wreck of all distinctive doctrinal belief, and the prostitutions of the house of God and the sacred desk itself to vanity, and politics, selfishness, sensuality, and base trickery in the name of Jesus; when we look at the insubordination which is left to run riot in the great majority of so-called christian families, and the secret vices and concealed blood-guilty crimes of so-called christian husbands and wives, and of the utter moral emptiness, headiness and incontinence of the mass of the busiest and noisiest modern religionists; when we contemplate the goings forth of sin in these days, like Death on the pale horse, with hell following in its train, and come to count up the [illegible] of those in our congregations whom we can confidently set down as true and thorough saints of God,—we are sometimes tempted, with the Psalmist to say, 'All men are liars,' and to doubt whether God has not resigned his dominion over mankind, and abandoned them to be drifted, by the whirlwinds of their own passions, to irremediable ruin. But, with all the hard things which we are in honesty and fairness compelled to write against the present population of Christendom, God has not left himself without witnesses, and still has his true people, who have not kissed their hands nor bowed their knees to the reigning idolatry of the times. Earthy and vile as the congest may be, there is gold in it, as there was an Enoch and a Noah in the generation before the flood, and a Lot even in Sodom itself. Amid all christianity's corruptions, there has always been some standing out against them. The sure ideal has never failed to produce some proximate realization of itself. Dreary as the annals of the church appear, both in prophetic and historic records, the student of them still finds his path skirted with spiritual verdure; and in the distant scenery, examples of faith, purity, love, heroism, devotion and obedience, are never once entirely out of view, the loveliest often being found in the by-paths, and encountered where they would be least expected. Even in the darkest eras, imbeddeb in neglected chronicles, noble names are to be found, sparkling with the radiance of every christian grace."

"ALL MEN ARE GODS."

Twenty-five years ago, who would have believed that a sentiment like the one expressed in the heading of this article would be extensively advocated by intelligent men and women; yet this is a fact. One has only to read the Spiritualists' literature of the day, to be satisfied that this is a leading doctrine among them. When the arch deceiver said to our first parents, "Ye shall be as gods," if you will only disobey the Lord, it seems almost incredible that they should be so blinded and seduced by Satan, as to claim to be gods themselves. But such is the fact. Men are now adopting also the philosophy of the old heathen, who also received their theology from the demons, as do the Spiritualists at the present day.

In the Banner of Light, June 9th, 1866, a writer from Montreal, C. E., says:—

"We have seen for some time past, or some years, that a revival of the ancient philosophy is taking place; therefore we take it for granted that a good portion of the human family are entering into the matured phase of their second age. . . . . There is no disguising the fact that the theological God, as an idea, is losing much of its power and influence over the intelligent masses and that the spirit of inquiry is fast substituting in its stead, Universal Principles of Laws. . . . This Impersonal God, or Head Principle, is at all times assuming different phases of existence, demonstrating thereby that action is its constant condition. . . . . The time is coming, however, when the new converts will boldly assert, as of old, that all men are gods."

Verily, this is "the antichrist." It denies "the Father and the Son."

OLD THEOLOGY.

It will be found that the old writers and preachers, as a general thing, were not so far removed from the truth in relation to the state of the dead as are the modern teachers. The further we get from the days of Jesus and the apostles, the more of tradition and fable appears, until the latter now prevails to an alarming extent.

The following extract from an old volume of sermons of Dr. Watts, published in 1748, is worthy of being republished. The Dr. says:

"Among my papers, I have a speech spoken at a grave, which I transcribed almost fifty years ago, and which deserves to be saved from perishing. It was pronounced many years before at the funeral of a pious person, by a minister there present, supposed to be the Rev. Peter Story; and the subject of it being suited to this discourse, I thought it not improper to preserve it here. I. Watts.

Christian Friends:—Though sin entered into the world; and by sin, death; and so death passes upon all men, for that all have sinned; yet it seems not wholly suitable to our christian hope, to stand by and see the grave, with open mouth, take in and swallow down any part of a precious saint, and not bring some testimony against the devourer. And yet, that one witness may be in righteousness, we must first own, acknowledge, and accept of that good and serviceableness that is in it.

For through the death and resurrection of our dear Redeemer, death and the grave are become sweetened to us, and sanctified for us, so that death is but a sleep; the grave, through his lying down in it, and rising again, is become a bed of repose to them that are in him, and a safe and quiet hiding-place for his saints till the resurrection.

And in this respect, we do for ourselves, and for this our dearly beloved in the Lord, accept of thee, O grave, and readily deliver up her body to thee; it is a body that hath been weakened, and wearied with long affliction and anguish; we freely give it unto thee; receive it and let it have in thee a quiet rest from all its labors, for thus we read it written of thee, 'There the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.'

Besides this, it is, O grave, a body that hath been sweetly embalmed by a virtuous, pious, peaceable conversation, by several inward openings and out-pourings of the spirit of life, by much meekness in strong trials and afflictions. Receive it, and let it enjoy in thee, what was once deeply impressed on her own heart, and in due season written out with her own hand, 'a Sabbath in the grave.' For thus also we find it recorded of our Lord, and her Lord, that he enjoyed the rest of his last Sabbath in the grave.

But we know thee, O grave, to be also a devourer; and yet can freely deliver up the body unto thee. There was in it a contracted corruptibility, dishonor and weakness; take them as thy proper prey; they belong to thee; and we would not withhold them from thee. Freely swallow them up forever, that they may appear no more.

Yet know, O grave, there is in the body, considered as once united to such a soul, a relation to the Lord of life; and this thou must not, cannot dissolve nor destroy. But know, and even before thee, and over thee, be it spoken, that there is a season hastening wherein we shall expect it again from thee in incorruption, honor and power.

We now sow it into thee in dishonor, but expect it again returned from thee in glory; we now sow it into thee in weakness, but expect it again in power; we now sow it into thee a natural body, we look for it again from thee a spiritual body.

And, when thou hast fulfilled the end for which the Prince of life, who took then captive, made thee to serve, then shalt thou who hast devoured, be thyself also swallowed up; for thus it is written of thee, 'O death, I will be thy plague, O grave, I will be thy destruction.' And then shall we sing over thee, what is written of thee, 'O death, where is now thy sting? O grave, where is now thy victory?' Amen."

NEW BOOKS.

The Bible Text-Book: or the Principal Texts relating to the Persons, Places, and Subjects occuring in the Holy Scriptures. With two Maps and a variety of useful Tables. American Tract Society, New York.

This is a very useful little work of 208 pages, designed to render assistance to ministers, teachers, heads of families, and others, in the study of the Bible. It does not presume to be free from mistakes or imperfections, nor does it pretend, in so small a volume, to embrace every subject, nor all the texts that treat upon each subject. Yet it is a work of much labor and care, and will be a valuable help to those who desire a work of this kind for the pocket, or have not the means to purchase one of greater size and completeness.

For sale at this office, by mail, for 40 cents.

SAD NEWS.

Can it be? Yes, it must be so, our dear sister Sarah Higgins is dead! Yesterday was the first we had been apprised that so sad an event was even feared or expected. But we read it in our dear family paper, chronicled by her bereaved companion. May the Lord sustain him and his motherless children, while drinking so bitter a cup. At first a shock of sadness was the result of this intelligence, and then a retrospect of twenty-two years of activity and faithfulness in the cause of her Master. Few blend so much tender cautiousness with so much vigorous energy, as did Sr. Sarah. To me, her memory is truly blessed.

Twenty-two years since, I listened to her faithful exposition of the word, while she chained large assemblies at the different campmeetings held that season; and many, many times since that period, has she edified the church with her gift, which was not exhortation, but a clear exposition of the word; closing with an ardent appeal to her hearers, eliciting their most affectionate interest.

Her untiring energy for her family, and the church of God, may have prostrated her naturally attenuated form sooner; but her works will follow her. While we mourn the loss of so excellent an example, and gift, we are comforted that in these last days, when inconsistency is written upon the lives of so many professors of religion, to think we can look retrospectively twenty-five years on here and there one, whose lives are consistent with a pure christianity.

Well, thank God for the hope we shall meet sister Sarah again in a very little while, and see her bloom in immortal beauty; for her Elder Brother is in possession of the Key that will unlock her deathly prison, and it must be that the time is almost due for him to apply it. Methinks I see her angel, waiting with longing expectation to escort her to the pearly portals of the New Jerusalem. Then, dear Sr.,

"we hope to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed."

Death.—Just as our paper was ready for the press, we received the sad intelligence that Bro. D. M. Hapscomb is dead.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. D. Wilkinson.

Bro. Grant:—The promise is, "the poor" shall "have the gospel preached to them." I have often thought how that promise was to be fulfilled as it regards myself, for I am one of that class. I am an old man, having seen almost threescore years. I embraced the religion of Jesus Christ when I was nineteen, and have tried to live a consistent christian ever since. About twelve years ago, I heard for the first time what is called here an Advent sermon. Brother and Sister Seymour came here, and preached the gospel of the kingdom nigh at hand. I gladly embraced the truth. Since they left, I have not heard a gospel sermon. I am alone. I stand as a beaten anvil to the strokes of the traditions of men, and am contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. I had not seen an Advent paper for ten years, until a few days ago, when a sister in Christ gave me the World's Crisis. In it I found some letters and sermons that gladdened my heart. I sat down and wept, and said truly the Lord has verified his promise, and sent the gospel to me. O how I wish I was able to take the World's Crisis, and pay for it in advance; but I cannot. I have got seven acres of corn and potatoes in the ground, and they look well. I think I could pay for it next fall. If there are christian friends in that place, that will advance ten cents apiece, enough to pay for the World's Crisis, and send it to me, it shall be like bread cast upon the waters. They shall find it after many days. I think it would be the means in the hand of God of doing a great deal of good here. I will read it to all that will hear it. The professors of religion are full of tradition. They have it preached to them every Sabbath.

I heard a minister say, when preaching not long since, that man personally was not guilty, neither punishable for any sin he committed. It was his spirit, or immortal soul, that was punishable, and then compared the man to a house of bad report, or ill-fame. It was not the house, he said, that was guilty of crime; it was the inhabitant of the house, which he compared to the spirit. The body was nothing but the house the man lived in. So you see what stuff I have to hear when I go to church. There are many here who do not believe in the resurrection of the body.

Your brother in Christ,

Nankin, Mich. A. D. Wilkinson.

From Bro. P. B. Manning.

Bro. Grant:—I have returned home from fulfilling my appointments. Notwithstanding my poor health, I have had a good free time in trying to hold up the truth before the people. The Spirit of God was with us. There are some good ones in every place that I visited. They are trying to hold on to the Lord and go through to the kingdom. O I do rejoice that Jesus is so soon to come and raise the dead, and change the living, and give them their inheritance in the kingdom.

O the wickedness there is in this world at this time, and it is on the increase every day. Look which way you will, and it does seem as if the evil spirits filled the whole world. Dear brethren, now is the time to watch and pray, lest you enter into temptation. We have got to stand in the judgment very soon. I do believe that Jesus will come in 1868. I cannot look at 1867. But, dear brethren, we must be ready and waiting; for death is on our track, and we are very likely to be cut down at any time; at home, or on the road, or in the meeting-house, or in your beds. How much need there is of a preparation to meet the Lord; but the people seem to be in a kind of stupor. My prayer is, that God will wake them up, and that very soon, or I fear they will all be lost.

Dear brethren, it is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. Yes, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying; but put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof."—Rom. 13: 11.

Dear brethren in Christ, do not forget me when you bow before God, that he will continue to raise me up to health again.

From your poor brother in Christ,

Goffstown, July 5th. B. P. Manning.

From Sr. M. M. Soper.

Bro. Grant:—I am thankful for the Crisis, that comes to us richly freighted with those precious truths for instruction and encouragement to many a lonely one, who, like ourselves, are isolated from those of like faith. May God grant you wisdom and strength, dear Bro., that you may be enabled to divide the word rightly, and be found giving meat to the little flock, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear to reward the faithful. Although deprived of the privilege of meeting with the household, we are joyful in hope, while faith points beyond these dark gathering clouds to a brighter day, when our conflicts will be over, the warfare ended, and the promise of our Savior to the waiting ones fulfilled.

O, then, dear brethren and sisters, if we

For the World's Crisis.

TRAVELS.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to give some encouraging news from C. W., having just returned from a four weeks' visit to the township of Howick, in Huron Co., some hundred and fifty miles from Buffalo. I was there last fall, as then noticed in the Crisis, and organized a church of ten members, ordaining Bro. Andrew Sims as their pastor. I was requested to visit them again last spring, and was greatly rejoiced to find that God had blessed the labors of Bro. Sims in the conversion of sinners during the winter and spring. One after another had come out very clearly, so that nine were baptized by him during the four weeks I was there. Of these, seven were young converts from among the youth, and two from the Congregational church. I baptized six last fall, who had been lately converted. Thus the blessed work of God's Spirit has been clearly manifested, and it is still going on. Some are weeping, like the woman at the feet of Jesus, and seeking for an evidence of pardon; and a general solemnity pervades in the neighborhood. I expect to hear soon of additions to the little flock. I preached in two new places in the township.

Advent views, especially on the doctrine of life only through Christ, seem to be spreading fast. Opposition exists every where; but the striking evidence that God blesses the gospel, as we preach it, is checking that opposition. Our more constant and fervent prayer should be that our Master would thus "stop the mouths of gainsayers" by the conversion of death-doomed mortals. By seeing that the heart, as well as the head, could be reached, I felt it duty to preach mostly on experimental religion, our sinful state, the work of the Spirit, and the evidence of a "good hope through grace." It is a year of God's special mercy to lost sinners, and controverted doctrines should be less dwelt upon than for a few years past, when the showers of God's grace have, in a great measure, been withheld, and only the intellect could seem to be reached by our preaching.

My heart has been crying glory to God for weeks for the long, long-prayed-for privilege of seeing sinners turning to God in heart where they hear God's whole truth, as we preach it; and hearing joyful young converts tell how they were called out of darkness into marvelous light; and hear them sing with tearful eyes and quivering lips the sweet old hymn—

> "O how happy are they,
> Who the Savior obey,
> And have laid up their treasures above."

It is cheering to teach old christians "the way of God more perfectly," when they will hear, and learn that "the new heavens and the new earth" are not to be begloomed by the burning and wailing of the lost; but it is far more reviving—

> "To see a prodigal return,
> To see an heir of glory born."

The Lord in mercy bless us all frequently with such soul-cheering sights. Amen.

This church was severely afflicted by the death of their much-beloved Deacon Milne, soon after it was formed; but their sorrows, and that of his faithful wife, have been much lessened by the addition of six of her own children to the church, and two of her sons' wives—three since his death; and I think that more will soon come in. The church is far out of the route of traveling of any of our preachers; but this humility and praying spirit of Bro. Sims, and his loving flock, will protect them from foes, and make them powerful in battling for truth.

Bro. Sims had the joy of baptizing three of his own children the first time he baptized. It is quite evident that one or more ministers will be raised up in this church. Brn. were liberal in taking a large number of tracts and books to give out in surrounding neighborhoods, besides those I had from the C. P. S. They take the Crisis and The Christian.

"BY ADAM ALL DIE."

It is claimed by some that the penalty of Adam's transgression is eternal "conscious existence in misery," and by others that it is eternal death, or annihilation. The former proposition has been too often and too thoroughly refuted, to occupy time and space in this connection; but with the latter we have more particularly to do. It being assumed that the Adamic death is eternal death, it is likewise assumed that there is an exception, and that all who being in Christ fall under that death will be raised up, and that those who die by Adam out of Christ, "will not rise," but forever "remain in the congregation of the dead." Hence we have taught us by some the doctrine of no resurrection of the unjustified.

Such a proposition, and with such an exception, in view of scripture teaching and the light of reason, is palpably absurd. If the penalty pronounced upon Adam had been really eternal death, no one coming under that penalty could ever have a resurrection, or ever see life, consequently if Jesus of Nazareth suffered for the Adamic race that penalty, he could never have risen, even though he had by that death redeemed all the rest of the human family. The fact that he who suffered the penalty for Adam's transgression, in place of Adam's race, rose from the dead, is conclusive that that penalty was not eternal death.

If we show, then, that one has been raised from the Adamic death, we show that that death is not eternal death, and if it be possible for one to be raised from it, it is possible for all to be raised. We see that by Adam death, but not eternal death, is entailed upon all his descendants, and it matters not whether they are as vile as the adversary of all good, or as pure, harmless and undefiled as Jesus of Nazareth; by Adam all die. This thought ought to satisfy all reasoning minds that the Adamic death is not, neither can it be a punishment for any of the sins of the present life, for we die that death whether we sin or not. What then is Adamic death? It is simply the penalty for the transgression of Adam, necessarily entailed upon his descendants, because of their partaking of his nature, being Adamic by generation from him, and is not the punishment of any subsequent transgression. If therefore a man, who is a sinner, dies that death and never rises, he is not punished for his sins by death, but only suffers by means of Adam. We are driven then to this conclusion, that if there be no resurrection of any but justified persons, there can be none but temporal punishments for the transgressions of the present life. But the fact that there is punishment threatened upon the race of Adam for the transgressions of the present life, to be inflicted in the future, and beyond the lifetime of multitudes of such sinners who have lived, and still live, proves that there must be punishment beyond the Adamic death. And as no man without a resurrection can suffer (death) twice, and if that future [illegible] be death, it follows that it must be a second death [illegible] than the Adamic death.—Gospel Banner.

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

We would say to those who wish to know the time when the great campmeeting at Wilbraham will begin, that it is appointed to commence Monday, Aug. 20th. It is also proposed to have preaching there on Lord's day, Aug. 19th. We expect a large number of tents will be put up on Friday and Saturday (Aug. 17th and 18th), and that our meeting on the 19th will be one of the best during the entire encampment. We recommend as many as can to be there on the 18th, and remain through the meeting. We expect a great and good meeting. We are anxious to see all our dear brethren and sisters once more at this great feast of tabernacles. It may be our last. Pray much for this meeting. Particulars soon.

"THE LAST TIMES."

In another column will be found an interesting article, under the above heading, from the Bishop of Oxford. We think his views are worthy of a careful consideration. Let the reader lay them up in his heart. These are truly "perilous times." Christian, gird on the armor, and be prepared for a terrible onset from the powers of darkness. The enemy of all righteousness is sowing the seeds of infidelity by the side of all waters, in all lands, and is making his greatest effort in this country, because here is where he finds his strongest opposition. Christians should rally to a man in defense of the "old paths,"—the faith once delivered to the saints. "Victory or death," should be the motto of every soldier of the cross. This is the hour for brave men in Christ to show their courage. Let good names, friends, homes, every thing, be laid on the altar, to be used for the glory of God.

"NOT A GOD OF THE DEAD."

Bro. Grant:—Will you please throw some light on the following passage of Scripture:—"Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living."—Luke 20: 37, 38.

Now did not Christ teach the Sadducees in the above language that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were living when God conversed with Moses from the bush? If so, must they not have been living in a separate state and condition from the natural body?

An Inquirer after Truth.

Lawrence, Ind.

It surprises us that people should think the foregoing scripture proves that man exists in a conscious state between death and the resurrection. We think it a very strong argument against such a view.

Let us examine the subject. The Savior was talking with the Sadducees, who denied "that there is any resurrection." They believed Moses' writings, and as he said nothing about the conscious existence of a soul or spirit after death, and as they had seen no plain passage declaring the resurrection of the dead, they had come to the conclusion that when a man died that was the end of him. With this belief in their minds, they asked the Savior what they considered a very hard question to answer—if there was to be a resurrection of the dead? and he met them with a quotation from Moses' writings, which clearly taught that the dead are to rise again: "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob; for he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him."

Thompson renders the last clause,—"for to him they are all alive." As Paul says, "As it is written, . . . God . . . quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were."—Rom. 4: 17. Says David, "A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night."—Ps. 90: 4. The time is so short between death and the resurrection, when compared with eternal life, that it is hardly worth considering; so that "to him they are all alive."

We have known some endeavor to make a point on the phrase, "are raised," in ver. 37, claiming that the present tense of the verb shows that they were then alive, when Jesus spake. The same account in Mark 12: 25 reads, "when they shall rise from the dead." The old translation of Wiclif reads:—"And that dead men rise again." Wm. Tyndale, Cranmer, and the Geneva versions read,—"And that the dead shall rise again." Scarlett renders it,—"Now that the dead are to be raised." Wakefield,—"Now concerning the dead that they are to be raised." [illegible]—"Now that the dead will arise."

Observe that the whole talk is about the DEAD; not something that [illegible] the popular theology, God is not a God of the bodies of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, because he is not a God of the dead, but their bodies are dead; hence their bodies will never have a resurrection, if the theology is correct. As it is said the souls never die, then of course, it follows that it is impossible to raise them from the dead. Thus the Savior is made to sustain Sadduceeism, instead of proving the resurrection of the dead. But he is endeavoring to show that the resurrection of the dead is taught to Moses at the bush.

Now let us look at his argument. At the time that God sent his angel to speak to Moses in the burning bush, he says, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." When he spoke that, these patriarchs were dead; and when dead, they need no God to provide for them, and administer to their comfort; consequently, as Jesus says, "God is not a God of the dead, but of the living." Then, it follows, as God has declared himself to be their God when they were dead, and yet is only a God of the living, they must live again, in order that he should be their God. Thus the Savior proves the resurrection of the dead to the Sadducees, from the writings of Moses.

I.

"God is not a God of the dead."
But Abraham is dead.
Therefore God is not the God of Abraham.
Not true.

II.

Living men are not subjects of the resurrection.
But Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob are living.
Therefore they cannot be raised from the dead.
Not true.

III.

"God is not the God of the dead," who live no more.
But Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will live again.
Therefore God is the "God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob."
This is true.

Important Foreign News.—It will be seen in the foreign news that the Prussians have gained a signal victory over the Austrians; and that the latter have ceded the kingdom of Venetia to Napoleon. This is a very important addition to the territorial dominion of the French Emperor. It gives him great power in Italy, and brings Austria at his feet. Thus far he is the principal gainer by the war, without the loss of a man. Truly he is a man of wonder. All the nations seem to be coming under his control. We shall wait with interest for the next movement.

BODY AND MIND.

The following from the Gospel Visitor is really a literary curiosity; or, perhaps more properly speaking, one of the theological wonders, mysteries, or "fables" (that's the word) of these last days. Read it, and see if you do not think so.

BODY AND MIND.

When we compare the two sublime pieces of mechanism we are struck with admiration. The body, which is animated by the mind, is scarcely analogous to it in any respect, though wholly dependent upon it for vigor and action. But when separated the body immediately meets with dissolution, and is no more. The body is well adapted to motion, and capable of being conveyed from place to place by the co-operation of the will and its peculiar structure. Though how tardy and impeded this bodily action, when compared with the flight of the mind! Why, it can travel a distance in the twinkling of an eye which would require the body, at the greatest speed imaginable, a period of more years than the drops in the ocean, or the sands of the sea shore. This coporeal frame is chained down upon earth by the law of gravitation, and can not rise above this earthly element any more than a river could ascend a steep mountain. But the active living principle within can range through space illimitable, and expatiate regions which perhaps would not sustain animal life a moment. The body is material and compound; the mind immaterial and uncompounded. The grave is the goal of the former; but the latter is destined to live through eternal ages. The former is doomed to dissolution as certain as the moral law is fixed and binding; but the latter is immortal as its Author. What a complicated structure is this clayey tenement, animated and kept alive by the immortal breath of life! It may be that sometimes the soul is despairing of this terrestrial stay and would fain be separated from the casket of clay to soar a disembodied spirit in regions of felicity: though however weary of giving life and action to its fast decaying tabernacle, so long as this ephemeral fabrication stands, the spirit must inhabit it and keep alive.

Again, the organic machinery of the body is impaired and its numerous functions refuse to act in unison, when the final termination is death, and the mind returns to God who gave it. Yet, again, the mind can kill the body by that great influence which it exerts over it in some instances. It can enslave the body and reduce it to a living skeleton, till not capable of sustaining life any longer. [illegible] aspect whatever. Though the same Author called both into existence, he designed the one to survive forever, while the other is only a temporary dwelling place for the probationary state of the mind, to stay only a few days. The "inward man" should therefore engage much of our attention, as it is this living principle which will either render eternal happiness or misery to its possessor in the bourne beyond the grave. We should bring the mind under due subjection to the will, and train it in intelligence and the knowledge of truth. The thinking faculty may be prone to evil, though the will may decline, and from this we are certain that the mind may be governed by the will. But should the mind incline to good and the will refuse, then the responsibility rests on the latter. The conscience will condemn the will in case of refusal to do right, though it may never condemn the mind. God never designed that this never-dying principle should be cast into dark despair, but that it should be refunded to him again with usury.

We know God to be the author of all good, and since he has given us the power of will over the mind, how carefully should we train and fit it for that high and holy calling! Now is the time to perform the three imperative duties which naturally devolve upon us:

1st. To pay Him that tribute so justly due to him. 2nd. To spare neither time nor means to save your soul. 3d. To love your neighbor as yourself; for to-morrow may bring you a summons to the grave, and deprive you of that eternal home prepared in heaven. O, may we attend to these important obligations ere death closes the scene of earthly prospects and we made to pine away an endless eternity. Know we not that God is lengthening out the brittle thread of life and extending his loving kindness and tender mercy from day to day that we may return from darkness to light? Soon the "doors of the Ark" will be closed, and the high rolling cloud-like wave will close over us forever.

Well, do you not think the foregoing ought to be put into the theological museum? Only think what a piece "of mechanism" the mind must be, to "travel a distance in the twinkling of an eye which would require the body, at the greatest speed imaginable, a period of more years than the drops in the ocean, or the sands of the seashore!" Truly we are lost in wonder! Only think what a time this wonderful "mechanism" would have while expatiating in "regions which perhaps would not sustain animal life a moment." This "immortal breath" must be a wonder to all beholders when it soars "a disembodied spirit" in such "regions of felicity." We should much prefer to enjoy the beauties of Eden restored, on the "new earth" which Peter looked for, which John saw in vision, and which the Lord promised, when he said, blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5: 5.

One might be led to think that the writer in the Visitor considered one of "the sublime pieces of mechanism" every thing in general, and nothing in particular. He calls it "the immortal breath," the "living principle," "the soul," "a disembodied spirit," "the mind," etc.

He says, "It is this living principle which will either render eternal happiness or misery to its possessor." We have yet to learn that man is only a "principle." A principle is not a being, but simply a law, or rule of action. We are aware that the demons, and their followers are teaching that there is no "personal God;" that he is nothing but "a principle in all matter," which is equivalent to denying any God at all; so, when one says that man, after death, is a "living principle," he might just as well say that each pain is a "living principle," and that when one dies, it goes to live with other pains, and "range through space illimitable, and expatiate regions which perhaps would not sustain animal life a moment."

The writer advances a new thought when he says:—"Should the mind incline to good and the will refuse, then the responsibility rests on the latter." We wonder if the writer believes the "will" is another man, or "living principle," distinct from "the mind?" Then he will have the body-man, the living-princle-man, and the "will-man, and how many more, we will not presume to say.

He goes on to say, "Since he (God) has given us the power of will over the mind, how carefully should we train and fit it for that high and holy calling." We would like to know what he means when he says, "how carefully should we train and fit it" (the mind,) for that high and holy calling." Who trains the mind,—the "it" of which he speaks? Does the word we represent our bodies? He then says, "to-morrow may bring you a summons to the grave and deprive you of that eternal home prepared in heaven." What does the "you" stand for? Why, he says, one who is to go to the grave, who might have gone to heaven. Does the mind go to the grave? This theology looks crooked.

THE MORAL SIGNS.

According to the Scriptures, "the last days" of the present dispensation are to be characterized by a great "falling away" among the the professed disciples of Christ; causing a cold state of religion, and a sad conformity to the world. We think no candid person, who has a correct knowledge of the nature of christianity, can doubt but that we are now living in just such a state of things as Paul said should prevail "in the last days." See 2 Tim. 3: 1–5.

In Dr. Seiss' interesting work on "The Apocalypse," he says:—

"When we survey the characteristics of our times,—the unrighteousness, the untruthfulness, the hypocrisy, the impiety, the crime, the hollow-heartedness, and the untold hidden iniquities which prevail in all circles of church, business and state; when we consider the wickednesses which are perpetrated by people who call themselves christians, and the shameless worldliness of professors of religion, and the wreck of all distinctive doctrinal belief, and the prostitutions of the house of God and the sacred desk itself to vanity, and politics, selfishness, sensuality, and base trickery, in the name of Jesus; when we look at the insubordination which is left to run riot in the great majority of so-called christian families, and the [illegible] with hell following in its train, and come to count up the [illegible] of those in our congregations whom we [illegible] confidently set down as true and [illegible] saints of God,—we are sometimes tempted, with the Psalmist to say, 'All men are liars,' and to doubt whether God has not resigned his dominion over mankind, and abandoned them to be drifted, by the whirlwinds of their own passions, to irremediable ruin. But, with all the hard things which we are in honesty and fairness compelled to write against the present population of Christendom, God has not left himself without witnesses, and still has his true people, who have not kissed their hands nor bowed their knees to the reigning idolatry of the times. Earthy and vile as the congest may be, there is gold in it, as there was an Enoch and a Noah in the generation before the flood, and a Lot even in Sodom itself. Amid all christianity's corruptions, there has always been some standing out against them. The sure ideal has never failed to produce some proximate realization of itself. Dreary as the annals of the church appear, both in prophetic and historic records, the student of them still finds his path skirted with spiritual verdure; and in the distant scenery, examples of faith, purity, love, heroism, devotion and obedience, are never once entirely out of view, the loveliest often being found in the by-paths, and encountered where they would be least expected. Even in the darkest eras, imbedded in neglected chronicles, noble names are to be found, sparkling with the radiance of every christian grace."

"ALL MEN ARE GODS."

Twenty-five years ago, who would have believed that a sentiment like the one expressed in the heading of this article would be extensively advocated by intelligent men and women; yet this is a fact. One has only to read the Spiritualists' literature of the day, to be satisfied that this is a leading doctrine among them. When the arch deceiver said to our first parents, "Ye shall be as gods," if you will only disobey the Lord, it seems almost incredible that they should be so blinded and seduced by Satan, as to claim to be gods themselves. But such is the fact. Men are now adopting also the philosophy of the old heathen, who also received their theology from the demons, as do the Spiritualists at the present day.

In the Banner of Light, June 9th, 1866, a writer from Montreal, C. E., says:—

"We have seen for some time past, or some years, that a revival of the ancient philosophy is taking place; therefore we take it for granted that a good portion of the human family are entering into the matured phase of their second age. . . . . There is no disguising the fact that the theological God, as an idea, is losing much of its power and influence over the intelligent masses, and that the spirit of inquiry is fast substituting in its stead, Universal Principles or Laws. . . . This Impersonal God, or Head Principle, is at all times assuming different phases of existence, demonstrating thereby that action is its constant condition. . . . . The time is coming, however, when the new converts will boldly assert, as of old, that all men are gods."

Verily, this is "the antichrist." It denies "the Father and the Son."

OLD THEOLOGY.

It will be found that the old writers and preachers, as a general thing, were not so far removed from the truth in relation to the state of the dead as are the modern teachers. The further we get from the days of Jesus and the apostles, the more of tradition and fable appears, until the latter now prevails to an alarming extent.

The following extract from an old volume of sermons of Dr. Watts, published in 1746, is worthy of being republished. The Dr. says:

"Among my papers, I have a speech spoken at a grave, which I transcribed almost fifty years ago, and which deserves to be saved from perishing. It was pronounced many years before at the funeral of a pious person, by a minister there present, supposed to be the Rev. Peter Story; and the subject of it being suited to this discourse, I thought it not improper to preserve it here. I. Watts.

Christian Friends:—Though sin entered into the world; and by sin, death; and so death passes upon all men, for that all have sinned; yet it seems not wholly suitable to our christian hope, to stand by and see the grave, with open mouth, take in and swallow down any part of a precious saint, and not bring some testimony against the devourer. And yet, that one witness may be in righteousness, we must first own, acknowledge, and accept of that good and serviceableness that is in it.

For through the death and resurrection of our dear Redeemer, death and the grave are become sweetened to us, and sanctified for us, so that death is but a sleep; the grave, through his lying down in it, and rising again, is become a bed of repose to them that are in him, and a safe and quiet hiding-place for his saints till the resurrection.

And in this respect, we do for ourselves, and for this our dearly beloved in the Lord, accept of thee, O grave, and readily deliver up her body to thee; it is a body that hath been weakened, and wearied with long affliction and anguish; we freely give it unto thee; receive it and let it have in thee a quiet rest from all its labors; for thus we read it written of thee, 'There the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.'

Besides this, it is, O grave, a body that hath been sweetly embalmed by a virtuous, pious, peaceable conversation, by several inward openings and out-pourings of the spirit of life, by much meekness in strong trials and afflictions. Receive it, and let it enjoy in thee, what was once deeply impressed on her own heart, and in due season written out with her own hand, 'a Sabbath in the grave.' For thus also we find it recorded of our Lord, and her Lord, that he enjoyed the rest of his last Sabbath in the grave.

But we know thee, O grave, to be also a devourer; and yet can freely deliver up the body unto thee. There was in it a contracted corruptibility, dishonor and weakness; take them as thy proper prey; they belong to thee; and we would not withhold them from thee. Freely swallow them up forever, that they may appear no more.

Yet know, O grave, there is in the body, considered as once united to such a soul, a relation to the Lord of life; and this thou must not, cannot dissolve nor destroy. But know, and even before thee, and over thee, be it spoken, that there is a season hastening wherein we shall expect it again from thee in incorruption, honor and power.

We now sow it into thee in dishonor, but expect it again returned from thee in glory; we now sow it into thee in weakness, but expect it again in power; we now sow it into thee a natural body, we look for it again from thee a spiritual body.

And when thou hast fulfilled the end for which the Prince of life, who took thee captive, made thee to serve, then shalt thou who hast devoured, be thyself also swallowed up [illegible]

NEW BOOKS.

The Bible Text-Book: or the Principal Texts relating to the Persons, Places, and Subjects occuring in the Holy Scriptures. With two Maps and a variety of useful Tables. American Tract Society, New York.

This is a very useful little work of 208 pages, designed to render assistance to ministers, teachers, heads of families, and others, in the study of the Bible. It does not presume to be free from mistakes or imperfections, nor does it pretend, in so small a volume, to embrace every subject, nor all the texts that treat upon each subject. Yet it is a work of much labor and care, and will be a valuable help to those who desire a work of this kind for the pocket, or have not the means to purchase one of greater size and completeness.

For sale at this office, by mail, for 40 cents.

Czechowski's Thrilling Narrative.

For the World's Crisis.

SAD NEWS.

Can it be? Yes, it must be so, our dear sister Sarah Higgins is dead! Yesterday was the first we had been apprised that so sad an event was even feared or expected. But we read it in our dear family paper, chronicled by her bereaved companion. May the Lord sustain him and his motherless children, while drinking so bitter a cup. At first a shock of sadness was the result of this intelligence, and then a retrospect of twenty-two years of activity and faithfulness in the cause of her Master. Few blend so much tender carefulness with so much vigorous energy, as did Sr. Sarah. To me, her memory is truly blessed. Twenty-two years since, I listened to her faithful exposition of the word, while she [illegible] large assemblies in the [illegible] and many times since that period, has she edified the church with her gift, which was not exhortation, but a clear exposition of the word; closing with an ardent appeal to her hearers, eliciting their most affectionate interest.

Her untiring energy for her family, and the church of God, may have prostrated her naturally attenuated form sooner; but her works will follow her. While we mourn the loss of so excellent an example, and gift, we are comforted that in these last days, when inconsistency is written upon the lives of so many professors of religion, to think we can look retrospectively twenty-five years on here and there one, whose lives are consistent with a pure christianity.

Well, thank God for the hope we shall meet sister Sarah again in a very little while, and see her bloom in immortal beauty; for her Elder Brother is in possession of the Key that will unlock her deathly prison, and it must be that the time is almost due for him to apply it. Methinks I see her angel, waiting with longing expectation to escort her to the pearly portals of the New Jerusalem. Then, dear Sr.,

> "We hope to greet thee,
> Where no farewell tear is shed."

Death.—Just as our paper was ready for the press, we received the sad intelligence that Bro. D. M. Hapscomb is dead.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. D. Wilkinson.

Bro. Grant:—The promise is, "the poor" shall "have the gospel preached to them." I have often thought how that promise was to be fulfilled as it regards myself, for I am one of that class. I am an old man, having seen almost threescore years. I embraced the religion of Jesus Christ when I was nineteen, and have tried to live a consistent christian ever since. About twelve years ago, I heard for the first time what is called here an Advent sermon. Brother and Sister Seymour came here, and preached the gospel of the kingdom nigh at hand. I gladly embraced the truth. Since they left, I have not heard a gospel sermon. I am alone. I stand as a beaten anvil to the strokes of the traditions of men, and am contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. I had not seen an Advent paper for ten years, until a few days ago, when a sister in Christ gave me the World's Crisis. In it I found some letters and sermons that gladdened my heart. I sat down and wept, and said truly the Lord has verified his promise, and sent the gospel. O how I wish I was able to take the World's Crisis, and pay for it in advance; but I cannot. I have got seven acres of corn and potatoes in the ground, and they look well. I think I could pay for it next fall. If there are christian friends in that place, that will advance ten cents apiece, enough to pay for the World's Crisis, and send it to me, it shall be like bread cast upon the waters. They shall find it after many days. I think it would be the means in the hand of God of doing a great deal of good here. I will read it to all that will hear it. The professors of religion are full of tradition. They have it preached to them every Sabbath.

I heard a minister say, when preaching not long since, that man personally was not guilty, neither punishable for any sin he committed. It was his spirit, or immortal soul, that was punishable; and then compared the man to a house of bad report, or ill-fame. It was not the house, he said, that was guilty of crime; it was the inhabitant of the house, which he compared to the spirit. The body was nothing but the house the man lived in. So you see what stuff I have to hear when I go to church. There are many here who do not believe in the resurrection of the body.

Your brother in Christ,

Nankin, Mich. A. D. Wilkinson.

From Bro. P. B. Manning.

Bro. Grant:—I have returned home from fulfilling my appointments. Notwithstanding my poor health, I have had a good free time in trying to hold up the truth before the people. The Spirit of God was with us. There are some good ones in every place that I visited. They are trying to hold on to the Lord and go through to the kingdom. O I do rejoice that Jesus is so soon to come and raise the dead, and change the living, and give them their inheritance in the kingdom.

O the wickedness there is in this world at this time, and it is on the increase every day. Look which way you will, and it does seem as if the evil spirits filled the whole world. Dear brethren, now is the time to watch and pray, lest you enter into temptation. We have got to stand in the judgment very soon. I do believe that Jesus will come in 1868. I cannot look at 1867. But, dear brethren, we must be ready and waiting; for death is on our track, and we are very likely to be cut down at any time; at home, or on the road, or in the meeting-house, or in your beds. How much need there is of a preparation to meet the Lord; but the people seem to be in a kind of stupor. My prayer is, that God will wake them up, and that very soon, or I fear they will all be lost.

Dear brethren, it is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. Yes, "the night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying; but put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make not provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof."—Rom. 13: 11.

Dear brethren in Christ, do not forget me when you bow before God, that he will continue to raise me up to health again.

From your poor brother in Christ,

Goffstown, July 5th. B. P. Manning.

From Sr. M. M. Soper.

Bro. Grant:—I am thankful for the Crisis, that comes to us richly freighted with those precious truths for instruction and encouragement to many a lonely one, who, like ourselves, are isolated from those of like faith. May God grant you wisdom and strength, dear Bro., that you may be enabled to divide the word rightly, and be found giving meat to the little flock, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear to reward the faithful. Although deprived of the privilege of meeting with the household, we are joyful in hope, while faith points beyond these dark gathering clouds to [illegible] O, dear brethren and sisters, if we [illegible]

would walk the streets of the city of our God, let us be faithful. Although we may suffer persecution, and our trials and afflictions may be many, shall we murmur, knowing that every Son whom the Father loveth he chastens? and when he favors us with special mercies, he sees it necessary to send afflictions to teach us our dependence and keep us humble, that we cleave not to the earth? Then let us endure temptation, and with meekness and patience "earnestly contend for the faith," and gird on the whole armor; for many are the perils that surround the humble child of God in these times, in which professed christians, with few exceptions, seem to remember no more the adorning, "even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit" of those professing godliness, and are vieing with the world in all its fashions and allurements, and turning a deaf ear to the truths of the gospel, while they are adhering to traditions of men, and being locked in the security of worldly slumber, and discerning not the signs of the times. To them, "all things continue as they were from the beginning. In vain do they proclaim "peace and safety." Anon, "sudden destruction cometh." O may they give heed to the counsel, to buy gold tried in the fire, that they may be rich; and white raiment, that they may be clothed; and, before it shall be for ever too late, may they see that all things are portentous of a coming storm, and that "the end of all things is at hand." "Therefore let us not sleep as do others," but let us be "sober and watch unto prayer," knowing that "the night is far spent," and "the morning cometh," the radiant morn, that will usher in that day of joy and gladness, to which the way-worn pilgrim looks forward with joyful anticipations; for then will he exchange poverty for riches, the cross for the crown; and earth, with all its cares and sorrows, for paradise in all its beauty; and have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city; and stand, together with all of earth's ransomed ones, on Mount Zion, with songs of everlasting joy. Brethren and sisters, pray for us, that our faith fail not. M. M. Soper.

Orland, Me.

From Bro. J. M. Muhlig.

Bro. Grant:—Allow me to answer the many inquiries of brethren abroad in reference to the change of my views on the resurrection of the wicked. 1st. I have never changed my views on that subject. 2nd. I never preached the non-living of the wicked. 3rd. I never believed it. 4th. I believe in "a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." "And as is the earthy, such the earthy shall be in the resurrection; and as is the heavenly, such the heavenly shall be in the resurrection." This last rendering I find in a very old translation, and I like it much. 5th. All that "sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" when Jesus comes, and they shall reign with him on the earth, and over the nations during the times of restitution of all things, spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began. 6th. The wicked dead will be raised to mortal life at the end of the thousand years (or restitution times); and as they in their mortal life sowed to the flesh; so, in mortality, after the resurrection, shall they reap corruption. They that have done evil shall come forth to meet the consequences of their evil doings, which is to be cast into the lake of fire and be burned up, which is "the second death." Thus they shall become ashes under the saints' feet; "be as though they had not been." Then the last enemy, the devil (not an imaginary devil, or something called the devil and Satan, but the one which is the devil and Satan), shall be destroyed, and all things subdued and put under Christ.

The kingdom is then delivered up for the Father's approval, and God becomes all and in all, and the new heavens and new earth obtain. The Metropolitan city, the New Jerusalem, is established, and the tabernacle of God is to be with men, and he will be their God, and we, if faithful, will be his people. Then the earth will be filled with his glory, and righteousness fill the earth as the waters fill the sea.

"Ride on, Jesus, oh, ride on,"

and hasten the glad time. Amen.

Natic, Mass. J. M. Muhlig.

From Bro. E. Owen.

Bro. Grant:—I think the Barnes' Hall church, of this city, adopted a very sensible way of spending the anniversary of our National Independence. Instead of patronizing the Horse Trots, Regatta, Theatres, etc., etc., about one hundred of us repaired to Wilbraham (the fare having been reduced), and passed the day in the service of our King. About sixty testimonies were given at our morning love-feast; nearly all breathing earnest longings for "deeper work," "higher life," "clean hearts," and similar sentiments. Many pronounced it one of the best seasons ever enjoyed on the mountain. Two arose for prayers. We felt verily "God is in this place." Bro. Ladd caught the inspiration of Freedom, —not particularly from the events the day commemorated, but from the injunction of the apostle, that we stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ maketh free. We felt the word was rightly divided. Bro. P. S. Butler occupied the afternoon. The good Spirit helped. Bro. B. is much beloved for his works' sake in the Lord. Stirring exhortations followed. All present were of the opinion it was the best celebration of Independence we ever attended, and proposed, should we pass another 4th of July on the "old earth," to do likewise. A vote was taken favoring a different time for adjourning our annual meeting, there being but one sentiment expressed on the subject.

Springfield, Mass. E. Owen.

From Bro. D. N. Chadsey.

Bro. Grant:—It occurred to me a few moments since that perhaps some of the beloved brethren and sisters, with whom I have formerly associated, would be glad to hear a word or two from me. I am still striving to do the will of our blessed Lord. I am glad at this time that I can say my hope in God is strong; for I truly believe that, when Jesus comes, I shall be accepted of him. Dear ones in the Lord, be faithful, be strong, be patient, be kind, be charitable, be fervent in spirit; rejoice in hope, be patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer, distributing to the necessities of saints, given to hospitality. Bless them that persecute you, bless and curse not; remembering your reward will be great in heaven; knowing that for the resurrection of the dead we are called in question. But our hope is strong; for we know that He who has promised is able, for all things are his,—whether principalities, or powers, or things present, or things to come, or height, or depth,—all are yours. So why be shaken? why feel sad? why droop and die? for soon our Master will come with all his shining ones, and the prophets of old, and the patriarchs of long ago. The sleeping millions of slumbering ones will come forth, blooming with immortality and eternal life. Then Isaiah's dead men will live; Ezekiel's bones will come forth; and patient Job will answer the call of the Holy One, and come forth to everlasting life. Yes, bless the Lord. How glad I am of the prospect. I can say with the apostle Peter, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercies, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.—1 Pet. 1: 3. All our loved ones then will sing. All the saints of God will reign with him in perfect peace. Yours in hope of eternal life,

Sutton, July 2nd. D. N. Chadsey.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

Bro. Grant:—I take up my pen to address the children through the Crisis. I feel weak, but wish to tell them the Lord is good. Praise his name evermore. It is not guess work with me, my brethren, but it is knowledge. I know I have passed from death unto life, because I love the brethren. Let me tell you I have been tested and tried so much, I feared that I should be any thing but good. I got all tried up because it seemed the church forsook me in the greatest affliction that I ever passed through. I could not go to meeting in four long months. I became very hungry for hearing the word of the Lord. But, thanks be to the Lord, I had my desires granted far beyond my expectations, of the first day of July, by hearing Bro. J. T. Dixon.

And on the 4th of July, the pilgrims came from New Preston, Morris and Bethlehem, and filled our dwelling. O what shall I say? what can I say? Language would fail me; and had I given way to my feelings, I should have hid behind the curtain and wept, feeling like one of old, not worthy that they should come under my roof; for what have I done to deserve all this? when will they be recompensed for their pains taken, and their labors of love? Methinks not till Jesus comes, and that will be soon. I am so glad the last tear will soon be shed; sorrow will be gone from the earth; no more sickness, pain, nor death; all, all will be over.

The meeting was one long to be remembered. Preaching by Bro. Dixon, from Matt. 11: 27. It was a good and stirring discourse to the weary traveler, an alarming one to the backslider, and an inviting one to the poor sinner. I feel more encouraged to be a pilgrim and stranger than ever. It repaid for all the past. My spiritual strength was renewed fourfold. The day could not have been spent any better. It will be remembered as long as time lasts, and I trust fruits of the meeting will be seen.

O glory to God evermore; my heart is full. Clouds and mist and darkness have all passed away, and God's sunshine I know I feel, and a peace that passeth understanding. Soon the saints will meet to part no more.

As they left, one after another, my heart adopted the language of the poet,—

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love."

Though sundered far, by faith we meet around one common mercy-seat.

Roxbury, Ct. Susan E. Teeple.

From Bro. H. S. Mitchell.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord is at work in Bristol. Some eight or ten have found peace in believing, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Six of them have been baptized, and the interest is good at this present time.

The preaching brethren who wish to preach at this place can find a pilgrim home at Bro John Erskine's, Joshua House's, and Robert Tibbett's; where you will find a hearty welcome. H. S. Mitchell.

Bowdoinham, July 6th, 1866.

☞ Will Mr. O. W. Gates, the Connecticut soldier, who was detailed as Ward Master in the rebel hospital at Florence, S. C., please give his post office address in the "World's Crisis," and oblige the friends of one of the prisoners? J. S. Chickering.

Obituaries.

Loomis. Died in Bristol, Ct., June 20th, 1866, Mary H. Loomis, wife of Elder Oliver Loomis, of South Windsor, aged thirty-three years and twenty-four days.

Suddenly, by paralysis, terminated by apoplexy, my last remaining sister is taken, and I alone am left of our little family. My dear sister came to visit me, greatly desiring to attend some of our good meetings here. She was taken with paralysis in less than one hour after we met, and lived four hours and a half. We buried her in the little lot in Hartford, where lie dear parents, and a dear sister, buried only six months ago; all waiting in hope, through grace, for a glorious resurrection.

"She's asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep."

Be ye also ready. Anna S. Hough.

Wait. Died in Washington, Erie Co., Pa., May 8th, 1866, of relapse in scarlet fever, Johnnie Wait, son of Leroy and Charlotte Wait, aged eleven years.

Johnnie was a good boy, and parents and friends trust he was one of the little ones who believe in Jesus. Believing that "it is well with the child," the afflicted ones wait hopefully for Jesus, "the resurrection and the life," to appear again, when he will rescue the captives in the enemy's land, and "we shall be ever with the Lord." Amen.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

London, July 1st.

Late Berlin papers claim decisive victories over the Austrians, on the 27th and 28th, near Nachod and Frankenstein.

The Austrian losses are stated at from three thousand to four thousand, and two thousand prisoners. There were great rejoicings at Berlin.

At Trautenau the Austrians are said to have lost 3000 or 4000 killed and wounded; the Prussians about 1000. At Munchengratz the Austrian losses are stated at 2000. The Prussians claim to have captured about 6000 prisoners, numerous trophies, guns, etc.

There was great enthusiasm and rejoicing at Berlin. The inhabitants presented an address to and serenaded the King.

The Hanoverian army, on the 27th, surrendered at discretion to the Prussians. The officers retained their side arms; the men were dismissed to their homes.

The Federal army at or near Frankfort are on the march. A battle was anticipated.

The Italians changed their plans of operations. There are no further collisions in Italy. Garibaldi is at Lake Idro.

Threatening demonstrations have taken place in London among the lower orders on the reform question.

It is reported that France would not long remain quiet. Active intervention is reported to be already agreed upon.

Pardubits, June 29. The Prussians were yesterday completely defeated by the Austrian forces under Goblents, leaving behind one-third of their army killed or wounded. They withdrew to Prussian territory towards Glats.

After occupying Jicin yesterday the Prussians were attacked by the cavalry division of Gen. Edelsheim. They were driven out of Jicin and repulsed towards Turnau. In consequence of this defeat the Prussians last night evacuated Melnik, Danba, and Leipa and withdrew in great haste to Meima.

The Prussian losses by Gen. Edelshim's attack were enormous. The strategic operations of the Austrian army were completely successful, and the junction of Prince Frederick Charles with the army of Silesia was prevented.

The Austrian losses in the battles of the last three days are estimated at scarcely two thousand killed and wounded. The Prussian losses are at least equal.

The Austrians have forced their way through Tavole Pass and into the valley of Canottica.

The headquarters of the Italian army are at Torre Melaberg.

Liverpool July 5th, Londonderry 6th.

The Prussians in Bohemia are making victorious progress.

Gitschin was taken by storm. The Prussian loss was not inconsiderable. The Austrian loss was four thousand.

It is announced that the Austrian total loss, up to the present, is 30,000 to 40,000.

The Austrian Hanover, Ramming and Martine regiments were wholly annihilated, and the 18th Jager battalion were annihilated to the last man.

A Gitschin telegram of the 2d, states that the Austrians had lost 15,000 prisoners, since the 26th, and 20,000 killed and wounded.

The Austrian army has retired to a strong position, the soldiers are discouraged and the army is in a state of dissolution.

The desertion of Italian soldiers is increasing.

ITALY.

The Austrians claim the capture of 4000 Italians, and fourteen guns.

The Morning Post thinks that a Congress will shortly assemble and that the French Government will propose a general disarmament.

In the commercial circles of London, peace is regarded as virtually concluded.

A great battle took place on the 3d near Sudawa, resulting in the Prussians obtainin a great and a complete victory.

The Prussians took 14,000 prisoners.

The Austrians sent in a flag of truce.

Austria has agreed to cede Venetia to Napoleon and accept his mediation. Napoleon immediately communicated with the belligerents.

The Paris Moniteur of the 5th makes the following announcement:

"An important event has just occurred. After having maintained the honor of his arms in Italy, the Emperor of Austria, concurring in the ideas expressed in the Emperor Napoleon's letter of June 11th, to his Minister of Foreign Affairs, cedes Venetia to the French Emperor and accepts his mediation for the conclusion of peace. The Emperor Napoleon hastens to respond to the summons and immediately communicated with the Kings of Prussia and Italy in order to obtain an armistice."

The Austrian Field Marshal Vons Gablenz arrived at the Prussian Head-quarters at Haritz, near Gitzchen, on the evening of the 4th with a flag of truce.

The battle of the 3d near Sudawa was a great affair. It resulted in the complete defeat of the Austrians.

The Prussians were commanded by the king in person.

They met the Austrians, under Benedek, between Horitez and Konigsgratz.

The battle lasted twelve hours. Until 10 A. M. the battle was favorable to the Austrians, but after that hour the advantages were with the Prussians. At two o'clock, P. M., after an obstinate defence, the Prussians carried by storm the strong position of the Austrians. After which the Austrians were quickly driven out of other positions, and by seven A. M. the Austrians were in full retreat to Koningsgratz, pursued by the Prussian cavalry.

"The suddenness and magnitude of the Austrian calamity are too overpowering for any man to speculate on the possible consequences on the destinies of the Austrian empire. With the exception of a few fortresses of no more avail in modern warfare to stay the triumphant progress of a victorious army than Josefstadt and Tannengratz have proved to be. Benedek has nothing in his rear but open country; nothing between him and the capital but a vast smooth battle-field where the cannon, the cavalry and the dread needle gun of the Prussians will have free play.

The Austrians have done enough for the honor of their arms. They must now provide for the safety of the State, and this can hardly be done by prolonged resistance. The most illustrious names in the Empire are among the dead and wounded.

The King of Prussia is in camp, and the Emperor of Austria is not very far from Benedek's headquarters. Let there be at Pardubitz, or at Olmutz, such an interview as there was after Austerlitz, and after Solferino. Better terms than Austria may obtain now will certainly not be granted to her after two or three months protracted struggle has added to the fuel of hostile passions."

DOMESTIC.

Important Order from Gen. Grant.

Headquarters of the Army,
Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, July 1, 1866.

General Order No. 24.

Department, district, and post commanders in the States lately in rebellion, are hereby directed to arrest all persons who have been, or may hereafter be, charged with the commission of crimes and offences against officers, agents, citizens, and inhabitants of the United States, irrespective of color, in cases where the civil authorities have failed, neglected, or are unable to arrest and bring such parties to trial, and to detain them in military confinement until such time as a proper judicial tribunal may be ready and willing to try them. A strict and prompt enforcement of this order is required. By command of Lieut. Gen. Grant.

(Signed) E. D. Townsend,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The Resignation of Postmaster General Dennison.

Washington, July 12. It is positively ascertained that Postmaster General Dennison yesterday tendered his resignation to the President. This was done in writing. The reason, as stated by Mr. Dennison himself, is a difference in political views. It will be recollected that he was President of the Union Republican Convention which renominated Mr. Lincoln. Never intending otherwise than to adhere to the party whose principles it represented, and as the call for a National Convention at Philadelphia is in antagonism to that organization, there was no other course left to him than to retire from the Cabinet, while his personal relations with the President are undisturbed and friendly. The separation is entirely because of a conflict of political views.

Further Resignations. Mr. Speed has formally tended to the President his resignation as Attorney General. According to the reports of that gentleman's friends, his letter is even more emphatic in his disapproval of the President's policy than that of Mr. Dennison's. The resignation of Secretary Harlan is now an event to be daily expected.

Washington July 14. The President this afternoon nominated to the Senate A. W. Randall, now First Assistant, to be Postmaster General, in place of Mr. Dennison, resigned.

ITEMS.

☞ The number of Bibles issued by the American Bible Society during the fifty years of its continuation, is 21,400,000, distributed in regard to time as follows: First ten years, 480,000; second, 1,540,000; third, 2,500,000; fourth, 6,005,000; fifth, 10,000,000. There are in connection with the present society 5,232 auxiliaries, beside two recently added in Tennessee composed of freedmen. Seventy-two editions in forty-three languages have been published.

☞ A great many persons are at a loss to know how to dispose of ragged and mutilated currency that accumulates on their hands. It is the easiest thing in the world, and without any expense. When you get three dollars' worth on hand, put it in a small package, pin a paper band around it, with your name, post-office address, and amount; then put it in an envelope and address it to the "Treasury of the United States, Washington, D. C." In a few days you will receive new currency in return. It goes and returns free of postage.

☞ What do you do with soap-suds? Although generally deemed only fit for being run into the common sewer in the easiest and most expeditious manner possible, they are, nevertheless, highly beneficial vegetable feeders, as well as useful insect preventives. Hence, they should never be wasted, especially by those having gardens; their application to the ground, whether in winter or summer, will show beneficially not only on berry bushes, shrubs, border flowers, but even window pot-plants; while if poured or syringed over roses, cabbages, etc., they will prevent, or at least mitigate, the mischievous doings of the green fly and caterpillar.—Scottish Farmer.

☞ John Wesley preached, on an average, fifteen sermons a week. Instead of breaking down under this task, he wrote, when seventy-three years old, that he was far more able to preach than when three and twenty. His brow was then smooth, his complexion ruddy, and his voice strong and clear, so that an audience of thirty thousand could hear him without difficulty. This vigor he ascribed to continual travel, early rising, good sleep, and an even temper.

☞ Stephens, the great Fenian, made a speech in Boston, on Tuesday evening, in which he said that he then and there bound the Irish race to action, to the final battle between England and Ireland, on Irish soil, this year. "I solemnly declare to you," said he, "that sometime this year I shall myself be on Irish soil to meet whatever may be before me."

☞ A report from Cozzolini, the chief guide of Vesuvius, states that the mountain exhibits signs of disturbance. The small cone recently ejected stones into the air, and on the large cone two new mouths were formed. From the small cone a considerable body of lava flowed into and filled up the large crater.

☞ The Rev. Mr. Dean was arrested in Cass County, Mo., for preaching without taking the oath. He is now in jail at Independence, and refuses to give bail. Seventy-five preachers have been arrested under the new Constitution.

☞ A Paris writer says the Emperor has had private wires attached to the different telegraps, and sends private telegrams with his own hands to Count Bismarck at Berlin, and Gen. La Marmora at Florence.

☞ Recent reports render it certain that the fruit crops in Central Georgia and Alabama will be a failure. There may be half the usual quantity of apples and pears, but peaches and grapes are destroyed.

☞ A man died of joy the other day in Paris, on hearing that he had been made heir to £1000.

J. Couch is expected, and others (by this) are invited to come to preach the word. We would say to all come. Not only to dedicate the house, but our hearts anew to the Lord.

T. W. Piper.

Universalism.

Having formerly had seven years experience in Universalism, thereby knowing some of its workings, I desire to do what little I can in battling against this great error. I shall be glad to speak on that subject wherever doors may be opened, and, at the same time, circulate that unanswerable argument against Universalism,—"Universalism Exposed from the Inner Temple," now issued in tract form by the Adv. Chr. Pub. Society.

Address W. C. Stone, Crisis Office, Boston.

Hereafter (D. V.) I shall preach at Danielsonville, Ct., on the second and fourth Sundays of every month; and at Abington, Ct., on the first and third Sundays of every month. Friends interested in these meetings will please cut this notice out and preserve it for future reference.

would walk the streets of the city of our God, let us be faithful. Although we may suffer persecution, and our trials and afflictions may be many, shall we murmur, knowing that every Son whom the Father loveth he chasteneth? and when he favors us with special mercies, he sees it necessary to send afflictions to teach us our dependence and keep us humble, that we cleave not to the earth? Then let us endure temptation, and with meekness and patience "earnestly contend for the faith," and gird on the whole armor; for many are the perils that surround the humble child of God in these times, in which professed christians, with few exceptions, seem to remember no more the adorning, "even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit" of those professing godliness, and are vieing with the world in all its fashions and allurements, and turning a deaf ear to the truths of the gospel, while they are adhering to traditions of men, and being locked in the security of worldly slumber, and discerning not the signs of the times. To them, "all things continue as they were from the beginning. In vain do they proclaim "peace and safety." Anon, "sudden destruction cometh." O may they give heed to the counsel, to buy gold tried in the fire, that they may be rich; and white raiment, that they may be clothed; and, before it shall be for ever too late, may they see that all things are portentous of a coming storm, and that "the end of all things is at hand." "Therefore let us not sleep as do others," but let us be "sober and watch unto prayer," knowing that "the night is far spent," and "the morning cometh," the radiant morn, that will usher in that day of joy and gladness, to which the way-worn pilgrim looks forward with joyful anticipations; for then will he exchange poverty for riches, the cross for the crown; and earth, with all its cares and sorrows, for paradise in all its beauty; and have right to the tree of life, and enter in through the gates into the city; and stand, together with all of earth's ransomed ones, on Mount Zion, with songs of everlasting joy. Brethren and sisters, pray for us, that our faith fail not. M. M. Soper.

Orland, Me.

From Bro. J. M. Muhlig.

Bro. Grant:—Allow me to answer the many inquiries of brethren abroad in reference to the change of my views on the resurrection of the wicked. 1st. I have never changed my views on that subject. 2nd. I never preached the non-being of the wicked. 3rd. I never believed it. 4th. I believe in "a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." "And as is the earthy, such the earthy shall be in the resurrection; and as is the heavenly, such the heavenly shall be in the resurrection." This last rendering I find in a very old translation, and I like it much. 5th. All that "sleep in Jesus will God bring with him" when Jesus comes, and they shall reign with him on the earth, and over the nations during the times of restitution of all things, spoken of by all the holy prophets since the world began. 6th. The wicked dead will be raised to mortal life at the end of the thousand years (or restitution times); and as they in their mortal life sowed to the flesh; so, in mortality, after the resurrection, shall they reap corruption. They that have done evil shall come forth to meet the consequences of their evil doings, which is to be cast into the lake of fire and be burned up, which is "the second death." Thus they shall become ashes under the saints' feet; "be as though they had not been." Then the last enemy, the devil (not an imaginary devil, or something called the devil and Satan, but the one which is the devil and Satan), shall be destroyed, and all things subdued and put under Christ.

The kingdom is then delivered up for the Father's approval, and God becomes all and in all, and the new heavens and new earth obtain. The Metropolitan city, the New Jerusalem, is established, and the tabernacle of God is to be with men, and he will be their God, and we, if faithful, will be his people. Then the earth will be filled with his glory, and righteousness fill the earth as the waters fill the sea.

"Ride on, Jesus, oh, ride on,"

and hasten the glad time. Amen.

Natic, Mass. J. M. Muhlig.

From Bro. E. Owen.

Bro Grant:—I think the Barnes' Hall church, of this city, adopted a very sensible way of spending the anniversary of our National Independence. Instead of patronizing the Horse Trots, Regatta, Theatres, etc., etc., about one hundred of us repaired to Wilbraham (the fare having been reduced), and passed the day in the service of our King. About sixty testimonies were given at our morning love-feast; nearly all breathing earnest longings for "deeper work," "higher life," "clean hearts," and similar sentiments. Many pronounced it one of the best seasons ever enjoyed on the mountain. Two arose for prayers. We felt verily "God is in this place." Bro. Ladd caught the inspiration of Freedom,—not particularly from the events the day commemorated, but from the injunction of the apostle, that we stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ maketh free. We felt the word was rightly divided. Bro. P. S. Butler occupied the afternoon. The good Spirit helped. Bro. B. is much beloved for his works' sake in the Lord. Stirring exhortations followed. All present were of the opinion it was the best celebration of Independence we ever attended, and proposed, should we pass another 4th of July on the "old earth," to do likewise. A vote was taken favoring a different time for adjourning our annual meeting, there being but one sentiment expressed on the subject.

Springfield, Mass. E. Owen.

From Bro. D. N. Chadsey.

Bro. Grant:—It occurred to me a few moments since that perhaps some of the beloved brethren and sisters, with whom I have formerly associated, would be glad to hear a word or two from me. I am still striving to do the will of our blessed Lord. I am glad at this time that I can say my hope in God is strong; for I truly believe that, when Jesus comes, I shall be accepted of him. Dear ones in the Lord, be faithful, be strong, be patient, be kind, be charitable, be fervent in spirit; rejoice in hope, be patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer, distributing to the necessities of saints; given to hospitality. Bless them that persecute you, bless and curse not; remembering your reward will be great in heaven; knowing that for the resurrection of the dead we are called in question. But our hope is strong; for we know that He who has promised is able; for all things are his,—whether principalities, or powers, or things present, or things to come, or height, or depth,—all are yours. So why be shaken? why feel sad? why droop and die? for soon our Master will come with all his shining ones, and the prophets of old, and the patriarchs of long ago. The sleeping millions of slumbering ones will come forth, blooming with immortality and eternal life. Then Isaiah's dead men will live; Ezekiel's bones will come forth; and patient Job will answer the call of the Holy One, and come forth to everlasting life. Yes, bless the Lord. How glad I am of the prospect. I can say with the apostle Peter, Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which, according to his abundant mercies, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.—1 Pet. 1 : 3. All our loved ones then will sing. All the saints of God will reign with him in perfect peace. Yours in hope of eternal life,

Sutton, July 2nd. D. N. Chadsey.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

Bro. Grant:—I take up my pen to address the children through the Crisis. I feel weak, but wish to tell them the Lord is good. Praise his name evermore. It is not guess work with me, my brethren, but it is knowledge. I know I have passed from death unto life, because I love the brethren. Let me tell you I have been tested and tried so much, I feared that I should be any thing but good. I got all tried up because it seemed the church forsook me in the greatest affliction that I ever passed through. I could not go to meeting in four long months. I became very hungry for hearing the word of the Lord. But, thanks be to the Lord, I had my desires granted far beyond my expectations, of the first day of July, by hearing Bro. J. T. Dixon.

And on the 4th of July, the pilgrims came from New Preston, Morris and Bethlehem, and filled our dwelling. O what shall I say? what can I say? Language would fail me; and had I given way to my feelings, I should have hid behind the curtain and wept, feeling like one of old, not worthy that they should come under my roof; for what have I done to deserve all this? when will they be recompensed for their pains taken, and their labors of love? Methinks not till Jesus comes, and that will be soon. I am so glad the last tear will soon be shed; sorrow will be gone from the earth; no more sickness, pain, nor death; all, all will be over.

The meeting was one long to be remembered. Preaching by Bro. Dixon, from Matt. 11 : 27. It was a good and stirring discourse to the weary traveler, an alarming one to the backslider, and an inviting one to the poor sinner. I feel more encouraged to be a pilgrim and stranger than ever. It repaid for all the past. My spiritual strength was renewed fourfold. The day could not have been spent any better. It will be remembered as long as time lasts, and I trust fruits of the meeting will be seen.

O glory to God evermore; my heart is full. Clouds and mist and darkness have all passed away, and God's sunshine I know I feel, and a peace that passeth understanding. Soon the saints will meet to part no more.

As they left, one after another, my heart adopted the language of the poet,—

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in christian love."

Though sundered far, by faith we meet around one common mercy-seat.

Roxbury, Ct. Susan E. Teeple.

From Bro. H. S. Mitchell.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord is at work in Bristol. Some eight or ten have found peace in believing, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Six of them have been baptized, and the interest is good at this present time.

The preaching brethren who wish to preach at this place can find a pilgrim home at Bro John Erskine's, Joshua House's, and Robert Tibbett's; where you will find a hearty welcome. H. S. Mitchell.

Bowdoinham, July 6th, 1866.

☞ Will Mr. O. W. Gates, the Connecticut soldier, who was detailed as Ward Master in the rebel hospital at Florence, S. C., please give his post office address in the "World's Crisis," and oblige the friends of one of the prisoners? J. S. Chickering.

Obituaries.

Loomis. Died in Bristol, Ct., June 20th, 1866, Mary H. Loomis, wife of Elder Oliver Loomis, of South Windsor, aged thirty-three years and twenty-four days.

Suddenly, by paralysis, terminated by apoplexy, my last remaining sister is taken, and I alone am left of our little family. My dear sister came to visit me, greatly desiring to attend some of our good meetings here. She was taken with paralysis in less than one hour after we met, and lived four hours and a half. We buried her in the little lot in Hartford, where lie dear parents, and a dear sister, buried only six months ago; all waiting in hope, through grace, for a glorious resurrection.

"She's asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep."

Be ye also ready. Anna S Hough.

Wait. Died in Washington, Erie Co., Pa., May 8th, 1866, of relapse in scarlet fever, Johnnie Wait, son of Leroy and Charlotte Wait, aged eleven years.

Johnnie was a good boy, and parents and friends trust he was one of the little ones who believe in Jesus. Believing that "it is well with the child," the afflicted ones wait hopefully for Jesus, "the resurrection and the life," to appear again, when he will rescue the captives in the enemy's land, and "we shall be ever with the Lord." Amen.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

London, July 1st.

Late Berlin papers claim decisive victories over the Austrians, on the 27th and 28th, near Nachod and Frankenstein.

The Austrian losses are stated at from three thousand to four thousand, and two thousand prisoners. There were great rejoicings at Berlin.

At Trautenau the Austrians are said to have lost 3000 or 4000 killed and wounded; the Prussians about 1000. At Munchengratz the Austrian losses are stated at 2800. The Prussians claim to have captured about 5000 prisoners, numerous trophies, guns, etc.

There was great enthusiasm and rejoicing at Berlin. The inhabitants presented an address to and serenaded the King.

The Hanoverian army, on the 27th, surrendered at discretion to the Prussians. The officers retained their side arms; the men were dismissed to their homes.

The Federal army at or near Frankfort are on the march. A battle was anticipated.

The Italians changed their plans of operations. There are no further collisions in Italy. Garibaldi is at Lake Idro.

Threatening demonstrations have taken place in London among the lower orders on the reform question.

It is reported that France would not long remain quiet. Active intervention is reported to be already agreed upon.

Pardubitz, June 29. The Prussians were yesterday completely defeated by the Austrian forces under Goblentz, leaving behind one-third of their army killed or wounded. They withdrew to Prussian territory towards Glatz.

After occupying Jicin yesterday the Prussians were attacked by the cavalry division of Gen. Edelsheim. They were driven out of Jicin and repulsed towards Turnau. In consequence of this defeat the Prussians last night evacuated Melnik, Danba, and Leipa and withdrew in great haste to Meima.

The Prussian losses by Gen. Edelshim's attack were enormous. The strategic operations of the Austrian army were completely successful, and the junction of Prince Frederick Charles with the army of Silesia was prevented.

The Austrian losses in the battles of the last three days are estimated at scarcely two thousand killed and wounded. The Prussian losses are at least equal.

The Austrians have forced their way through Tavole Pass and into the valley of Canottica.

The headquarters of the Italian army are at Torre Malaberg.

Liverpool July 5th, Londonderry 6th.

The Prussians in Bohemia are making victorious progress.

Gitschin was taken by storm. The Prussian loss was not inconsiderable. The Austrian loss was four thousand.

It is announced that the Austrian total loss, up to the present, is 30,000 to 40,000.

The Austrian Hanover, Ramming and Martine regiments were wholly annihilated, and the 18th Jager battalion were annihilated to the last man.

A Gitschin telegram of the 2d, states that the Austrians had lost 15,000 prisoners, since the 26th, and 20,000 killed and wounded.

The Austrian army has retired to a strong position, the soldiers are discouraged and the army is in a state of dissolution.

The desertion of Italian soldiers is increasing.

ITALY.

The Austrians claim the capture of 4000 Italians, and fourteen guns.

The Morning Post thinks that a Congress will shortly assemble and that the French Government will propose a general disarmament.

In the commercial circles of London, peace is regarded as virtually concluded.

A great battle took place on the 3d near Sudawa, resulting in the Prussians obtaining a great and a complete victory.

The Prussians took 14,000 prisoners.

The Austrians sent in a flag of truce.

Austria has agreed to cede Venetia to Napoleon and accept his mediation. Napoleon immediately communicated with the belligerents.

The Paris Moniteur of the 5th makes the following announcement:

"An important event has just occurred. After having maintained the honor of his arms in Italy, the Emperor of Austria, concurring in the ideas expressed in the Emperor Napoleon's letter of June 11th, to his Minister of Foreign Affairs, cedes Venetia to the French Emperor and accepts his mediation for the conclusion of peace. The Emperor Napoleon hastens to respond to the summons and immediately communicated with the Kings of Prussia and Italy in order to obtain an armistice."

The Austrian Field Marshal Vons Gablens arrived at the Prussian Head-quarters at Haritz, near Gitschen, on the evening of the 4th with a flag of truce.

The battle of the 3d near Sudawa was a great affair. It resulted in the complete defeat of the Austrians.

The Prussians were commanded by the king in person.

They met the Austrians, under Benedek, between Horitez and Konigsgratz.

The battle lasted twelve hours. Until 10 A. M. the battle was favorable to the Austrians, but after that hour the advantages were with the Prussians. At two o'clock, P. M., after an obstinate defence, the Prussians carried by storm the strong position of the Austrians. After which the Austrians were quickly driven out of other positions, and by seven A. M. the Austrians were in full retreat to Koningsgratz, pursued by the Prussian cavalry.

"The suddenness and magnitude of the Austrian calamity are too overpowering for any man to speculate on the possible consequences on the destinies of the Austrian empire. With the exception of a few fortresses of no more avail in modern warfare to stay the triumphant progress of a victorious army than Josefstadt and Tannengratz have proved to be. Benedek has nothing in his rear but open country; nothing between him and the capital but a vast smooth battle-field where the cannon, the cavalry and the dread needle gun of the Prussians will have free play.

The Austrians have done enough for the honor of their arms. They must now provide for the safety of the State, and this can hardly be done by prolonged resistance. The most illustrious names in the Empire are among the dead and wounded.

The King of Prussia is in camp, and the Emperor of Austria is not very far from Benedek's headquarters. Let there be at Pardubitz, or at Olmutz, such an interview as there was after Austerlitz, and after Solferino. Better terms than Austria may obtain now will certainly not be granted to her after two or three months protracted struggle has added to the fuel of hostile passions."

DOMESTIC.

Important Order from Gen. Grant.

Headquarters of the Army,
Adjutant General's Office,
Washington, July 1, 1866.

General Order No. 24.

Department, district, and post commanders in the States lately in rebellion, are hereby directed to arrest all persons who have been, or may hereafter be, charged with the commission of crimes and offences against officers, agents, citizens, and inhabitants of the United States, irrespective of color, in cases where the civil authorities have failed, neglected, or are unable to arrest and bring such parties to trial, and to detain them in military confinement until such time as a proper judicial tribunal may be ready and willing to try them. A strict and prompt enforcement of this order is required. By command of Lieut. Gen. Grant.

(Signed) E. D. Townsend,
Assistant Adjutant General.

The Resignation of Postmaster General Dennison.

Washington, July 12. It is positively ascertained that Postmaster General Dennison yesterday tendered his resignation to the President. This was done in writing. The reason, as stated by Mr. Dennison himself, is a difference in political views. It will be recollected that he was President of the Union Republican Convention which renominated Mr. Lincoln. Never intending otherwise than to adhere to the party whose principles it represented, and as the call for a National Convention at Philadelphia is in antagonism to that organization, there was no other course left to him than to retire from the Cabinet, while his personal relations with the President are undisturbed and friendly. The separation is entirely because of a conflict of political views.

Further Resignations. Mr. Speed has formally tendered to the President his resignation as Attorney General. According to the reports of that gentleman's friends, his letter is even more emphatic in his disapproval of the President's policy than that of Mr. Dennison's. The resignation of Secretary Harlan is now an event to be daily expected.

Washington July 16. The President this afternoon nominated to the Senate A. W. Randall, now First Assistant, to be Postmaster General, in place of Mr. Dennison, resigned.

ITEMS.

☞ The number of Bibles issued by the American Bible Society during the fifty years of its continuation, is 21,400,000, distributed in regard to time as follows: First ten years, 400,000; second, 1,400,000; third, 2,500,000; fourth, 6,000,000; fifth, 10,000,000. There are in connection with the parent society 5,232 auxiliaries, besides two recently added in Tennessee composed of freedmen. Seventy-two editions in forty-three languages have been published.

☞ A great many persons are at a loss to know how to dispose of ragged and mutilated currency that accumulates on their hands. It is the easiest thing in the world, and without any expense. When you get three dollars' worth on hand, put it in a small package, pin a paper band around it, with your name, post-office address, and amount; then put it in an envelope and address it to the "Treasury of the United States, Washington, D. C." In a few days you will receive new currency in return. It goes and returns free of postage.

☞ What do you do with soap-suds? Although generally deemed only fit for being run into the common sewer in the easiest and most expeditious manner possible, they are, nevertheless, highly beneficial vegetable feeders, as well as useful insect preventives. Hence, they should never be wasted, especially by those having gardens; their application to the ground, whether in winter or summer, will show beneficially not only on berry bushes, shrubs, border flowers, but even window pot-plants; while if poured or syringed over roses, cabbages, etc., they will prevent, or at least mitigate, the mischievous doings of the green fly and caterpillar.—Scottish Farmer.

☞ John Wesley preached, on an average, fifteen sermons a week. Instead of breaking down under this task, he wrote, when seventy-three years old, that he was far more able to preach than when three and twenty. His brow was then smooth, his complexion ruddy, and his voice strong and clear, so that an audience of thirty thousand could hear him without difficulty. This vigor he ascribed to continual travel, early rising, good sleep, and an even temper.

☞ Stephens, the great Fenian, made a speech in Boston, on Tuesday evening, in which he said that he then and there bound the Irish race to action, to the final battle between England and Ireland, on Irish soil, this year. "I solemnly declare to you," said he, "that sometime this year I shall myself be on Irish soil to meet whatever may be before me."

☞ A report from Cozzolini, the chief guide of Vesuvius, states that the mountain exhibits signs of disturbance. The small cone recently ejected stones into the air, and on the large cone two new mouths were formed. From the small cone a considerable body of lava flowed into and filled up the large crater.

☞ The Rev. Mr. Dean was arrested in Cass County, Mo., for preaching without taking the oath. He is now in jail at Independence, and refuses to give bail. Seventy-five preachers have been arrested under the new Constitution.

☞ A Paris writer says the Emperor has had private wires attached to the different telegraps, and sends private telegrams with his own hands to Count Bismarck at Berlin, and Gen. La Marmora at Florence.

☞ Recent reports render it certain that the fruit crops in Central Georgia and Alabama will be a failure. There may be half the usual quantity of apples and pears, but peaches and grapes are destroyed.

☞ A man died of joy the other day in Paris, on hearing that he had been made heir to £1000.

J. Couch is expected, and others (by this) are invited to come to preach the word. We would say to all come. Not only to dedicate the house, but our hearts anew to the Lord.

T. W. Piper.

Universalism.

Having formerly had seven years experience in Universalism, thereby knowing some of its workings, I desire to do what little I can in battling against this great error. I shall be glad to speak on that subject wherever doors may be opened, and, at the same time, circulate that unanswerable argument against Universalism,—"Universalism Exposed from the Inner Temple," now issued in tract form by the Adv. Chr. Pub. Society.

Address W. C. Stone, Crisis Office, Boston.

Notice.

Hereafter (D. V.) I shall preach at Danielsonville, Ct., on the second and fourth Sundays of every month; and at Abington, Ct., on the first and third Sundays of every month. Friends interested in these meetings will please cut this notice out and preserve it for future reference.

The present No. of the Crisis is 881. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness, if less than 26 weeks, charge five cents; if more than 26 weeks, six cents. From the product (which will be a fraction over the actual indebtedness) deduct one cent for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

For the World's Crisis.

[illegible]

My sister friend, I never yet
Have gazed on thy dear face,
Ne'er felt the pressure of thy hand,
Or met thy kind embrace.
And never have I seen thee smile,
Or looked into thine eyes;
I long in vain to hear thy voice,
A privilege fate denies.

And yet our hearts united are
By sympathy and love,
And like the waters of a stream,
Mingling we onward move.
I know thou art affliction's child,
A sufferer for years,—
Even from thy earliest youth thy way
Has been bedewed with tears.

Deprived so young of what a heart
Like yours must love so well,
To wander forth 'neath forest shades,
And in the quiet dell;
And listen to the songs of birds
Among the shady trees,
While to the memory thronging comes
The thoughts of other years.

But sadder still to be denied
With christian friends to meet,
In the assembly of the saints
Worship at Jesus' feet.
But sister dear, the Crucified
Saith in his holy word,
All things shall work for good to those
Who truly love the Lord.

Sweet promise, sister, trust him still,
He knoweth what is best;
And O how cheering, soon will come
Our longed for, promised rest.
There, sister, we'll each other greet,
My eyes shall look in thine,
Our hands shall meet in love's warm clasp,
Our arms each other twine.

And we will roam the glad new earth,
And rest in Eden's bowers,
Together pluck from life's fair tree
Immortal fruits and flowers;
And with the loved of other days,
Whom death hath from us riven,
Unite to do our Father's will
As it is done in heaven.

For the World's Crisis.

COMMITTING SCRIPTURE TO MEMORY.

NUMBER TWO.

THE BLESSINGS RESULTING THEREFROM.

"Go forth, thou blessed book, go forth,
And to the world thy mission tell,
That minds may learn to know thy worth,
And souls thy blessings learn to feel."

Another special benefit resulting from investigating God's word, by thoroughly, carefully, and prayerfully committing it to memory, is heaven's blessings, or the blessings of heaven, in heaven, the glory to be revealed. God knows his word, and those who honor his word will he honor. "Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name." Psa. 138: 2. The Lord is well pleased with those who honor him by searching his word, making it the man of their counsel, their delight, their exceeding great reward, by hiding it in their hearts, that they may not sin against him. And what more speedy, sure, and effectual way of hiding the word of life in our hearts, than by committing it to memory? Our memories may be weak and treacherous. We may find great, patient, and persevering labor requisite, not only in committing certain portions of God's word to memory, but also in retaining it when committed. Some persons are very forgetful, and find great difficulty in retaining good things, great things, glorious things. Everything good and valuable almost slips out, leaks out, is caught away; it goes into one ear and out at the other; that's the last of it. The most precious, valuable things, touching the way of life and salvation, inculcated from the pulpit, in the lecture room, in books and papers, which ought to be retained, treasured up for future use, for the imparting to others, are measurably effaced, forgotten, and pass away like an idle dream. O what a loss, what a loss!

The strength of the mind depends much upon the state of the body, its vigor, its health, etc. But when we rise to a high and glorious existence, perfection angelic; when this mortal shall have put on immortality, we shall then no more groan, being burdened; no more shall we complain of obscurity, weak and treacherous memories; every faculty will be renovated, invigorated, transformed, beautified, made glorious, shining brightly as the sun. The passages of the Holy Scriptures, which we may now have to go over and over again and again, repeat and re-repeat, to retain, imprint indelibly on the mind and heart, while in houses of clay; there, in glory eternal, these blessed, golden gems will doubtless recur, come home to our immortalized vision and memory with renewed freshness, beauty, glory inexpressible.

"Our memory, that power divine,
From whose unerring pages shine
Our destiny.
For there is chronicled our aim,
In characters of living flame,
And cannot die."

Our indefatigable, persevering labors in this vale of tears, in searching for the hidden treasure, the pearl of great price, the light that shineth in a dark place, will receive their due reward. Things dark or obscure here will there be light, effulgent, dazzling, joyful, glorious, unspeakable. All the efforts put forth in searching the blessed volume of inspiration for our usefulness and advancement in holiness, will be crowned in heaven by the King of kings and Lord of lords. These very passages, carefully and prayerfully committed here on earth, both in the Old and the New Testament, to glorify God in the salvation of our own souls, and the souls of others, will be as stars in our crowns of rejoicing forever and forever.

"The minds of earth no treasure give,
That could this volume buy;
In teaching me the way to live,
It taught me how to die."

Friends of truth and love, are not these glorious anticipations, and others too numerous to mention, a sufficient inducement for you to make any sacrifice, endure any self-denial, any perseverance, in the blessed way of searching the Holy Scriptures, by daily, careful, prayerful committal? Beloved, you who complain of forgetfulness, the difficulties under which you labor in retaining good things, Bible truth, the word of life, mourn over the little progress you make in this blessed work of committing certain passages of inspiration to memory, take courage, labor on, search on, commit on, pray on, hope on; your labor in this direction is not in vain in the Lord. Every word of Bible truth carefully committed is gain, infinite gain. You have need of patience, that after you have done the will of God you may receive the fulfillment of the promise, "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry." What appears dim, obscure, and obliterated now, will by and by appear clear, bright, beautiful, majestic, glorious. You will, by making God's word, in this way, a lamp to your feet, and a light to your path, receive a hundred fold here, and hereafter life everlasting. Your happiness in glory will be vastly increased as eternity rolls on, for every honest, patient, persevering, prayerful effort in treasuring up the sacred truths contained in God's word, in the way here specified.

Furthermore, think of the blessings (already enumerated) resulting from this method of studying the Bible while in this life. What other means of grace can be so effectual, so sure, so speedy, so happy and joyful? The words of Christ are Spirit, life, life! By this regular, systematic, daily committal, you treasure up the marrow and fatness of the gospel, the word of God, quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword. And this word is at your command always, and may be used at pleasure, while employed in your daily avocations, walking the streets, sitting at your table, around your fireside, on your slumbering pillow; by night, by day, on the bed of languishment or disease. When the adversary of God and man walketh about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, you have at hand the sword of the Spirit, which will immediately quench all the fiery darts of Satan.

Again, think of the unspeakable advantage of having the choice, heavenly gems at your tongues end, in administering consolation to the afflicted, those appointed unto death, in exhorting sinners to repentance, a life of godliness; in teaching in Sabbath schools, Bible classes, from the sacred desk. How much more forcibly interesting and practically can we impart religious instruction at all times, and under all circumstances, than we could otherwise do, by having our minds thus richly stored with these blessed truths from the FOUNTAIN OF ALL TRUTH, by this thorough, persevering, prayerful investigation here specified. Language fails to express the advantages in every point of view. We cannot magnify too highly the superlative excellencies resulting from examining God's word in the way proposed, or paint them too glaringly. The writer of this article can testify, from long and happy experience, the gracious influences upon his own soul, and the facilities afforded in communicating life and salvation to others, from searching out and committing to memory daily, these precious, sparkling gems; these "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The benefits derived from them cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx or the sapphire. The gold and the crystal cannot equal them. No mention shall be made of coral or of pearls, for the price of them is above rubies. The most holy, useful, joyful, in all ages, testify to these facts.

Friends, will you try this method of searching the Holy Scriptures? begin now to treasure up little by little, one verse, two verses, four, six, eight, ten, daily, as time and opportunity afford. The most devotional and practical portions of inspiration, the great and precious promises, both in the Old and the New Testament, the essence and quintescence of Bible truth; the life, spirit, and marrow of that wisdom which cometh from above. Will you? meanwhile, watering it with prayer, as with the dew of heaven.

Parents, will you commence this course of Bible instruction with your little ones, at the early dawnings of intellectual and spiritual life. Insist on their regular committal of some two or three verses, or even one verse, daily, for recitation. It may be seed sown on good ground, that will bring forth fruit, thirty, sixty, or a hundred fold in this life, and in the life to come life everlasting. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."—Isa. 55: 1.

"Wanderer in a stranger land,
Thirsting, fainting, on the way;
Seek the fountain near at hand,
Come and slake thy thirst to-day;
Here are waters running o'er,
Drink of them and thirst no more."

Select the most practical parts of the Psalms, the proverbs, the prophets, the evangelists, the epistles; select whole psalms, whole chapters; commit them thoroughly, accurately, word for word. Repeat them over and over; lying down, rising up, going out, coming in, while at your various occupations, and at the table spread with heaven's bounties. Fix them indelibly in your very soul; hide them in your heart, as David did, that you may not sin against God. Meditate on these passages of God's word till they become more precious than gold; sweeter, also, than honey and the honey comb. Ask God to strengthen your memory, your intellectual faculties, that these blessed truths of inspiration may find permanent lodgment; prove "a lamp to your feet, and a light to your path," that you may be able to exclaim with the Psalmist, "Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage forever."

"O may these heavenly pages be
Our ever dear delight;
And still new beauties may we see,
And still increasing light."

THE COMING REIGN OF TERROR.

LUKE xxi. 36; 1 THESS. iv. 16, 17.

It is a generally acknowledged fact—acknowledged not only by those who compare the signs of the times with the Word of God, but even by those who are inattentive to the prophetic truth—that we have entered upon critical times. Some of God's servants hesitate not to declare that we have entered upon the crisis which will bring on the revelation of the Beast, or the Antichrist in his last form, and usher in the coming of our blessed Lord. Certainly, looking at the lamentable state of religion in the so-called Christian countries all over Christendom, and in our own country, we cannot be wrong in asserting that "the falling away" (2 Thess. 2: 3) has not only begun, but has far advanced. When we read of 198 clergymen of the Church of England (calling themselves the Anglo-Catholic Church) making an earnest application to the idolatrous Church of Rome to be united with her; yea, and when some of the dignitaries and influential laymen of the church supplicate the Greek Church—little differing from Popery—to extend the hand of brotherly fellowship to them, what shall we call this but "a falling away from the faith once delivered to the saints?" Living members of Christ's Church are united in him, be they now attached to whatever section of the Christian Church, and the endeavor to unite dead bodies must be futile in the extreme. Then what shall we say of the infidelity of Bishop Colenso, and his supporters of various shades of unbelief and scepticism, and the masses of unbelievers in the inspiration of the holy Scriptures, both high and low, scattered throughout our land and British dependencies? We know the Apostle Paul distinctly told the Thessalonians when they should see this Apostasy making its appearance in the Christian Church, then they might look for the revelation of "the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition." With the revelation—rise from the bottomless pit—of this monster of iniquity, persecution against the saints will commence, for he will demand exclusive worship, as "he will deny the Father and the Son" (1 John 2: 22). If, therefore, the saints are to be exempted from this persecution, they must either be taken up by the Lord, or in some way protected and saved. For this there is ground to believe in the Word of God.—The Rainbow.

PEN PICTURES OF BIBLE SCENES.

NUMBER TWENTY-SEVEN.

THE QUEEN OF SHEBA'S VISIT.

David, the warrior king, and the sweet singer of Israel, slumbered with his fathers. The sounds of war had ceased. The hills of Judah no longer shook beneath the tread of battle-clad hosts. Israel had conquered a peace, and the nations sought alliance rather than conflict. Solomon sat on the throne of his father David, and flourished with a magnificence that outshone the fondest dream of oriental poet. The wealth of farthest Ind shed its dazzling gems into his lap. The spices and perfumes of Araby the Blest were his, and his navy brought the finest gold from distant Ophir. The isles of ocean, and the shores of far-off lands, were searched for some new tribute to add to the glory and splendor of his reign.

Zion was decorated with palaces for the court of Solomon. Mount Morrah was crowned with a temple for the worship of Jehovah unrivaled for splendor. Its courts and all its appointments glittered with untold wealth. There, where ages before the rude altar of Abraham was laid for the sacrifice of Isaac, the brazen altars of a grateful people arose at last, when all the enemies of Israel were scattered, and the greatest and wisest of kings ruled in peace. There the tribes came up to worship and receive the blessing of the high priest. There the penitential sacrifice was offered, and the odorous incense went up to heaven in gratitude from a whole nation. Every Hebrew had a longing desire to worship there; and never did his heart so expand with joy, as when the temple of his love first arose before his wondering vision.

But wealth was not the only endowment of Solomon; he surpassed all the sages and princes who had existed before him for wisdom. His knowledge extended to all things. "He spoke three thousand proverbs, and his songs were a thousand and five. And he spake of trees, from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall. He spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes." His fame went out among all nations, and the wise men from far came to listen to his words of wisdom, and enrich their understanding with his proverbs.

But among all who attended upon the king, there was one whose visit is described at length by the sacred historian. The name and fame of the king of Israel had reached the southern shores of Arabia, and the Queen of Sheba, the happy Araby of old, was filled with enthusiasm. There were wise men about her throne, who had taught her much; enough to make her heart thirst for more. The poets of her spicy groves had sung to her of the happiness of her people, and warbled the notes of their tenderest dreams, but that was not enough; the great monarch of the Hebrews sang of all she had ever loved, and more than she had dreamed of. He sang of flowers, such as she had gathered in childhood, ere the diadem had encircled her brow; of the trees that might have sheltered her; of the stars she had gazed upon, and of earth in all its varied forms of beauty. She had caught the echo of his songs and of his proverbs across the Arabian desert sands, and she longed to go and see if all this was true. Queen Balkis, the name tradition preserves for us, mused long upon the journey that was to be the great event of her life. It was no ordinary undertaking in those days. More than a thousand miles intervened, a weary journey, not of days, but of weeks, and perhaps of months. But, nothing daunted, the beautiful Queen of the South made preparations for her departure for the court of Solomon. She loaded her camels with the spices and perfumes of her land, and gold and gems of untold value, as a sovereign present from one ruler to another.

At length she started on her memorable journey. She must often have gazed back upon the happy land of her rule, with the thought of one who was upon an uncertain course; and felt some solicitude for herself, as she passed the last landmark of her realm. The days passed in quick succession. New scenes presented themselves. Cities, plains, deserts, mountains, still her train pressed on, till the northern limits of Arabia were reached, where Petra reared its rock-cut palaces and temples, then gay with bustling life, long since silent with the gloom of desolation. Then she passed on, till the vale of Jordan refreshed her vision, and crossing its stream, she entered the Land of Promise, which had seemed like a fable-land to her youthful dreams. Canaan was fruitful then with the vine and the olive. Its hills and valleys teemed with the bounties of a favored land, ere the curse of heaven had fallen upon it.

At length Jerusalem greeted the vision of Queen Balkis. Her heart was filled with emotion. She gazed upon its stately walls and grand surroundings. Magnificent palaces filled the scene, and on the heights of Moriah rose the temple of the Most High, that dazzled the eye with its golden splendors. Then the Queen was escorted into Jerusalem by the attendants of Solomon, and sumptuously entertained by him. The long and weary journey was ended, and she had leisure to gratify the desire of her heart. She was shown all the wonders of the sacred city, the palaces of the king, and above all the great temple, where the Hebrews worshiped. Then she sought to prove the wisdom of the king by many hard questions, which she had long studied to propound to him. When all her problems had been solved, and she had listened to the profound sayings of the king, and heard him recite the glowing songs of his fertile muse, she was filled with admiration. "And she said to the king, It was a true report that I heard in mine own land of thy acts and of thy wisdom. Howbeit, I believed not the words until I came, and mine eyes had seen it; and, behold, the half was not told me. Thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard. Happy are the men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom. Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighteth in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel; because the Lord loved Israel forever; therefore made he thee king to do judgment and justice." Then the Queen bestowed her costly gifts upon the king, and received in return all that she desired.

Satisfied with the result of her visit, repaid for the weary journey she had undertaken, Queen Balkis bade adieu to the court of Solomon, and returned to her realm of Araby the Blest, to muse over the strange scenes she had witnessed, and ponder upon the words of wisdom that had fallen from the lips of the sage Solomon. Thus ended the memorable visit of Queen Balkis, whose name still lives, because she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to listen to the wisdom of Solomon, while the names of long lines of oriental kings and princes have perished from the memory of man. TO A MOURNER.

Do you miss him from the fireside,
When calm twilight gathers round,
When the cricket on the hearthstone
Chirps his welcome evening sound?

Do you miss him in the morning,
When the lark first leaves her nest?
Do you miss him at still twilight,
When all nature sinks to rest?

Do you miss his welcome footstep,
Sounding near the open door?
Do you miss his voice of gladness,
That you hear it now no more?

True, there's sorrow in your portion,
Sadness ever lurks 'neath joy;
There's but one place—yon heaven—
Where all weal has not alloy.

Though we lose our fondest treasures,
And the heart breaks 'neath the load,
Still thy hope is like an anchor,
Cheering by the blessed word.

Then be patient, face the trial,
Jesus' cross still make thine own,—
Thou shalt reach th' eternal harbor,
Thou shalt dwell with Him at home.

ELIJAH YET TO COME.

Some think that the words, "I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of that great and dreadful day of the Lord" (Mal. 4: 5), was fulfilled in the advent of John the Baptist; and that all we are to understand by the promise of Elijah preceding the second advent is merely the spirit of preparation being infused every where previous to that event. But this does not seem to me to exhaust the words of scripture. For instance, our Lord says, "Truly Elijah must first come, and restore all things."—Matt. 17: 11. But then he adds, "Elijah is come already." The two things seem inconsistent; but it does appear to me, from various reasons, that Elijah will personally precede Christ who comes to reign, just as John preceded Christ who came to suffer. Recollect that Elijah needs no resurrection from the dead; he never saw death, he was translated; and why translated unless for some sublime mission similar to that which is here indicated? Let us mark well our Lord's words. He says, "Truly Elijah shall first come and restore all things." But if John the Baptist was Elijah, can it be said of John that he restored all things? He did not restore any thing at all; he preached repentance. Then if you say, How do you explain the other passage—viz: "Elijah is come already"? I explain it by referring to the corresponding passage in Luke 1: 16, 17, where it was said of John the Baptist, "He shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elijah." But he was not Elijah. Our Lord says of John the Baptist that "he came and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed; likewise also shall the Son of man suffer of them." What does he here say? He says John the Baptist came, and they killed him; but that cannot be said of Elijah; he never was killed; he was translated; he is in glory; and if he had come to the earth in the person of John the Baptist, he could not have been killed. But certain parties appealed to John himself. They came to him and said, "Art thou Messiah?" He said no. Art thou Elijah? And he said, I am not Elijah."

Well, John the Baptist surely knew who he was, and yet he denied that he was Elijah who was to come and restore all things. The passage, "This is Elijah that ought to come," the French translators have given us the true meaning of: "C'est l' Elie qui devait venir." This is THAT Elijah who ought to come now, at this moment, is John the Baptist; he is come in the spirit and power of Elijah; but Elijah personally is yet to come and precede my glorious advent to triumph and reign. It does seem highly probable that before our Lord comes, Elijah, who never died, and is not therefore to be raised from the dead, will herald the return of the Prince of Peace; just as a suffering Baptist came to precede a suffering Christ, so a glorified Elijah will come to precede a glorified and triumphant Christ At least I cannot explain these passages in any other way.—Dr. Cumming.

TALKING TOO MUCH.

"In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin; but he that refraineth his lips is wise."—Prov. 10: 19.

How often are those who would be saints, who are even striving to be saints,—how often are they taken in the snare of talking too much. A sister visited some friends, and staid with them a week, and writes thus of the result: "I feel that I am not all right before the Lord. When I went to D. I felt a firm trust in the Lord, but returned home rather lean. The church there have in a great measure lost their spirituality, and I talked too much, and prayed too little."

Now the remedy for this evil is to have a watch set "at the door of our lips," and have a "bridle" on the tongue. If we find the current too strong for us, and we are in danger of being carried away by it, make an excuse (if possible) to withdraw, and engage in earnest prayer. Perhaps in some cases it will be best to avoid the company of "unruly and vain talkers"; yet it will not be possible for all to do so. We cannot all choose our position, or our associates. But when we can have our choice, let us choose the company of the wise, for "he that walketh with wise men shall be wise; but a companion of fools shall be destroyed."

THE LAST TIMES.

Remarks of the Bishop of Oxford in a late Missionary meeting in England.

I have no doubt myself that the last attempt upon the truth of Christ will come in, not with any open denial of its verity, but with a courteous admission of its truth.—At the same time there will be a sapping of its distinctive feature. I think that the aspect of men's minds at the present time shows us that this will be the form of the danger, universal toleration, toleration not only among Christian sects, one towards another, but a deep respect for religiousness everywhere, always providing that it is not that troublesome thing which, by being believed, affects men's conduct, is any limitation upon their thoughts, or even troubles what is called the course of society. That they will all agree together to put out. I have no doubt myself that unbelief contains within itself the seed of the most intensely hating persecution the world has ever yet seen. Instead of being tolerant, I believe that the very moment it has achieved its own victory, toleration will be the thing above all others it will hate with an intensity short only of the hatred the evil spirit himself has for the simple faith of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

It must be so, I [illegible], because unbelief, in whatever form it comes, is the exaltation of the human intellect and the human will, over the voice of revelation and revealed knowledge. It is thwarted to the utmost the very moment that it is met and confronted by the mighty rock of revealed truth. The stream flows on with the most delicious smoothness when there is nothing to thwart it. "Let us all love one another." Let us be tolerant to each other's views. If you choose to worship the devil, worship him, if you only do it quietly. If you choose to worship an anti-devil, do so if you do so quietly. Let us go on altogether in our worldly ways and worldly thoughts, holding nothing that may be troublesome or disagreeable. Anything disagreeable in religion is such a shocking thing. Well, then comes the most disagreeable thing possible, the revelation of an absolute truth, which says, "We will have nothing to do with this fellowship of evil. You are leading men into absolute destruction; you are promising them liberty, and making them slaves; you are handing them over to the devil under the pretence of liberty and emancipation from their shackles."

Believing then, as I do, that there may be heard upon the winds these footfalls of the coming of the great Antichrist; that this which we hear whispered thus, and see spreading, we know not how, through the air, is just the precursing atmosphere which comes before his advent, I say it is the time, if ever the time was, for those who fear and love the Lord to rouse themselves up, and to be working mightily, that they may establish indeed the hiding-places of his faith throughout the earth. Yea, the very desires of spiritual men point to the same thing. I suppose one of the greatest desires with those who are in earnest in religion, and which is altogether new to the present times, is the longing for greater unity in Christendom.

There is also another reason to touch upon This is a season when the judgments of the Lord are abroad. Who can doubt that it is so? When we read only to-day, "I will send plagues upon men and upon beasts," could any of you help thinking of the signs of the present times? Is not the mysterious disease that has entered amongst our cattle at this moment—is not that, if the Bible be true, one of God's writings upon the nation's wall, warning them to turn to him? Remember also the whisper, rising now almost to a voice, of the onward march of the old pestilence of cholera. It is again nestling upon the breeze of the evening, and is not this another of God's writings upon the wall, warning you that you do his work, and turn to him with a new zeal, whilst yet the opportunity of turning is left to you.—The Guardian.

SPEAK NO EVIL ONE OF ANOTHER.

A certain preacher presents us with the following definition of evil speaking: "A man speaks evil of his fellow man when he speaks of any thing which he knows to be wrong in character or conduct, to a third person All comments on the motives, or actions, or lives of others, when they are not present to hear them, and defend themselves, are positively sinful, and sometimes horribly malignant and treacherous. There is only one exception to this principle. If you know that an individual has committed a crime, or intended to do so, by which the property or life of another was, or would be, endangered, it would be your duty to speak of it, to prevent the evil. But except this, all remarks upon the real or supposed defects of others, in their absence, is evil. If a person go and utter things affecting the reputation of another, which he does not know to be actually true, he is guilty of slander, he utters a false invective, if he utters a thing, knowing at the same time it is not true, that he has made it himself; he not only slanders, but he adds to it the crime of willful lying. When this is done designedly to injure the reputation, or usefulness, or standing of the person spoken of, it is termed backbiting—devouring a man's character, a good man, without his knowledge. The slanderer travels about from house to house, for the purpose of circulating the evil—he becomes a whisperer. Sometimes the scandal-monger is not contented with the display of his wares, he wants to recruit his stock; he enters into your affairs; he endeavors to win your confidence, to become master of your secrets; to render himself important in your family—he is then "a busy-body in other men's matters." If he is expert in this wickedness, if he possesses that detestable disposition of heart which rejoices not in truth, but rejoices in iniquity, and revels in confusion, doubt and misery, as in a congenial atmospere, he will travel far and near to collect news, reports, and scandals—in other words, he is a mean, despicable character."

Sometimes this vile, detestable being possesses the low cunning to scatter his moral poison by other means than positive assertion; by other methods than by direct statements. He says but little, but that little is tagged with "buts." You often hear him speaking of others somewhat as follows: "He's a good kind of a man, but, every bean has its black." "Such a man is very friendly, but, it is in his own way." "My neighbor can be very liberal, but, you must catch him in the humor."

Sometimes these murderers of human character make a fiendish use of half sentences, which are full of malignity and deadly venom. Mighty stress is laid upon "May be's," and "I'll say no more," "Let us hope not," and "They do say so." Thus confirming the evil they affect to deplore, more under the semblance of pity and prudential caution, than they possibly could do in any other shape short of demonstration.—Earnest Christian.

CHURCH VACATIONS.

A pastor of one of the churches in Philadelphia, who is spending a few weeks in one of the cities of New England, recently made the following allusions to church vacations, in a letter to one of his deacons, who is also the superintendent of his Sabbath school:

"As for closing the church doors, or suspending the sessions of the Sabbath school, during the hot days, I sincerely hope you will never, for one moment, consent to entertain the idea, by whomsoever it may be advocated. The custom is a bad one. They have fallen in with it here to some extent, and the results are deplorable. Men and boys are creatures of habit; and any breaking up of the religious habits of the people is most calamitous. Boys shut out of Sunday school during August, do not all return to the school in September. They form habits of Sabbath desecration which last till August comes again, and often till the end of life! Church doors closed in summer, open in vain when autumn returns to receive back all the worshipers. All will not come. Some have gone fatally into sin, and some sleep their last sleep!

The so-called first class or fashionable churches of this town, commenced this irreligious practice a few years ago, and now the second class and the third class churches are trying to imitate, lest they should be thought unfashionable! Were it not so serious a thing, it would certainly be most laughable! Think of it; a church of Jesus Christ, striving at such ruinous rate to frustrate the very object for which it was organized.

The truth is, churches are like pendulums. They swing. Now they are at this extreme, and now at that. And you mark my word—except, perhaps, in the case of those very few churches which have but little vital piety, and money enough to foot the bills, whether or no, the churches are bound to swing back from where they now are. The experiment of church vacations is not going to stand the test. While a few of us are away, wisely, necessarily, perhaps, the great masses still swarm and sin and die, in the streets and houses of our great cities. How dare we close our church doors against them? If a few of the hardest workers, and most patient burden-bearers, with nerves and brains over-tasked, must be gone for a month, then by all means put the reins in the hands of the best and most trustworthy of those who remain at home, and let the chariot of salvation move on."—Watchman and Reflector.

HEALTH OF AMERICAN WOMEN.

BY MRS. E. F. MILLER, M. D.

Almost overwhelmed as I am at the thought that the women of America are, with scarce an exception, diseased, I enter the prolific field impelled by an earnest desire to help my suffering sisters, and impress upon them the importance of early attention to even slight deviations from the standard of health which they may discover in themselves or their daughters.

The foundation for thousands of ruined constitutions is lain in babyhood—ay, even before the babe has an independent existence—and is it any wonder that the superstructure is weak and tottering? The aching head and quivering nerves, the half-used lungs and enfeebled sotmach, the torpid liver and inactive bowels can never furnish to the embryo the means for a healthful organization or supply proper nourishment for the development of the new-born babe.

It is said, and truly, that "if we would improve the world we must begin with the children;" but a word to the mothers, or those who are liable to become such, may be the means of saving some from the evils which oftimes have strong hold before the child has ever seen the light.

Look well to it, O ye mothers! that ye leave no avenue untrod that shall lead you to a knowledge of yourselves and your conditions, for a sense of our own needs is a long step toward the acquisition of a supply for them. . . .

Let me whisper in your ear a truth of which you perhaps have never thought. From many, very many, of the homes of the poor would grim poverty soon stalk out at the door, if the table were but simply and healthfully laid, and the clothing more plainly and healthfully made; for to the table, and the vanity displayed in dress, may be attributed the lack of health in thousands of our American homes.

But to those upon whom the iron hand of poverty rests not, those in the middle and higher walks of life, I have somewhat to say. Could each and all of the diseased within your ranks, with one fell swoop be set aside, how many think you would remain? So few, I trow, that it would be scarcely worth the while to count; for upon those on whom no definite disease is preying, nervousness and debility have so strong a hold that life seems scarce worth the effort you are compelled to make in order to keep even your slight hold upon it.

Yet why need it be thus? Situated as you are, amid comforts and pleasures, with "neither poverty nor riches" to eat out your happiness, your life should be a constant joy, your every heart-beat full of gratitude for the blessings which are yours.

But can I help you to overcome your difficulties and make bright your cloudy way? First and foremost, see to it that you have plenty of pure air to breathe, for God hath given this so lavishly that we show great ingratitude when we neglect to receive and use it; next, be sure you use the organs which have been given you with which to breathe this air—expand your lungs, fill them with nature's purifier, oxygen, and thus induce the bright glow and the ready flow of the life current coursing through your veins; make it an hourly duty to inhale fresh air to the full extent of your lungs, and you can not conceive how much this one little item will do to improve your health and strength; but in order to do this your clothing must be loose and free, so that every organ in your body shall save full play. You cannot breathe in a tight dress. And the miserable attempts at breathing which our corseted women of the nineteenth century have made, are filling the bills of youthful mortality, and telling their tales of woe upon thousands of the children who survive.

Another prolific source of disease is found in the "good things" (?) with which your tables abound. The quality of the food is such that the temptation to overeat is almost irresistible, so that the excessive quantity eaten becomes a greater curse than any quality could be if partaken with moderation. And here let me say that you, mothers, have a sin to answer for greater than you can estimate, inasmuch as you constantly and thoughtlessly place before your husbands and sons those articles of diet which tend most surely to arouse and foster the animal passions at the expense of vital stamina and mental vigor. Look well to it, and very many of you will find that your own sufferings in the marriage relations are dependent upon this, and that you are laying the foundation for lives of misery to those whom your sons may choose for wives.

Spread your table only with simple, healthful food, and if it be not too late your own miseries will be decreased tenfold, and your children to the third and fourth generations will call you blessed.

And still another hint may not be out of place. "Cleanliness is next to godliness," and if you would, that health should reign within your homes, the millions of little sewers with which your bodies are supplied must be kept cleansed and free; the pores of the skin can not be clogged without serious detriment to the health, for the effete matter which these pores should carry off if thrown back upon the internal organs, and becomes the seed of sufferings untold. Water in abundance is at hand in every house, and even little children may be taught to bathe the entire body thoroughly and properly, so there can be no excuse for disregarding this great necessity of our being.

Exercise too, of proper kind and quantity, should be taken daily, a portion of it, at least, in the open air, for inaction shows speedily its ill effects upon the entire system. Those who are feeble should exercise under the supervision of some one competent to direct their movements, but exercise either active or passive should be a part of the daily routine as much as eating or sleeping.—Herald of Health.

HOW PEOPLE TAKE COLD.

Not by tumbling into the river and draggling home wet as a drowned rat; not by being pitched into the mud, or spilled out in the snow in sleighing time; not by walking for hours over shoe-top in mud; not by soaking in the rain without an umbrella; not by scrubbing the floor until the un-nameable sticks to you like a wet rag; not by hoeing potatoes until you are in a lather of sweat; these are not the things which give people colds; and yet they are all the time telling us how they "caught their death by exposure."

The time for taking cold is after your exercise; the place is in your own house, or office, or counting-room. It is not the act of exercise which gives the cold, but it is the getting cool too quick after exercising. For example, you walk very fast to get to the railroad station, or to the ferry, or to catch an omnibus, or to make time for an appointment your mind being ahead of you, the body make an over effort to keep up with it, and when you get to the desired spot, you raise your hat and find yourself in a perspiration; you take a seat, and feeling quite comfortable as to temperature, you begin to talk with a friend, or if a New Yorker, to read a newspaper, and before you are aware of it, you experience a sensation of chilliness, and the thing is done; you look around to see where the cold comes, and find a window open near you, or a door, or that you have taken a seat at the forward part of the car, and it moving against the wind, a strong draft is made through the crevices. . . .

After any kind of exercise, do not stand a moment at a street corner, for any body or any thing; nor at an open door or window. When you have been exercising in any way whatever, winter or summer, go home at once, or to some sheltered place; and however warm the room may seem to be, do not at once pull off your hat and cloak, but wait awhile, some five minutes or more, and lay aside one at a time; thus acting, a cold is impossible. Notice a moment: when you return from a brisk walk and enter a warm room, raise your hat, and the forehead will be moist; let the hat remain a few moments and feel the forehead again, and it will be dry, showing that the room is actually cooler than your body, and that with your out-door clothing on, you have cooled off full soon. Among the severest colds I have known men to take, were the result of sitting down to a meal in a cool room after a walk; or being engaged in writing, have let the fire go out, and their first admonition of it was that creeping chilliness which is the ordinary forerunner of a severe cold. Persons have often lost their lives by writing, or reading in a room where there was no fire, although the weather outside was rather uncomfortable. Sleeping in rooms long unused, has destroyed the life of many a visitor and friend. Our splendid parlors, and our nice "spare rooms," help to enrich many a doctor.—Hall's Jour. of Health.

EFFECT OF ABSTEMIOUS LIVING.

"Health and longevity are not the only results of moderation in diet. Its influence is far from being limited to the body, its effect on the mind is still more important. Julius Cæsar, constitutionally addicted to excess, when resolved on some great exploit, was accustomed to diminish his diet to an extent truly marvelous, and to this diminution he ascribed the clearness and energy of mind which distinguished him in the hour of battle. When extraordinary mental vigor was desired by the First Napoleon, he used the same means to attain it. To his rarely equalled moderation in diet, Dr. Franklin ascribed his 'clearness of ideas,' and 'quickness of perceptions,' and considered his progress in study proportionate to the degree of temperance which he practised. While Sir Isaac Newton was composing his 'Treatise on Optics,' he confined himself to bread and a little wine and water. Scarcely less rigid was the abstinence of Leibnitz, when preparing some parts of his 'Universal Language.'"—Ex.

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.—The Leeds (England) Times says that the nitrate of silver rubbed into the wound made by the teeth of a mad dog will certainly cure hydrophobia, or prevent all injurious consequences of the wound. It should be applied as soon after the accident as may be. In six weeks the virus is disseminated through the system, and then hope is gone. Youatt says he has been bitten eight or ten times, and always cured himself by this means.

LIGHT SUPPERS.—Eat light suppers. Heavy meals in the end of the day overburden the system, tend toward disease, and disturb sleep.

LINES TO SR. LUTHERA B. WEAVER.

My sister friend, I never yet
 Have gazed on thy dear face,
Ne'er felt the pressure of thy hand,
 Or met thy kind embrace.
And never have I seen thee smile,
 Or looked into thine eyes;
I long in vain to hear thy voice,
 A privilege fate denies.

And yet our hearts united are
 By sympathy and love,
And like the waters of a stream,
 Mingling we onward move.
I know thou art affliction's child,
 A sufferer for years,—
E'en from thy earliest youth thy way
 Has been bedewed with tears.

Deprived so young of what a heart
 Like yours must love so well,
To wander forth 'neath forest shades,
 And in the quiet dell;
And listen to the songs of birds
 Among the shady trees,
While to the memory thronging comes
 The thoughts of other years.

But sadder still to be denied
 With christian friends to meet,
In the assembly of the saints
 Worship at Jesus' feet.
But sister dear, the Crucified
 Saith in his holy word,
All things shall work for good to those
 Who truly love the Lord.

Sweet promise, sister, trust him still,
 He knoweth what is best;
And O how cheering, soon will come
 Our longed for, promised rest.
There, sister, we'll each other greet,
 My eyes shall look in thine,
Our hands shall meet in love's warm clasp,
 Our arms each other twine.

And we will roam the glad new earth,
 And rest in Eden's bowers,
Together pluck from life's fair tree
 Immortal fruits and flowers;
And with the loved of other days,
 Whom death hath from us riven,
Unite to do our Father's will
 As it is done in heaven.

COMMITTING SCRIPTURE TO MEMORY.

NUMBER TWO.

THE BLESSINGS RESULTING THEREFROM.

"Go forth, thou blessed book, go forth,
 And to the world thy mission tell,
That minds may learn to know thy worth,
 And souls thy blessings learn to feel."

Another special benefit resulting from investigating God's word, by thoroughly, carefully, and prayerfully committing it to memory, is heaven's blessings, or the blessings of heaven, in heaven, the glory to be revealed. God knows his word, and those who honor his word will he honor. "Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name." Psa. 138: 2. The Lord is well pleased with those who honor him by searching his word, making it the man of their counsel, their delight, their exceeding great reward, by hiding it in their hearts, that they may not sin against him. And what more speedy, sure, and effectual way of hiding the word of life in our hearts, than by committing it to memory? Our memories may be weak and treacherous. We may find great, patient, and persevering labor requisite, not only in committing certain portions of God's word to memory, but also in retaining it when committed. Some persons are very forgetful, and find great difficulty in retaining good things, great things, glorious things. Everything good and valuable almost slips out, leaks out, is caught away; it goes into one ear and out at the other; that's the last of it. The most precious, valuable things, touching the way of life and salvation, inculcated from the pulpit, in the lecture room, in books and papers, which ought to be retained, treasured up for future use, for the imparting to others, are measurably effaced, forgotten, and pass away like an idle dream. O what a loss, what a loss!

The strength of the mind depends much upon the state of the body, its vigor, its health, etc. But when we rise to a high and glorious existence, perfection angelic; when this mortal shall have put on immortality, we shall then no more groan, being burdened; no more shall we complain of obscurity, weak and treacherous memories; every faculty will be renovated, invigorated, transformed, beautified, made glorious, shining brightly as the sun. The passages of the Holy Scriptures, which we may now have to go over and over again and again, repeat and re-repeat, to retain, imprint indelibly on the mind and heart, while in houses of clay; there, in glory eternal, these blessed, golden gems will doubtless recur, come home to our immortalized vision and memory with renewed freshness, beauty, glory inexpressible.

"Our memory, that power divine,
 From whose unerring pages shine
  Our destiny.
 For there is chronicled our aim,
 In characters of living flame,
  And cannot die."

Our indefatigable, persevering labors in this vale of tears, in searching for the hidden treasure, the pearl of great price, the light that shineth in a dark place, will receive their due reward. Things dark or obscure here will there be light, effulgent, dazzling, joyful, glorious, unspeakable. All the efforts put forth in searching the blessed volume of inspiration for our usefulness and advancement in holiness, will be crowned in heaven by the King of kings and Lord of lords. These very passages, carefully and prayerfully committed here on earth, both in the Old and the New Testament, to glorify God in the salvation of our own souls, and the souls of others, will be as stars in our crowns of rejoicing forever and forever.

"The minds of earth no treasure give,
 That could this volume buy;
 In teaching me the way to live,
 It taught me how to die."

Friends of truth and love, are not these glorious anticipations, and others too numerous to mention, a sufficient inducement for you to make any sacrifice, endure any self-denial, any perseverance, in the blessed way of searching the Holy Scriptures, by daily, careful, prayerful committal? Beloved, you who complain of forgetfulness, the difficulties under which you labor in retaining good things, Bible truth, the word of life, mourn over the little progress you make in this blessed work of committing certain passages of inspiration to memory, take courage, labor on, search on, commit on, pray on, hope on; your labor in this direction is not in vain in the Lord. Every word of Bible truth carefully committed is gain, infinite gain. You have need of patience, that after you have done the will of God you may receive the fulfillment of the promise, "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come and will not tarry." What appears dim, obscure, and obliterated now, will by and by appear clear, bright, beautiful, majestic, glorious. You will, by making God's word, in this way, a lamp to your feet, and a light to your path, receive a hundred fold here, and hereafter life everlasting. Your happiness in glory will be vastly increased as eternity rolls on, for every honest, patient, persevering, prayerful effort in treasuring up the sacred truths contained in God's word, in the way here specified.

Furthermore, think of the blessings (already enumerated) resulting from this method of studying the Bible while in this life. What other means of grace can be so effectual, so sure, so speedy, so happy and joyful? The words of Christ are Spirit, life, life! By this regular, systematic, daily committal, you treasure up the marrow and fatness of the gospel, the word of God, quick and powerful, sharper than a two-edged sword. And this word is at your command always, and may be used at pleasure, while employed in your daily avocations, walking the streets, sitting at your table, around your fireside, on your slumbering pillow; by night, by day, on the bed of languishment or disease. When the adversary of God and man walketh about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour, you have at hand the sword of the Spirit, which will immediately quench all the fiery darts of Satan.

Again, think of the unspeakable advantage of having the choice, heavenly gems at your tongues end, in administering consolation to the afflicted, those appointed unto death, in exhorting sinners to repentance, a life of godliness; in teaching in Sabbath schools, Bible classes, from the sacred desk. How much more forcibly interesting and practically can we impart religious instruction at all times, and under all circumstances, than we could otherwise do, by having our minds thus richly stored with these blessed truths from the FOUNTAIN OF ALL TRUTH, by this thorough, persevering, prayerful investigation here specified. Language fails to express the advantages in every point of view. We cannot magnify too highly the superlative excellencies resulting from examining God's word in the way proposed, or paint them too glaringly. The writer of this article can testify, from long and happy experience, the gracious influences upon his own soul, and the facilities afforded in communicating life and salvation to others, from searching out and committing to memory daily, these precious, sparkling gems; these "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The benefits derived from them cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx or the sapphire. The gold and the crystal cannot equal them. No mention shall be made of coral or of pearls, for the price of them is above rubies. The most holy, useful, joyful, in all ages, testify to these facts.

Friends, will you try this method of searching the Holy Scriptures? begin now to treasure up little by little, one verse, two verses, four, six, eight, ten, daily, as time and opportunity afford. The most devotional and practical portions of inspiration, the great and precious promises, both in the Old and the New Testament, the essence and quintescence of Bible truth; the life, spirit, and marrow of that wisdom which cometh from above. Will you? meanwhile, watering it with prayer, as with the dew of heaven.

Parents, will you commence this course of Bible instruction with your little ones, at the early dawnings of intellectual and spiritual life. Insist on their regular committal of some two or three verses, or even one verse, daily, for recitation. It may be seed sown on good ground, that will bring forth fruit, thirty, sixty, or a hundred fold in this life, and in the life to come life everlasting. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters."—Isa. 55: 1.

"Wanderer in a stranger land,
 Thirsting, fainting, on the way;
Seek the fountain near at hand,
 Come and slake thy thirst to-day;
Here are waters running o'er;
 Drink of them and thirst no more."

Select the most practical parts of the Psalms, the proverbs, the prophets, the evangelists, the epistles; select whole psalms, whole chapters; commit them thoroughly, accurately, word for word. Repeat them over and over; lying down, rising up, going out, coming in, while at your various occupations, and at the table spread with heaven's bounties. Fix them indelibly in your very soul; hide them in your heart, as David did, that you may not sin against God. Meditate on these passages of God's word till they become more precious than gold; sweeter, also, than honey and the honey comb. Ask God to strengthen your memory, your intellectual faculties, that these blessed truths of inspiration may find permanent lodgment; prove "a lamp to your feet, and a light to your path," that you may be able to exclaim with the Psalmist, "Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage forever."

"O may these heavenly pages be
 Our ever dear delight;
And still new beauties may we see,
 And still increasing light."

THE COMING REIGN OF TERROR.

LUKE xxi. 36; 1 THESS. iv. 16, 17.

It is a generally acknowledged fact—acknowledged not only by those who compare the signs of the times with the Word of God, but even by those who are inattentive to the prophetic truth—that we have entered upon critical times. Some of God's servants hesitate not to declare that we have entered upon the crisis which will bring on the revelation of the Beast, or the Antichrist in his last form, and usher in the coming of our blessed Lord. Certainly, looking at the lamentable state of religion in the so-called Christian countries all over Christendom, and in our own country, we cannot be wrong in asserting that "the falling away" (2 Thess. 2: 3) has not only begun, but has far advanced. When we read of 198 clergymen of the Church of England (calling themselves the Anglo-Catholic Church) making an earnest application to the idolatrous Church of Rome to be united with her; yea, and when some of the dignitaries and influential laymen of the church supplicate the Greek Church—little differing from Popery—to extend the hand of brotherly fellowship to them, what shall we call this but "a falling away from the faith once delivered to the saints?" Living members of Christ's Church are united in him, be they now attached to whatever section of the Christian Church, and the endeavor to unite dead bodies must be futile in the extreme. Then what shall we say of the infidelity of Bishop Colenso, and his supporters of various shades of unbelief and scepticism, and the masses of unbelievers in the inspiration of the holy Scriptures, both high and low, scattered throughout our land and British dependencies? We know the Apostle Paul distinctly told the Thessalonians when they should see this Apostasy making its appearance in the Christian Church, then they might look for the revelation of "the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition." With the revelation—rise from the bottomless pit—of this monster of iniquity, persecution against the saints will commence, for he will demand exclusive worship, as "he will deny the Father and the Son" (1 John 2: 22). If, therefore, the saints are to be exempted from this persecution, they must either be taken up by the Lord, or in some way protected and saved. For this there is ground to believe in the Word of God.—The Rainbow.

NUMBER TWENTY-SEVEN.

THE QUEEN OF SHEBA'S VISIT.

David, the warrior king, and the sweet singer of Israel, slumbered with his fathers. The sounds of war had ceased. The hills of Judah no longer shook beneath the tread of battle-clad hosts. Israel had conquered a peace, and the nations sought alliance rather than conflict. Solomon sat on the throne of his father David, and flourished with a magnificence that outshone the fondest dream of oriental poet. The wealth of farthest Ind shed its dazzling gems into his lap. The spices and perfumes of Araby the Blest were his, and his navy brought the finest gold from distant Ophir. The isles of ocean, and the shores of far-off lands, were searched for some new tribute to add to the glory and splendor of his reign.

Zion was decorated with palaces for the court of Solomon. Mount Morrah was crowned with a temple for the worship of Jehovah unrivaled for splendor. Its courts and all its appointments glittered with untold wealth. There, where ages before the rude altar of Abraham was laid for the sacrifice of Isaac, the brazen altars of a grateful people arose at last, when all the enemies of Israel were scattered, and the greatest and wisest of kings ruled in peace. There the tribes came up to worship and receive the blessing of the high priest. There the penitential sacrifice was offered, and the odorous incense went up to heaven in gratitude from a whole nation. Every Hebrew had a longing desire to worship there; and never did his heart so expand with joy, as when the temple of his love first arose before his wondering vision.

But wealth was not the only endowment of Solomon; he surpassed all the sages and princes who had existed before him for wisdom. His knowledge extended to all things. "He spoke three thousand proverbs, and his songs were a thousand and five. And he spake of trees, from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall. He spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes." His fame went out among all nations, and the wise men from far came to listen to his words of wisdom, and enrich their understanding with his proverbs.

But among all who attended upon the king, there was one whose visit is described at length by the sacred historian. The name and fame of the king of Israel had reached the southern shores of Arabia, and the Queen of Sheba, the happy Araby of old, was filled with enthusiasm. There were wise men about her throne, who had taught her much; enough to make her heart thirst for more. The poets of her spicy groves had sung to her of the happiness of her people, and warbled the notes of their tenderest dreams, but that was not enough; the great monarch of the Hebrews sang of all she had ever loved, and more than she had dreamed of. He sang of flowers, such as she had gathered in childhood, ere the diadem had encircled her brow; of the trees that might have sheltered her; of the stars she had gazed upon, and of earth in all its varied forms of beauty. She had caught the echo of his songs and of his proverbs across the Arabian desert sands, and she longed to go and see if all this was true. Queen Balkis, the name tradition preserves for us, mused long upon the journey that was to be the great event of her life. It was no ordinary undertaking in those days. More than a thousand miles intervened, a weary journey, not of days, but of weeks, and perhaps of months. But, nothing daunted, the beautiful Queen of the South made preparations for her departure for the court of Solomon. She loaded her camels with the spices and perfumes of her land, and gold and gems of untold value, as a sovereign present from one ruler to another.

At length she started on her memorable journey. She must often have gazed back upon the happy land of her rule, with the thought of one who was upon an uncertain course; and felt some solicitude for herself, as she passed the last landmark of her realm. The days passed in quick succession. New scenes presented themselves. Cities, plains, deserts, mountains, still her train pressed on, till the northern limits of Arabia were reached, where Petra reared its rock-cut palaces and temples, then gay with bustling life, long since silent with the gloom of desolation. Then she passed on, till the vale of Jordan refreshed her vision, and crossing its stream, she entered the Land of Promise, which had seemed like a fable-land to her youthful dreams. Canaan was fruitful then with the vine and the olive. Its hills and valleys teemed with the bounties of a favored land, ere the curse of heaven had fallen upon it.

At length Jerusalem greeted the vision of Queen Balkis. Her heart was filled with emotion. She gazed upon its stately walls and grand surroundings. Magnificent palaces filled the scene, and on the heights of Moriah rose the temple of the Most High, that dazzled the eye with its golden splendors. Then the Queen was escorted into Jerusalem by the attendants of Solomon, and sumptuously entertained by him. The long and weary journey was ended, and she had leisure to gratify the desire of her heart. She was shown all the wonders of the sacred city, the palaces of the king, and above all the great temple, where the Hebrews worshiped. Then she sought to prove the wisdom of the king by many hard questions, which she had long studied to propound to him. When all her problems had been solved, and she had listened to the profound sayings of the king, and heard him recite the glowing songs of his fertile muse, she was filled with admiration. "And she said to the king, It was a true report that I heard in mine own land of thy acts and of thy wisdom. Howbeit, I believed not the words until I came, and mine eyes had seen it; and, behold, the half was not told me. Thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard. Happy are the men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom. Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighteth in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel; because the Lord loved Israel forever; therefore made he thee king to do judgment and justice." Then the Queen bestowed her costly gifts upon the king, and received in return all that she desired.

Satisfied with the result of her visit, repaid for the weary journey she had undertaken, Queen Balkis bade adieu to the court of Solomon, and returned to her realm of Araby the Blest, to muse over the strange scenes she had witnessed, and ponder upon the words of wisdom that had fallen from the lips of the sage Solomon. Thus ended the memorable visit of Queen Balkis, whose name still lives, because she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to listen to the wisdom of Solomon, while the names of long lines of oriental kings and princes have perished from the memory of man.

TO A MOURNER.

Do you miss him from the fireside,
 When calm twilight gathers round,
When the cricket on the hearthstone
 Chirps his welcome evening sound?

Do you miss him in the morning,
 When the lark first leaves her nest?
Do you miss him at still twilight,
 When all nature sinks to rest?

Do you miss his welcome footstep,
 Sounding near the open door?
Do you miss his voice of gladness,
 That you hear it now no more?

True, there's sorrow in your portion,
 Sadness ever lurks 'neath joy;
There's but one place—yon heaven—
 Where all weal has not alloy.

Though we lose our fondest treasures,
 And the heart breaks 'neath the load,
Still thy hope is like an anchor,
 Cheering by the blessed word.

Then be patient, face the trial,
 Jesus' cross still make thine own,—
Thou shalt reach th' eternal harbor,
 Thou shalt dwell with Him at home.

ELIJAH YET TO COME.

Some think that the words, "I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of that great and dreadful day of the Lord" (Mal. 4: 5), was fulfilled in the advent of John the Baptist; and that all we are to understand by the promise of Elijah preceding the second advent is merely the spirit of preparation being infused every where previous to that event. But this does not seem to me to exhaust the words of scripture. For instance, our Lord says, "Truly Elijah must first come, and restore all things."—Matt. 17: 11. But then he adds, "Elijah is come already." The two things seem inconsistent; but it does appear to me, from various reasons, that Elijah will personally precede Christ who comes to reign, just as John preceded Christ who came to suffer. Recollect that Elijah needs no resurrection from the dead; he never saw death; he was translated; and why translated unless for some sublime mission similar to that which is here indicated? Let us mark well our Lord's words. He says, "Truly Elijah shall first come and restore all things." But if John the Baptist was Elijah, can it be said of John that he restored all things? He did not restore any thing at all; he preached repentance. Then if you say, How do you explain the other passage—viz: "Elijah is come already"? I explain it by referring to the corresponding passage in Luke 1: 16, 17, where it was said of John the Baptist, "He shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elijah." But he was not Elijah. Our Lord says of John the Baptist that "he came and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed; likewise also shall the Son of man suffer of them." What does he here say? He says John the Baptist came, and they killed him: but that cannot be said of Elijah; he never was killed; he was translated; he is in glory; and if he had come to the earth in the person of John the Baptist, he could not have been killed. But certain parties appealed to John himself. They came to him and said, "Art thou Messiah? He said no. Art thou Elijah? And he said, I am not Elijah."

Well, John the Baptist surely knew who he was, and yet he denied that he was Elijah who was to come and restore all things. The passage, "This is Elijah that ought to come," the French translators have given us the true meaning of: "C'est l' Elie qui devait venir." This is THAT Elijah who ought to come NOW, at this moment, is John the Baptist; he is come in the spirit and power of Elijah; but Elijah personally is yet to come and precede my glorious advent to triumph and reign. It does seem highly probable that before our Lord comes, Elijah, who never died, and is not therefore to be raised from the dead, will herald the return of the Prince of Peace; just as a suffering Baptist came to precede a suffering Christ, so a glorified Elijah will come to precede a glorified and triumphant Christ. At least I cannot explain these passages in any other way.—Dr. Cumming.

For the World's Crisis.

TALKING TOO MUCH.

"In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin; but he that refraineth his lips is wise."—Prov. 10: 19.

How often are those who would be saints, who are even striving to be saints,—how often are they taken in the snare of talking too much. A sister visited some friends, and staid with them a week, and writes thus of the result: "I feel that I am not all right before the Lord. When I went to D. I felt a firm trust in the Lord, but returned home rather lean. The church there have in a great measure lost their spirituality, and I talked too much, and prayed too little."

Now the remedy for this evil is to have a watch set "at the door of our lips," and have a "bridle" on the tongue. If we find the current too strong for us, and we are in danger of being carried away by it, make an excuse (if possible) to withdraw, and engage in earnest prayer. Perhaps in some cases it will be best to avoid the company of "unruly and vain talkers"; yet it will not be possible for all to do so. We cannot all choose our position, or our associates. But when we can have our choice, let us choose the company of the wise, for "he that walketh with wise men shall be wise; but a companion of fools shall be destroyed."

Cement for Wood and Glass.—Dissolve common glue in a carpenter's glue pot, and add to it finely sifted wood ashes, until it becomes somewhat thicker, but still pasty. THE LAST TIMES.

Remarks of the Bishop of Oxford at a late Missionary meeting in England.

I have no doubt myself that the last attempt upon the truth of Christ will come in, not with any open denial of its verity, but with a courteous admission of its truth.—At the same time there will be a sapping of its distinctive feature. I think that the aspect of men's minds at the present time shows us that this will be the form of the danger, universal toleration, toleration not only among Christian sects, one towards another, but a deep respect for religiousness everywhere, always providing that it is not that troublesome thing which, by being believed, affects men's conduct, is any limitation upon their thoughts, or even troubles what is called the course of society. That they will all agree together to put out. I have no doubt myself that unbelief contains within itself the seed of the most intensely hating persecution the world has ever yet seen. Instead of being tolerant, I believe that the very moment it has achieved its own victory, toleration will be the thing above all others it will hate with an intensity short only of the hatred the evil spirit himself has for the simple faith of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ.

It must be so, I [illegible], because unbelief, in whatever form it comes, is the exaltation of the human intellect and the human will, over the voice of revelation and revealed knowledge. It is thwarted to the utmost the very moment that it is met and confronted by the mighty rock of revealed truth. The stream flows on with the most delicious smoothness when there is nothing to thwart it. "Let us all love one another." Let us be tolerant to each other's views. If you choose to worship the devil, worship him, if you only do it quietly. If you choose to worship an anti-devil, do so if you do so quietly. Let us go on altogether in our worldly ways and worldly thoughts, holding nothing that may be troublesome or disagreeable. Anything disagreeable in religion is such a shocking thing. Well, then comes the most disagreeable thing possible, the revelation of an absolute truth, which says, "We will have nothing to do with this fellowship of evil. You are leading men into absolute destruction; you are promising them liberty, and making them slaves; you are handing them over to the devil under the pretence of liberty and emancipation from their shackles."

Believing then, as I do, that there may be heard upon the winds these footfalls of the coming of the great Antichrist; that this which we hear whispered thus, and see spreading, we know not how, through the air, is just the precursing atmosphere which comes before his advent, I say it is the time, if ever the time was, for those who fear and love the Lord to rouse themselves up, and to be working mightily, that they may establish indeed the hiding-places of his faith throughout the earth. Yea, the very desires of spiritual men point to the same thing. I suppose one of the greatest desires with those who are in earnest in religion, and which is altogether new to the present times, is the longing for greater unity in Christendom.

There is also another reason to touch upon. This is a season when the judgments of the Lord are abroad. Who can doubt that it is so? When we read only to-day, "I will send plagues upon men and upon beasts," could any of you help thinking of the signs of the present times? Is not the mysterious disease that has entered amongst our cattle at this moment—is not that, if the Bible be true, one of God's writings upon the nation's wall, warning them to turn to him? Remember also the whisper, rising now almost to a voice, of the onward march of the old pestilence of cholera. It is again nestling upon the breeze of the evening, and is not this another of God's writings upon the wall, warning you that you do his work, and turn to him with a new zeal, whilst yet the opportunity of turning is left to you.—The Guardian.

SPEAK NO EVIL ONE OF ANOTHER.

A certain preacher presents us with the following definition of evil speaking: "A man speaks evil of his fellow man when he speaks of any thing which he knows to be wrong in character or conduct, to a third person. All comments on the motives, or actions, or lives of others, when they are not present to hear them, and defend themselves, are positively sinful, and sometimes horribly malignant and treacherous. There is only one exception to this principle. If you know that an individual has committed a crime, or intended to do so, by which the property or life of another was, or would be, endangered, it would be your duty to speak of it, to prevent the evil. But except this, all remarks upon the real or supposed defects of others, in their absence, is evil. If a person go and utter things affecting the reputation of another, which he does not know to be actually true, he is guilty of slander, he utters a false invective, if he utters a thing, knowing at the same time it is not true, that he has made it himself; he not only slanders, but he adds to it the crime of willful lying. When this is done designedly to injure the reputation, or usefulness, or standing of the person spoken of, it is termed backbiting—devouring a man's character, a good man, without his knowledge. The slanderer travels about from house to house, for the purpose of circulating the evil—he becomes a whisperer. Sometimes the scandal-monger is not contented with the display of his wares, he wants to recruit his stock; he enters into your affairs; he endeavors to win your confidence, to become master of your secrets; to render himself important in your family—he is then "a busy-body in other men's matters." If he is expert in this wickedness, if he possesses that detestable disposition of heart which rejoices not in truth, but rejoices in iniquity, and revels in confusion, doubt and misery, as in a congenial atmospere, he will travel far and near to collect news, reports, and scandals—in other words, he is a mean, despicable character."

Sometimes this vile, detestable being possesses the low cunning to scatter his moral poison by other means than positive assertion; by other methods than by direct statements. He says but little, but that little is tagged with "buts." You often hear him speaking of others somewhat as follows: "He's a good kind of a man, but, every bean has its black." "Such a man is very friendly, but, it is in his own way." "My neighbor can be very liberal, but, you must catch him in the humor."

Sometimes these murderers of human character make a fiendish use of half sentences, which are full of malignity and deadly venom. Mighty stress is laid upon "May be's," and "I'll say no more." "Let us hope not," and "They do say so." Thus confirming the evil they affect to deplore, more under the semblance of pity and prudential caution, than they possibly could do in any other shape short of demonstration.—Earnest Christian.

CHURCH VACATIONS.

A pastor of one of the churches in Philadelphia, who is spending a few weeks in one of the cities of New England, recently made the following allusions to church vacations, in a letter to one of his deacons, who is also the superintendent of his Sabbath school:

"As for closing the church doors, or suspending the sessions of the Sabbath school, during the hot days, I sincerely hope you will never, for one moment, consent to entertain the idea, by whomsoever it may be advocated. The custom is a bad one. They have fallen in with it here to some extent, and the results are deplorable. Men and boys are creatures of habit; and any breaking up of the religious habits of the people is most calamitous. Boys shut out of Sunday school during August, do not all return to the school in September. They form habits of Sabbath desecration which last till August comes again, and often till the end of life! Church doors closed in summer, open in vain when autumn returns to receive back all the worshipers. All will not come. Some have gone fatally into sin, and some sleep their last sleep!

The so-called first class or fashionable churches of this town, commenced this irreligious practice a few years ago, and now the second class and the third class churches are trying to imitate, lest they should be thought unfashionable! Were it not so serious a thing, it would certainly be most laughable! Think of it; a church of Jesus Christ, striving at such ruinous rate to frustrate the very object for which it was organized.

The truth is, churches are like pendulums. They swing. Now they are at this extreme, and now at that. And you mark my word—except, perhaps, in the case of those very few churches which have but little vital piety, and money enough to foot the bills, whether or no, the churches are bound to swing back from where they now are. The experiment of church vacations is not going to stand the test. While a few of us are away, wisely, necessarily, perhaps, the great masses still swarm and sin and die, in the streets and houses of our great cities. How dare we close our church doors against them? If a few of the hardest workers, and most patient burden-bearers, with nerves and brains over-tasked, must be gone for a month, then by all means put the reins in the hands of the best and most trustworthy of those who remain at home, and let the chariot of salvation move on."—Watchman and Reflector.

HEALTH OF AMERICAN WOMEN.

BY MRS. E. P. MILLER, M. D.

Almost overwhelmed as I am at the thought that the women of America are, with scarce an exception, diseased, I enter the prolific field impelled by an earnest desire to help my suffering sisters, and impress upon them the importance of early attention to even slight deviations from the standard of health which they may discover in themselves or their daughters.

The foundation for thousands of ruined constitutions is lain in babyhood—ay, even before the babe has an independent existence—and is it any wonder that the superstructure is weak and tottering? The aching head and quivering nerves, the half-used lungs and enfeebled sotmach, the torpid liver and inactive bowels can never furnish to the embryo the means for a healthful organization or supply proper nourishment for the development of the new-born babe.

It is said, and truly, that "if we would improve the world we must begin with the children;" but a word to the mothers, or those who are liable to become such, may be the means of saving some from the evils which oftimes have strong hold before the child has ever seen the light.

Look well to it, O ye mothers! that ye leave no avenue untrod that shall lead you to a knowledge of yourselves and your conditions, for a sense of our own needs is a long step toward the acquisition of a supply for them. . . .

Let me whisper in your ear a truth of which you perhaps have never thought. From many, very many, of the homes of the poor would grim poverty soon stalk out at the door, if the table were but simply and healthfully laid, and the clothing more plainly and healthfully made; for to the table, and the vanity displayed in dress, may be attributed the lack of health in thousands of our American homes.

But to those upon whom the iron hand of poverty rests not, those in the middle and higher walks of life, I have somewhat to say. Could each and all of the diseased within your ranks, with one fell swoop be set aside, how many think you would remain? So few, I trow, that it would be scarcely worth the while to count; for upon those on whom no definite disease is preying, nervousness and debility have so strong a hold that life seems scarce worth the effort you are compelled to make in order to keep even your slight hold upon it.

Yet why need it be thus? Situated as you are, amid comforts and pleasures, with "neither poverty nor riches" to eat out your happiness, your life should be a constant joy, your every heart-beat full of gratitude for the blessings which are yours.

But can I help you to overcome your difficulties and make bright your cloudy way? First and foremost, see to it that you have plenty of pure air to breathe, for God hath given this so lavishly that we show great ingratitude when we neglect to receive and use it; next, be sure you use the organs which have been given you with which to breathe this air—expand your lungs, fill them with nature's purifier, oxygen, and thus induce the bright glow and the ready flow of the life current coursing through your veins; make it an hourly duty to inhale fresh air to the full extent of your lungs, and you can not conceive how much this one little item will do to improve your health and strength; but in order to do this your clothing must be loose and free, so that every organ in your body shall have full play. You cannot breathe in a tight dress. And the miserable attempts at breathing which our corseted women of the nineteenth century have made, are filling the bills of youthful mortality, and telling their tales of woe upon thousands of the children who survive.

Another prolific source of disease is found in the "good things" (?) with which your tables abound. The quality of the food is such that the temptation to overeat is almost irresistible, so that the excessive quantity eaten becomes a greater curse than any quality could be if partaken with moderation. And here let me say that you, mothers, have a sin to answer for greater than you can estimate, inasmuch as you constantly and thoughtlessly place before your husbands and sons those articles of diet which tend most surely to arouse and foster the animal passions at the expense of vital stamina and mental vigor. Look well to it, and very many of you will find that your own sufferings in the marriage relations are dependent upon this, and that you are laying the foundation for lives of misery to those whom your sons may choose for wives.

Spread your table only with simple, healthful food, and if it be not too late your own miseries will be decreased tenfold, and your children to the third and fourth generations will call you blessed.

And still another hint may not be out of place. "Cleanliness is next to godliness," and if you would, that health should reign within your homes, the millions of little sewers with which your bodies are supplied must be kept cleansed and free; the pores of the skin can not be clogged without serious detriment to the health, for the effete matter which these pores should carry off if thrown back upon the internal organs, and becomes the seed of sufferings untold. Water in abundance is at hand in every house, and even little children may be taught to bathe the entire body thoroughly and properly, so there can be no excuse for disregarding this great necessity of our being.

Exercise too, of proper kind and quantity, should be taken daily, a portion of it, at least, in the open air, for inaction shows speedily its ill effects upon the entire system. Those who are feeble should exercise under the supervision of some one competent to direct their movements, but exercise either active or passive should be a part of the daily routine as much as eating or sleeping.—Herald of Health.

HOW PEOPLE TAKE COLD.

Not by tumbling into the river and draggling home wet as a drowned rat; not by being pitched into the mud, or spilled out in the snow in sleighing time; not by walking for hours over shoe-top in mud; not by soaking in the rain without an umbrella; not by scrubbing the floor until the un-nameable sticks to you like a wet rag; not by hoeing potatoes until you are in a lather of sweat; these are not the things which give people colds; and yet they are all the time telling us how they "caught their death by exposure."

The time for taking cold is after your exercise; the place is in your own house, or office, or counting-room. It is not the act of exercise which gives the cold, but it is the getting cool too quick after exercising. For example, you walk very fast to get to the railroad station, or to the ferry, or to catch an omnibus, or to make time for an appointment your mind being ahead of you, the body make an over effort to keep up with it, and when you get to the desired spot, you raise your hat and find yourself in a perspiration; you take a seat, and feeling quite comfortable as to temperature, you begin to talk with a friend, or if a New Yorker, to read a newspaper, and before you are aware of it, you experience a sensation of chilliness, and the thing is done; you look around to see where the cold comes, and find a window open near you, or a door, or that you have taken a seat at the forward part of the car, and it moving against the wind, a strong draft is made through the crevices. . . .

After any kind of exercise, do not stand a moment at a street corner, for any body or any thing; nor at an open door or window. When you have been exercising in any way whatever, winter or summer, go home at once, or to some sheltered place; and however warm the room may seem to be, do not at once pull off your hat and cloak, but wait awhile, some five minutes or more, and lay aside one at a time; thus acting, a cold is impossible. Notice a moment: when you return from a brisk walk and enter a warm room, raise your hat, and the forehead will be moist; let the hat remain a few moments and feel the forehead again, and it will be dry, showing that the room is actually cooler than your body, and that with your out-door clothing on, you have cooled off full soon. Among the severest colds I have known men to take, were the result of sitting down to a meal in a cool room after a walk; or being engaged in writing, have let the fire go out, and their first admonition of it was that creeping chilliness which is the ordinary forerunner of a severe cold. Persons have often lost their lives by writing, or reading in a room where there was no fire, although the weather outside was rather uncomfortable. Sleeping in rooms long unused, has destroyed the life of many a visitor and friend. Our splendid parlors, and our nice "spare rooms," help to enrich many a doctor.—Hall's Jour. of Health.

EFFECT OF ABSTEMIOUS LIVING.

"Health and longevity are not the only results of moderation in diet. Its influence is far from being limited to the body; its effect on the mind is still more important. Julius Cæsar, constitutionally addicted to excess, when resolved on some great exploit, was accustomed to diminish his diet to an extent truly marvelous, and to this diminution he ascribed the clearness and energy of mind which distinguished him in the hour of battle. When extraordinary mental vigor was desired by the First Napoleon, he used the same means to attain it. To his rarely equalled moderation in diet, Dr. Franklin ascribed his 'clearness of ideas,' and 'quickness of perceptions,' and considered his progress in study proportionate to the degree of temperance which he practised. While Sir Isaac Newton was composing his 'Treatise on Optics,' he confined himself to bread and a little wine and water. Scarcely less rigid was the abstinence of Leibnitz, when preparing some parts of his 'Universal Language.'"—Ex.

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.—The Leeds (England) Times says that the nitrate of silver rubbed into the wound made by the teeth of a mad dog will certainly cure hydrophobia, or prevent all injurious consequences of the wound. It should be applied as soon after the accident as may be. In six weeks the virus is disseminated through the system, and then hope is gone. Youatt says he has been bitten eight or ten times, and always cured himself by this means.

LIGHT SUPPERS.—Eat light suppers. Heavy meals in the end of the day overburden the system, tend toward disease, and disturb sleep.

"I WOULD SEE JESUS."

I would see Jesus,—he is the way,
He will guide me safe through by night and by day;
I would see Jesus,—he is the truth,
I love him to-day, I loved him in youth.

I would see Jesus,—he is the life,
He'll save and protect me in peril and strife;
I would see Jesus,—he is my friend,
He has said "I'll be with thee even unto the end."

I would see Jesus,—he is my all,
I must trust in his grace or surely fall;
I would see Jesus,—on earth come to reign,
To banish all sorrow, all grief and all pain.

I would see Jesus,—O hasten the hour
When I shall behold him in Eden's fair bower;
I would see Jesus,—O come is my cry,
He is my Rock, he is higher than I.

I would see Jesus,—is the cry of each saint,
Come end all my sorrows, my tears and complaints;
I would see Jesus,—with him ever stay,
Live in bright glory, in eternal day.

I shall see Jesus,—very soon I believe,
The signs which declare it assuages my grief;
I shall see Jesus,—O may I endure,
And through that dear home salvation secure.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

In all communities, and in every society in which we mingle at the present day, there are plenty of people who never thought of doubting that the holy Scriptures prove plainly and satisfactorily, the cherished doctrine of "the immortality of the soul." Taught to believe from infancy that the doctrine lies at the foundation of all correct religious principles, most people of sincere convictions fear and distrust the man who denies the truthfulness, and asks for the proof of the doctrine in question; and when told that the Bible does not teach it, that true christianity, the religion of Christ and the apostles, neither require nor will admit it, incredulity, if not horror, seizes them.

"Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

How hard to straighten that which has grown crooked, and how hard to eradicate the trunk and roots of error, that have been nourished from infancy to manhood in the human heart.

It is easy to show the fallacy of all the proofs brought from the Bible, and to show, also, that the Bible is perverted by all who attempt to prove the doctrine from the Scriptures; but it is not so easy to convince people, even by clear proof and sound logic, that the doctrine is a wicked error, totally opposed to Bible christianity.

The writer has been presented with a few passages, through a friend, cited by a person whom we suppose most implicitly believes that they prove what he believes, and for the sake of many as well as his, these will be briefly examined. One of the passages is almost always referred to with the utmost confidence, as a finality. It is found Matt. 10: 28,—"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." It seems to be understood that where the word "soul" occurs in the holy Scriptures, we must per force, as if in duty bound, understand that something, which is supposed to dwell in the body while it lives, and at death takes it flight to live undying and immortal in a "spirit land," in joy indescribable, or pains inexpressible, is meant. But this passage, by no construction, can be made to prove that. It proves that the soul, whatever it is, can be killed. It implies a threatening that God will kill the soul of the sinner, and if the soul is killed, it cannot live afterwards, and if it can be killed it has no immortality. For the nonsense that the soul may be killed and still live, is inadmissable. Either it may be killed and not live at all thereafter, or it is not to be killed at all; and if not to be killed at all, why does the language inculcate a fear of being killed? Here the proof amounts to no proof, but proves exactly the contrary; that whatever the soul is, it is not immortal, but mortal most decidedly.

But the truth is, that the passage teaches no such soul dwelling in man, distinct from the body, as is believed in. The word "soul" in the text, signifies LIFE, and not an indwelling immortality, as will be now sufficiently proved. Referring to a copy of the New Testament in the Greek language, the word is found to be a translation of the word psukee, and used by the writers of the gospel to mean life. In Matt. 2: 20, we read, "Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel: for they are dead which sought the young child's (psukeen) life." Again, in Matt. 6: 25,—"Therefore, I say unto you, take no thought for your (psukee) life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink," etc. "Is not the (psukeen) life more than meat?" etc. And Matt. 16: 25, 26,—"For whosoever will save his (psukeen) life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his (psukeen) life for my sake shall find it; for what is man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his (psukeen) life, or what shall a man give in exchange for his (psukees) life." On the two last verses quoted, the Methodist doctor, the learned Adam Clark, in his Commentary, says: "Why our translators have rendered the word life in one verse, and soul in the other, I know not; for sure I am, that it means life in both verses." How would it sound if we should read in the above passages, "the young child's soul," "Take no thought for your soul, what ye shall eat," "He that saveth his soul shall lose it," etc.

In the text then under consideration, we ought to read, "And fear not them which kill the body, but cannot kill the (psukeen) life," that is, the promised life, which, if faithful, the disciples were to have when raised up from their graves at the last day, when Jesus returns. The chapter commences with an account of twelve men, whose names are given, as about to be sent forth to preach, and the whole of it is taken up with what Jesus said to them about their mission, and what was to be their condition. "Behold, I send you forth as sheep among wolves," ver. 16. "And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake," ver. 22. These verses show that their persons and lives were not secure. But then, "fear not them which kill the body," or your present life. For, as in the 39th verse, "He that findeth his (psukeen) life (or shall we read soul?), shall lose it, and he that loseth his (psukeen) life for my sake shall find it." Find it!—but what shall he find? Why, the thing that he had lost,—his life, the psukeen, the soul, if you must have it so, reader. Therefore, if the magistrate or an enemy killed the body, or present life, so that the life was lost, he could not destroy or kill the promised life, for at the resurrection that life would be restored, or found. It would be interrupted, but not destroyed. For if he is faithful, and for my sake loseth his life, says Jesus, "he shall find it;"—the "it," the life, that was taken by the enemy, he shall find, or have again. Not that most unscriptural and chimerical immortal soul-life, which pious errorists dream of; nothing of the kind. But if the disciples through fear of them that might kill them, proved recreant, and should apostatize and escape death, and so in this way find, or save their lives, then God would effectually and forever kill the life, by destroying both (psukeen) life and body in gehenna. They would escape being murdered, it is true, by apostatizing, and so find their lives; but then they should lose their lives so found, and forever. The enemy could kill the body, but God could, and would if they were faithful, give the life again, at the resurrection, to the loser. But God could and would effectually destroy life and body of the apostate, beyond any means or hope of restoration. Hence Jesus says to them, in the next three verses, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father, but the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows." As if he had said, "Do not fear, though the time may be long, if you lose your life, before you find it. He who sees the sparrow fall, and numbers all the hairs of your head, can never overlook or forget you. You may repose in the dust, ages on ages, but your Father will note your fall, and restore to you your life in due time. Ye are of more value than many sparrows."

Such, reader, is the hope, and the only hope, that Jesus ever gave his disciples, or any other man, of the future; the hope of a resurrection to life. Their lives might be laid down, or taken away, by persecutors, but they should take them again, or have them restored, at the resurrection. What they lost they should find again. Hence fear not, says Jesus, "them that kill the body, but cannot kill the (promised) life. But fear him who is able to destroy both (your promised) life and body in gehenna."—Gospel Banner.

THE DAY AND HOUR.

The following extract from a sermon on the "Day and Hour," by Dr. Seiss, of Philadelphia, is worthy of a candid consideration. We commend the entire work to all of our readers, as the best thing on that subject we have ever seen. See book notices.—ED.

Taking, then, the grammatical form of the passages (Matt. 24: 36; Mark 13: 32; Acts 1: 7), and the facts derived from other portions of Scripture which render a variation of that form impossible and absurd in two cases out of three, I set it down as an unwarranted straining of Scripture, to base upon them the doctrine that no man shall ever know the day or hour of Christ's return, or the times or seasons of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, until that day or hour arrives.

But more than this. It seems to me that I can find clear and positive proof in the holy Scriptures, that the time will come when what was so great a mystery when the text was uttered, shall become largely familiar to devout inquirers. I know the sneers and ridicule with which some satisfy themselves, and try to satisfy others, to the contrary. I am also acquainted with the sad mistakes that have been made in every age by men too confident in the belief that they were the favored ones to discover the day and hour of our Lord's return. I know the disrepute into which the doctrine of the second advent has been brought, and how the world and the church have been set to scoffing at it, by the failure of the many too sanguine theories of its friends about dates and years. Nor do I doubt for a moment that Satan has often tempted good men to over-confidence in specific calculations of this sort, and thus done much mischief to their reputation, and to the cause of truth and righteousness. But I am satisfied he has another tack in the opposite direction, especially now that the time is drawing near, which is a thousandfold more dangerous, viz: to tempt and persuade people that this subject is closely and forever sealed from human knowledge; that it is only perilous to touch it; that not 'all Scripture is profitable;' and whatever relates to dates and numbers, times and seasons, days and hours, is to be eschewed as the food of fanaticism and the bane of sober faith. I believe that there are ministers and people whom the devil has just in this way drawn off from one of the great fundamental departments of the divine teachings, and so deluded as to transform them into infidels and scoffers without their knowing it. I believe that there are those now living, and rated by the world as good and active christians and ministers, whom the Lord when he cometh will cut off, and assign a portion with hypocrites and unbelievers just because of the foregone conclusion into which they have settled, that all this ado about the nearness of the end, and the impending character of the advent, or any thing definite upon the prophecies of the future, is mere unscriptural nonsense, and not to be noticed by sober-minded people. I find this specifically predicted by Christ and his inspired servants, in many places, and, therefore, am bound to believe it, and to declare it, however it may savor of dogmatism and uncharity. The truth of God must not be made subservient to respect for men.

Looking through the Scriptures, I find them scattered over with dates and numbers having reference to these very times and seasons. I find them so interwoven with nearly all the prophetic histories concerning Jews and Gentiles, the church and the world, Christ and Antichrist, that it is impossible to take up sacred prophecy without touching upon them.

I find them so large an element of the divine predictions, that writers on the subject must needs endure the sneer of being prophetic arithmeticians. What, then, am I to make of these dates and numbers—these references to years, and days, and hours? For what purpose has God put them in the Bible, which he has given for my enlightenment and guidance? Has he put them there to teach me something, or only to try the depth of my sobriety in not touching them, and to make me a fanatic, if I perchance should study them and find out their meaning? Is it the part of piety and faith to say that these things are not for any body to understand, that no one can know them till the events to which they relate are fulfilled, and so put upon my good and gracious Lord the character of one who gives me definite instruction with one hand, and utterly conceals it from me with the other?

Besides, I find the Scriptures very largely taken up with descriptions of signs and tokens, upon the appearance of which they command me to draw certain beliefs and affections, which have direct reference to the times and seasons in question. What, then, am I to do with these impressive passages? Am I to shut my eyes and ears to them, and say, "O, that's all mystery; many good and wise men have troubled themselves about it, and thought they knew something, and did not, and it is not our business to have any definite expectations on the subject?" Why, then, were the ancient prophets commended for searching what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify? Why, then, did the Savior rebuke the Pharisees and Sadducees, and charge them with infidelity and hypocrisy, in that they could "discern the face of the sky," and draw just conclusions about the weather and the winds, but would not put themselves to the pains to "discern the signs of the times?" Can I, then, refuse to note these signs, or to draw the conclusions which I am commanded to draw from their manifestation, without putting myself under a like condemnation? Be assured, my friends, that these details of numbers, and dates, and signs, and tokens, are not without an intelligible importance and certainty, which must be brought out and made evident some day before there will be no more use for such prophecies. The flood cannot come without the Noahs being advised of it. Sodom cannot burn until the righteous Lots are forewarned of the coming doom. No more shall all these dates and tokens perpetually fail to make known the time of the great consummation.

Nay, more: so far from man being cut off from the possibility of knowing the times or seasons beforehand, it is expressly written in these self-same prophecies, that faithful inquirers shall be able to anticipate the fulfillment of God's purposes, and to point out upon the clock of time perhaps the very day and hour.

I go back to Daniel, where I find all the periods mystically measured out. I find there the years, and months, and weeks, and days, with a seal on them, it is true, which might not be broken till "the time of the end." But I am there told that with the dawn of that "time" "knowledge shall increase," especially with regard to these mysteries. I am there told that "the wicked shall do wickedly," and that "none of the wicked shall understand." But I am there pointedly certified, on the other hand, that "THE WISE SHALL UNDERSTAND." (Dan. 12: 10.) I come down to this very discourse of our Lord, in which the words of the text occur, and I find here a connected series of varied indications of the nearness of the Savior's coming described, and he himself giving the command: "When ye shall see all these things, KNOW that it [margin he] is near, even at the door." (Matt. 24: 33.)

I pass to his last interview with his disciples, and to that very text in which he told them that it was not for them to know the times or the seasons which the Father had reserved for his own power; and before I get through with the passage, I find the specific promise given; "But YE SHALL RECEIVE POWER, after that the Holy Ghost has come upon you;" concerning which Holy Ghost it had been said to them, "He will guide you into ALL TRUTH; AND HE WILL SHOW YOU THINGS TO COME." (Acts 1: 7, 8; John 14: 26; 16: 13.). I descend to the history of the apostles after Christ's departure, and after the fulfillment of this promise of supernatural illumination. I turn to the writings of Paul, and I find him testifying to the Thessalonian saints that they had no need that he should write unto them "of the times and the seasons;" that they themselves knew perfectly with what thief-like stealth and suddenness that day should break in upon the godless and unbelieving world; but that THEY WERE "NOT IN DARKNESS that that day should overtake THEM as a thief." 1 Thess. 5: 1–4) And if those who are so boastful of their superior soberness and close clinging to the words of Christ in refusing to know any thing about the nearness, or remoteness, or any thing definite concerning the time of his coming, will take the trouble to ascertain to whom it is that he will "come in a day when he looketh not for him," and whom he will surprise as a thief or a snare, and who those are who are not to know till the judgment breaks upon them, as the multitude in Noah's time "knew not until the flood came;" it seems to me that we shall have a speedy end of all this know-nothing wisdom, and care-nothing sobriety, and do-nothing indifference toward what must shortly come to pass. At any rate, I feel entirely clear and confident, from what I have indicated, that it is a mistaken, untenable, and mischievous interpretation of these texts which claim that no man may know that the judgment is near until it comes.

As to the question of fact, whether any man now living does know the precise time of the coming revelation of our Savior, I cannot so confidently speak. There are men who feel that they are able to point out the very days and hours when these solemn events are to transpire. And, what is very remarkable, we find them, from very diverse and independent methods of reckoning, coming to very nearly the same conclusions, and generally agreeing that a few years more must see the consummation of these solemn wonders. And, whatever opinions may be formed of their several arithmetical deductions, it is certain that the moral, political, and physical signs are such as to harmonize with them in a most striking and startling manner, plainly indicating that some marvellous and unwonted change is verily at hand.

It is also certain, that never in the history of the Church has there been such a general and confident agreement among so many learned and pious men, of so many shades of belief, and from so many divers methods of computation, as exists at this moment, that we are just on the eve of the great judgment, and that it is our business to be ready for it at any moment.

Are we, then, to set all this down as mere folly, nonsense, and fanaticism, not worth a serious thought, because, forsooth, nearly two thousand years ago, and in the days of his earthly life and humiliation, Christ said that neither he, nor any man, then knew when the day of judgment should be? Is that the way to treat the word of God, and the opinion and profound convictions of many of the most laborious, profound, conscientious, and devoted students of the holy Scriptures? Shall one text, marred and misplaced, be accounted adequate to silence a hundred other texts, equally genuine, equally clear, and in their true and natural relations and integrity? If the thing were a matter of earthly fortune—an oil speculation, an operation in stocks, the tunneling of a mountain, the laying of an ocean cable,—would such procedure be accounted wise, and such testimony be neutralized and set aside so flippantly? But in that it is the great judgment of Almighty God, when mountains shall be thrown down and thrones overturned, and seas dried up, and the dead raised, and eternal doom settled, it would seem that in exact proportion to the overwhelming superiority and momentousness of the matter, are the indifference and light-hearted conceit with which men deal with it.

And if it even should be true that no man may ever know in advance the day and the hour, what then? Do we risk nothing by putting it off, saying it is no concern of ours? If we are in total ignorance on the subject, may it not be just as near and imminent as anybody says it is? And what do we lose by making ourselves ready for it, and looking for it any day? Would we not thus much better fill out the injunctions of Christ, than by settling down in a more than doubtful interpretation of a text, piqued and jeering at the honest and reasonable opinions of men who after all may be right? The judgment will come some day, and some day which somebody has named beforehand; and, even upon the admission that the time is and will ever be a secret till it comes, it is all sheer assumption for any man to say it cannot be this very year. What, then, is gained by it, even if this false view of the text could be satisfactorily made out? Will our ignorance of the time postpone or qualify us to meet it, or modify its character when it comes? Who will assert such a thing? Then what good is the doctrine? Whom does it benefit? What advantage does it give any one?

And while it is utterly fruitless of good, it is certainly very fruitful of evil. We have the evidence of this in the people who hold it. Large and solemn portions of the Bible they ignore, skip, and eschew, because they are so taken up with these matters of times and seasons.

Prophecy they are unwilling to study or treat, because to be thorough it must run into these dates and admeasurements. And their whole conception of God's plans and of the scheme of redemption is so crippled, distorted, and enfeebled, that many of them only half apprehended Christ, and preach only half a gospel. In spite of all they can do or say, they cannot declare their faith in this particular without giving encouragement to the blasphemous, the unbelieving, and the worldly, preventing them from taking the alarm which perhaps might otherwise move them, or, without arraying themselves on the same side with scoffers and jesting revilers, whose religion is to laugh at religion, and whose only faith is that all this ado about Christ's coming is a lie. And who can fathom the results for evil in these reports alone, which have proceeded, and ever must proceed, from such a state of things. Worse is it, a thousand times, than all the solemn miscalculations of days and hours, which form the merry staple of all the arguments of those who refuse to entertain these themes.

CHURCH OR ANARCHY?

NUMBER THREE.

In testing the full fellowship, each is obliged to acknowlege whether he has fellowship for each and all, or not. If he has, it is well; praise the Lord; if not, then it brings him up perhaps to a long neglected duty, of pointing it out, and providing the remedy; and as each has signified his desire for full fellowship himself, there is a groundwork to reconcile parties and settle all previously existing difficulties. So they are removed, because self is out of the question. The individual acts for the "body," and the cause of Christ; so the parties are reconciled, by wrongs being acknowledged, uncharitable suspicions removed, and we have our full christian fellowship. This course strikes at the root of the matter; hunts out the wedge of gold, or hard feelings, that have forced themselves between any, and reconciles all into one spirit; then, by God's blessing, they can be right. They may have wished to be before, but the thing was so complicated, and there was no order or rule adopted, so this could not be done. A lamentable evil was growing out of a want of full fellowship.

O! when will the professed believers in Christ see and deeply feel that they can not be christians unless they are reconciled to all who try to love God, as really as to God himself. Yet some stand back, and refuse to come into the agreement, even when their brethren desire to unite and fully understand each other, by an acknowledged recognition, so as to have a component strength. Why is it so? Are they unwilling to have a clean, thorough investigation of their christian character, and make such acknowledgments as they should? Are they unwilling to acknowledge their fellowship for all who can possibly be fellowshiped, so that not only God shall know where they are, but christians also; for they ought to know each other.

God's great sifting time is just before us; and we must get ready for the judgment. If it is urged that this looks like putting off the Lord's coming, and getting ready to live here a long time, we only say that this want of full fellowship will keep some out of the kingdom, and the causes of it must certainly be removed, if we would be saved. How sad for the Lord to come and find, instead of the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, contention and every evil work, or carelessness about reconciling existing difficulties. Brethren, the Lord is at hand, let us get ready for his coming.

An evil which we have not noticed specially demands attention, and that is of talking about the faults of others, instead of going first to them. Jesus has given us an inimitable rule for our guide in this; a rule which couples simplicity with thoroughness, and depth of practical force, and is far beyond any constitutions of governments or codes of laws. But that rule cannot be enforced except where there is full christian fellowship, or a church. There is no rule for disorder and irregularity, and this rule of Jesus' is not an exception. This is evident from the fact that you cannot have full confidence to go to another about what you think is a fault of his, unless you have previously received authority from him to do so, and feel that his previous acknowledgment of fellowship for you will protect you from his saying he never had confidence in you (even if that acknowledgment might not have been honest as is possible), and so repelling all your efforts to either gain him, or save the reputation of the church from suffering on account of his persistent evil course; for it is this, more than a man's own injuries of feelings or character, that prompts one to go and tell another his fault the first time he ever tells it, between the two alone. If the man refuses at first to be reconciled, then "one or two more" are told, and they must be those who have previously acknowledged mutual fellowship in each other, and in the parties immediately concerned. The whole object is to save, if possible, and not destroy; so the rule provides the gentlest, most judicious and thorough method of attending to the matter that can be imagined. The matter cannot be retailed about. It is known only by the parties themselves. Then if there is a failure to gain thy brother, the next important step is to tell it to the church, to those who have full confidence in each other, and up to this time have had in the accused. Then, also, there is a leaning in a christian manner towards him, and no bitter, censuring spirit, but an earnest desire to save him, if possible. If the fellowship had not been previously established, it would need to be done now; and it might be extremely difficult to do so; for all must fellowship each other, and have had, previous to this, confidence in him who is accused; and there might be difficulties which now cannot be removed, which could then, and were when the fellowship was established; so that now, there is a church to tell it to. They have covenanted together to watch over each other by the gospel rule; and in pledge of fidelity have signed their names to the covenant; the accused one's name is there, so he is amenable by his own consent, and there can be now no hindrance to a thorough investigation. If the evil had been talked about them, the rule would have been broken, and perhaps one of God's own unjustly injured and defamed. There is reason for heartfelt joy that Jesus has given us such a blessed rule for the protection of the character of each, and of the church, from fellowshiping those who are unworthy.

In the Anarchial state, some would fellowship, while others did not, because all did not fully understand the case. Now, what one disapproves, all must disapprove, because all have the means of understanding whether the party has violated his right to fellowship by failing to maintain a christian character; and the individual offending is bound by this to a condition of guilt, and cannot be saved until he confesses. It is true that the church might err, but not if it is up on the high ground of full fellowship with God and each other, for it will not reject one for a slight thing.

Christians must be perfected together. The eyes, or officers; the feet, or ministers; the hands, or workers, are all necessary; and the diversity of gifts also, that the work may be well done, and the church be presented to Christ at last, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing.

"But you have spoken about having a covenant written," says the objector, "and the names written on it. Why is this?" We answer, not to increase the obligation, for that cannot be increased. No obligation can be morally stronger than a verbal one; but to give tangibility to the agreement, as a pledge of good faith. Why not? The names of all christians are written in the book of life; and if it is no harm to have them there, it certainly is no harm here. If it is fitting to unite them there, it certainly is here. The very fact of their being represented or written in a book is our authority for doing it. If it is urged that if they are written there, it is enough; we answer, that the name here represents our fellowship with each other, without which fellowship it cannot be written there. There is really no more objection to writing your name, and the names of the brethren and sisters you have previously agreed to fellowship (and the full fellowship must be established by removing all that has been in the way, before a single name is written, else it would be stated on paper that a feeling existed that did not exist), than there is of signing a letter written to a friend, or an article written for the paper. No honest man would write a letter, and state things as facts, and send it without his name. Such letters are not noticed. A man's name is his representative. A name of no body is no name at all. Simply as a name, it has no significance, but the name of some body means his character. Your name, brother, means yourself; and if you are not afraid to speak words of fellowship, why shrink from writing them? Writing is only a mute substitute for speaking, and the name written only shows who speaks.

Then, christian, you need not refuse to write your name to the pledge of fellowship, any more than you should refuse the fellowship itself. Do not be afraid to have your name appear to so important a thing as a covenant to serve God in harmony with his people. God has made two covenants, and had his name attached to the first, and to the second the name of Jesus, and had thousands of copies of them printed; and he swore by himself, because he could swear by no greater, and said, "My covenant will I not break." You cannot serve God unless he helps you; but you can serve him only in the body. An isolated christian in any place, unless he is only one there, is an impossibility. We do not deem it radically essential to write the name, it is more for convenience than otherwise. But some may get wilfully out of the way, and although we would not distrust the statement of any one that is sincere, yet as all are human, the honest, faithful ones will not be harmed by writing their names, any more than they will be by making the acknowledgement in the first place. It is radically essential, however, to establish the fellowship of which we speak. Let us have it every where, and then all who honestly love God, when they understand it, will find their way to this blessed position, and love to be where they can feel the fellowship with God and his people, bundled up in the bundle of love, good wheat, ready to be garnered into God's great store-house when the harvest angels and Jesus come.

The church should have officers. They were set in the church in Paul's day,—deacons, deaconesses, and elders. We need these now,—deacons to look after the financial matters of the church and the poor, and provide for the Lord's table. The Supper is too much neglected, and they should see to its regular, or frequent observance; and the other officers should have their work according to the word. Let us have order in the house of God. Specially let us have all difficulties removed, and "full fellowship" established.

One point more, and we have done. It is with reference to the fellowship of the churches, as different localities make different churches necessary; but this is an easy matter. There were seven in Asia, and if they were not all in fellowship with each other, it was because those not fellowshiped were wrong; and it is so in all cases. It cannot, however, be otherwise than that each church that fully carries out the principles of christian fellowship will receive the fellowship of all such as act on the same principle.

We do not need any other head of the church than Christ; or to build on any other rock but him. No pope, universal bishop, or prelate, unless the Lord gives to some Paul "the care of all the churches."

Brethren, we have written for the sake of bringing out out what we believe to be light on this subject. God loves order. He brought order out of chaos when he made the world, and he wants the church to be set in order, living together in gospel harmony, keeping clear of schism, which is made by advocating peculiar notions, and tenaciously making them the test, and living together like christians, that when Jesus comes we may be glad with exceeding joy. "ARE WE RIGHT?"

That was an excellent article of Bro. Seymour's, and I pray that it may benefit those for whom it was intended. Often am I grieved to see how lightly TRUTH is esteemed by some who profess to love God's important messages.

Somehow I glory in "the cross of Chist," so far as owning my faith is concerned. Bless your dear timid souls, GOD is at the head of this little despised company, who cry, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Though our number of men, women, and children be much smaller than the hosts that oppose; with JEHOVAH on our side, we are the majority after all.

See how this looks. There's a man giving his children chaff to eat. They ask for bread, but no; there is nothing but chaff. They have chaff for breakfast, dinner, supper, day after day. Who wonders that they are gaunt, pale and deathly. Over yonder, a man deals just so in spiritual things; and, instead of giving each a portion of "meat in due season," he gives all a portion of musty, out-of-date, milk-and-water stuff, and having but half a living, they but half live.

For my part, I am hungry. My appetite is uncommonly keen, because, not liking chaff, I have had only the few crumbs gathered here and there. "Behold I come quickly." That is bread. "O don't get excited so. He may not come for thousands of years." That is consolidated chaff. From one table to another I go seeking bread, but get none; except a crumb now and then. If God would open an eating house and feed some of these half-starved souls, I would be thankful. Are all these human beings to be neglected, unwarned of the approaching Judgment?

A few miles away, in each direction, are brethren and sisters. Why don't they remember Westfield, this great village of rum, rowdies, tobacco and whips? Have any of God's servants a work to do here? If so, whether male or female, black of white, old or young, come, in God's name come. But what will you come to? One brother, and a few infidel shop hands, have spoken to husband about hiring a hall; but nothing moves. I didn't think of mentioning Westfield when I commenced to write; but if the Lord has taken this way of telling some of his faithful ones to come hither, Amen. One thing, I hope no one will come here to preach unless sent of the Lord. You can preach out in the open air, if no other place is afforded.

Blessed revelation, the event of Christ's second advent! How glad I am the Lord is not coming as a thief to his children, but has foretold it so plain that we may know he is nigh, just as well as we know summer is nigh when we see the trees budding. And with these signs he speaks to those who have ears to hear. Some will not hear his truth, but turn their itching ears toward more popular messages. Nevertheless, the promise is to those that "look for him." These will be saved, though they may appear ever so despicable now. I know what it is to look for my Lord, and some of you, brethren, know what it is to wait for him. Well, "wait and sing and pray." Bless his holy name. He will come and not tarry.

I pray for honor enough never to be ashamed of my blessed Hope, unpopular as it is. I do not expect the mass of professing Christians to receive the truth; indeed, the Bible explicitly says they shall "turn away from the truth" unto fables. God help us to "fight manfully" the battle of faith.

M. MATHEWS WEAVER.

Westfield, Mass., June, 1866.

A RESURRECTION LIFE NOT NECESSARILY IMMORTAL.

To claim that the life from the dead, or a resurrection life, must necessarily be immortal, is to deny a resurrection of the wicked; or else if raised up they must live forever. But as the latter proves too much, because the wicked have no promise of eternal life, therefore it is claimed the wicked will never live again. Now if the premise is true, the conclusion is inevitable. But is the premise true? We think not, for the following reasons.

Christ and the apostles have taught differently, and have exemplified their teaching by their works. Jesus says: "As the Father raiseth from the dead and quickeneth whom he will, so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Who, then, will the Son quicken? "All that are in their graves." (Jno. 5: 28.) Did Christ exemplify this truth by raising the dead? We think he did: why should we doubt it? Did he raise them by the power of an endless life? Where is the evidence for it?

Now if Jesus has once raised the dead, or some of them, to life, without giving them immortality, can he not, and will he not do it again? And especially, as he says he will raise all the dead, may we not, therefore, conclude that what he has done on a small scale demonstrates what he has power to do, and what he will do on a grand scale?

Again, we have no evidence that all those raised from the dead by our Lord were believers; and the presumption is, they were not: but they were raised up for the purpose of showing forth his glory or power, before his disciples and the world, thus proving his Messiahship, and confirming the promises made of God unto the fathers. See Romans 15: 8; 4: 17.—Voice.

THE BIBLE.—Let me entreat you to study the Bible. Study it with prayer, with expectation. With eyes alert and open, read it; in your most tranquil retirement, read it; and when a few of you, who are friends like-minded, come together, read it; search it; sift it; talk about it; talk with it. And as he thus grows mighty in it, I promise each earnest Bible student two rewards—it will make him both a wiser and a better man."

"I WOULD SEE JESUS."

I would see Jesus,—he is the way,
He will guide me safe through by night and by day;
I would see Jesus,—he is the truth,
I love him to-day, I loved him in youth.

I would see Jesus,—he is the life,
He'll save and protect me in peril and strife;
I would see Jesus,—he is my friend,
He has said "I'll be with thee even unto the end."

I would see Jesus,—he is my all,
I must trust in his grace or surely fall;
I would see Jesus,—on earth come to reign,
To banish all sorrow, all grief and all pain.

I would see Jesus,—O hasten the hour
When I shall behold him in Eden's fair bower;
I would see Jesus,—O come is my cry,
He is my Rock, he is higher than I.

I would see Jesus,—is the cry of each saint,
Come end all my sorrows, my tears and complaints;
I would see Jesus,—with him ever stay,
Live in bright glory, in eternal day.

I shall see Jesus,—very soon I believe;
The signs which declare it assuages my grief;
I shall see Jesus,—O may I endure,
And through that dear home salvation secure.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

In all communities, and in every society in which we mingle at the present day, there are plenty of people who never thought of doubting that the holy Scriptures prove plainly and satisfactorily, the cherished doctrine of "the immortality of the soul." Taught to believe from infancy that the doctrine lies at the foundation of all correct religious principles, most people of sincere convictions fear and distrust the man who denies the truthfulness, and asks for the proof of the doctrine in question; and when told that the Bible does not teach it, that true christianity, the relgion of Christ and the apostles, neither require nor will admit it, incredulity, if not horror, seizes them.

"Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."

How hard to straighten that which has grown crooked, and how hard to eradicate the trunk and roots of error, that have been nourished from infancy to manhood in the human heart.

It is easy to show the fallacy of all the proofs brought from the Bible, and to show, also, that the Bible is perverted by all who attempt to prove the doctrine from the Scriptures; but it is not so easy to convince people, even by clear proof and sound logic, that the doctrine is a wicked error, totally opposed to Bible christianity.

The writer has been presented with a few passages, through a friend, cited by a person whom we suppose most implicitly believes that they prove what he believes, and for the sake of many as well as his, these will be briefly examined. One of the passages is almost always referred to with the utmost confidence, as a finality. It is found Matt. 10: 28,—"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." It seems to be understood that where the word "soul" occurs in the holy Scriptures, we must per force, as if in duty bound, understand that something, which is supposed to dwell in the body while it lives, and at death takes it flight to live undying and immortal in a "spirit land," in joy indescribable, or pains inexpressible, is meant. But this passage, by no construction, can be made to prove that. It proves that the soul, whatever it is, can be killed. It implies a threatening that God will kill the soul of the sinner, and if the soul is killed, it cannot live afterwards, and if it can be killed it has no immortality. For the nonsense that the soul may be killed and still live, is inadmissable. Either it may be killed and not live at all thereafter, or it is not to be killed at all; and if not to be killed at all, why does the language inculcate a fear of being killed? Here the proof amounts to no proof, but proves exactly the contrary; that whatever the soul is, it is not immortal, but mortal most decidedly.

But the truth is, that the passage teaches no such soul dwelling in man, distinct from the body, as is believed in. The word "soul" in the text, signifies LIFE, and not an indwelling immortality, as will be now sufficiently proved. Referring to a copy of the New Testament in the Greek language, the word is found to be a translation of the word psukee, and used by the writers of the gospel to mean life. In Matt. 2: 20, we read, "Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel: for they are dead which sought the young child's (psukeen) life." Again, in Matt. 6: 25,—"Therefore, I say unto you, take no thought for your (psukee) life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink," etc. "Is not the (psukee) life more than meat?" etc. And Matt. 16: 25, 26,—"For whosoever will save his (psukeen) life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his (psukeen) life for my sake shall find it; for what is man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his (psukeen) life, or what shall a man give in exchange for his (psukee) life." On the two last verses quoted, the Methodist doctor, the learned Adam Clark, in his Commentary, says: "Why our translators have rendered the word life in one verse, and soul in the other, I know not; for sure I am, that it means life in both verses." How would it sound if we should read in the above passages, "the young child's soul," "Take no thought for your soul, what ye shall eat," "He that saveth his soul shall lose it," etc.

In the text then under consideration, we ought to read, "And fear not them which kill the body, but cannot kill the (psukeen) life," that is, the promised life, which, if faithful, the disciples were to have when raised up from their graves at the last day, when Jesus returns. The chapter commences with an account of twelve men, whose names are given, as about to be sent forth to preach, and the whole of it is taken up with what Jesus said to them about their mission, and what was to be their condition. "Behold, I send you forth as sheep among wolves," ver. 16. "And ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake," ver. 22. These verses show that their persons and lives were not secure. But then, "fear not them which kill the body," or your present life. For, as in the 39th verse, "He that findeth his (psukeen) life (or shall we read soul?), shall lose it, and he that loseth his (psukeen) life for my sake shall find it." Find it!—but what shall he find? Why, the thing that he had lost,—his life, the psukeen, the soul, if you must have it so, reader. Therefore, if the magistrate or an enemy killed the body, or present life, so that the life was lost, he could not destroy or kill the promised life, for at the resurrection that life would be restored, or found. It would be interrupted, but not destroyed. For if he is faithful, and for my sake loseth his life, says Jesus, "he shall find it;"—the "it," the life, that was taken by the enemy, he shall find, or have again. Not that most unscriptural and chimerical immortal soul-life, which pious errorists dream of; nothing of the kind. But if the disciples through fear of them that might kill them, proved recreant, and should apostatize and escape death, and so in this way find, or save their lives, then God would effectually and forever kill the life, by destroying both (psukeen) life and body in gehenna. They would escape being murdered, it is true, by apostatising, and so find their lives; but then they should lose their lives so found, and forever. The enemy could kill the body, but God could, and would if they were faithful, give the life again, at the resurrection, to the loser. But God could and would effectually destroy life and body of the apostate, beyond any means or hope of restoration. Hence Jesus says to them, in the next three verses, "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing, and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father, but the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear ye not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows." As if he had said, "Do not fear, though the time may be long, if you lose your life, before you find it. He who sees the sparrow fall, and numbers all the hairs of your head, can never overlook or forget you. You may repose in the dust, ages on ages, but your Father will note your fall, and restore to you your life in due time. Ye are of more value than many sparrows."

Such, reader, is the hope, and the only hope, that Jesus ever gave his disciples, or any other man, of the future; the hope of a resurrection to life. Their lives might be laid down, or taken away, by persecutors, but they should take them again, or have them restored, at the resurrection. What they lost they should find again. Hence fear not, says Jesus, "them that kill the body, but cannot kill the (promised) life. But fear him who is able to destroy both (your promised) life and body in gehenna."—Gospel Banner.

THE DAY AND HOUR.

The following extract from a sermon on the "Day and Hour," by Dr. Seiss, of Philadelphia, is worthy of a candid consideration. We commend the entire work to all of our readers, as the best thing on that subject we have ever seen. See book notices.—ED.

Taking, then, the grammatical form of the passages (Matt. 24: 36; Mark 13: 32; Acts 1: 7), and the facts derived from other portions of Scripture which render a variation of that form impossible and absurd in two cases out of three, I set it down as an unwarranted straining of Scripture, to base upon them the doctrine that no man shall ever know the day or hour of Christ's return, or the times or seasons of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, until that day or hour arrives.

But more than this. It seems to me that I can find clear and positive proof in the holy Scriptures, that the time will come when what was so great a mystery when the text was uttered, shall become largely familiar to devout inquirers. I know the sneers and ridicule with which some satisfy themselves, and try to satisfy others, to the contrary. I am also acquainted with the sad mistakes that have been made in every age by men too confident in the belief that they were the favored ones to discover the day and hour of our Lord's return. I know the disrepute into which the doctrine of the second advent has been brought, and how the world and the church have been set to scoffing at it, by the failure of the many too sanguine theories of its friends about dates and years. Nor do I doubt for a moment that Satan has often tempted good men to over-confidence in specific calculations of this sort, and thus done much mischief to their reputation, and to the cause of truth and righteousness. But I am satisfied he has another tack in the opposite direction, especially now that the time is drawing near, which is a thousandfold more dangerous, viz: to tempt and persuade people that this subject is closely and forever sealed from human knowledge; that it is only perilous to touch it; that not 'all Scripture is profitable;' and whatever relates to dates and numbers, times and seasons, days and hours, is to be eschewed as the food of fanaticism and the bane of sober faith. I believe that there are ministers and people whom the devil has just in this way drawn off from one of the great fundamental departments of the divine teachings, and so deluded as to transform them into infidels and scoffers without their knowing it. I believe that there are those now living, and rated by the world as good and active christians and ministers, whom the Lord when he cometh will cut off, and assign a portion with hypocrites and unbelievers just because of the foregone conclusion into which they have settled, that all this ado about the nearness of the end, and the impending character of the advent, or any thing definite upon the prophecies of the future, is mere unscriptural nonsense, and not to be noticed by sober-minded people. I find this specifically predicted by Christ and his inspired servants, in many places, and, therefore, am bound to believe it, and to declare it, however it may savor of dogmatism and uncharity. The truth of God must not be made subservient to respect for men.

Looking through the Scriptures, I find them scattered over with dates and numbers having reference to these very times and seasons. I find them so interwoven with nearly all the prophetic histories concerning Jews and Gentiles, the church and the world, Christ and Antichrist, that it is impossible to take up sacred prophecy without touching upon them.

I find them so large an element of the divine predictions, that writers on the subject must needs endure the sneer of being prophetic arithmeticians. What, then, am I to make of these dates and numbers—these references to years, and days, and hours? For what purpose has God put them in the Bible, which he has given for my enlightenment and guidance? Has he put them there to teach me something, or only to try the depth of my sobriety in not touching them, and to make me a fanatic, if I perchance should study them and find out their meaning? Is it the part of piety and faith to say that these things are not for any body to understand, that no one can know them till the events to which they relate are fulfilled, and so put upon my good and gracious Lord the character of one who gives me definite instruction with one hand, and utterly conceals it from me with the other?

Besides, I find the Scriptures very largely taken up with descriptions of signs and tokens, upon the appearance of which they command me to draw certain beliefs and affections, which have direct reference to the times and seasons in question. What, then, am I to do with these impressive passages? Am I to shut my eyes and ears to them, and say, "O, that's all mystery; many good and wise men have troubled themselves about it, and thought they knew something, and did not; and it is not our business to have any definite expectations on the subject?" Why, then, were the ancient prophets commended for searching what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify? Why, then, did the Savior rebuke the Pharisees and Sadducees, and charge them with infidelity and hypocrisy, in that they could "discern the face of the sky," and draw just conclusions about the weather and the winds, but would not put themselves to the pains to "discern the signs of the times?" Can I, then, refuse to note these signs, or to draw the conclusions which I am commanded to draw from their manifestation, without putting myself under a like condemnation? Be assured, my friends, that these details of numbers, and dates, and signs, and tokens, are not without an intelligible importance and certainty, which must be brought out and made evident some day before there will be no more use for such prophecies. The flood cannot come without the Noahs being advised of it. Sodom cannot burn until the righteous Lots are forewarned of the coming doom. No more shall all these dates and tokens perpetually fail to make known the time of the great consummation.

Nay, more: so far from man being cut off from the possibility of knowing the times or seasons beforehand, it is expressly written in these self-same prophecies, that faithful inquirers shall be able to anticipate the fulfillment of God's purposes, and to point out upon the clock of time perhaps the very day and hour.

I go back to Daniel, where I find all the periods mystically measured out. I find there the years, and months, and weeks, and days, with a seal on them, it is true, which might not be broken till "the time of the end." But I am there told that with the dawn of that "time" "knowledge shall increase," especially with regard to these mysteries. I am there told that "the wicked shall do wickedly," and that "none of the wicked shall understand." But I am there pointedly certified, on the other hand, that "THE WISE SHALL UNDERSTAND." (Dan. 12: 10.) I come down to this very discourse of our Lord, in which the words of the text occur, and I find here a connected series of varied indications of the nearness of the Savior's coming described, and he himself giving the command: "When ye shall see all these things, KNOW that it [margin he] is near, even at the door." (Matt. 24: 33.)

I pass to his last interview with his disciples, and to that very text in which he told them that it was not for them to know the times or the seasons which the Father had reserved for his own power; and before I get through with the passage, I find the specific promise given: "But YE SHALL RECEIVE POWER, after that the Holy Ghost has come upon you;" concerning which Holy Ghost it had been said to them, "He will guide you into ALL TRUTH; AND HE WILL SHOW YOU THINGS TO COME." (Acts 1: 7, 8; John 14: 26; 16: 13.). I descend to the history of the apostles after Christ's departure, and after the fulfillment of this promise of supernatural illumination. I turn to the writings of Paul, and I find him testifying to the Thessalonian saints that they had no need that he should write unto them "of the times and the seasons;" that they themselves knew perfectly with what thief-like stealth and suddenness that day should break in upon the godless and unbelieving world; but that THEY WERE "NOT IN DARKNESS that that day should overtake THEM as a thief." 1 Thes. 5: 1–4.) And if those who are so boastful of their superior soberness and close clinging to the words of Christ in refusing to know any thing about the nearness, or remoteness, or any thing definite concerning the time of his coming, will take the trouble to ascertain to whom it is that he will "come in a day when he looketh not for him," and whom he will surprise as a thief or a snare, and who those are who are not to know till the judgment breaks upon them, as the multitude in Noah's time "knew not until the flood came;" it seems to me that we shall have a speedy end of all this know-nothing wisdom, and care-nothing sobriety, and do-nothing indifference toward what must shortly come to pass. At any rate, I feel entirely clear and confident, from what I have indicated, that it is a mistaken, untenable, and mischievous interpretation of these texts which claim that no man may know that the judgment is near until it comes.

As to the question of fact, whether any man now living does know the precise time of the coming revelation of our Savior, I cannot so confidently speak. There are men who feel that they are able to point out the very days and hours when these solemn events are to transpire. And, what is very remarkable, we find them, from very diverse and independent methods of reckoning, coming to very nearly the same conclusions, and generally agreeing that a few years more must see the consummation of these solemn wonders. And, whatever opinions may be formed of their several arithmetical deductions, it is certain that the moral, political, and physical signs are such as to harmonize with them in a most striking and startling manner, plainly indicating that some marvellous and unwonted change is verily at hand.

It is also certain, that never in the history of the Church has there been such a general and confident agreement among so many learned and pious men, of so many shades of belief, and from so many divers methods of computation, as exists at this moment, that we are just on the eve of the great judgment, and that it is our business to be ready for it at any moment.

Are we, then, to set all this down as mere folly, nonsense, and fanaticism, not worth a serious thought, because, forsooth, nearly two thousand years ago, and in the days of his earthly life and humiliation, Christ said that neither he, nor any man, then knew when the day of judgment should be? Is that the way to treat the word of God, and the opinion and profound convictions of many of the most laborious, profound, conscientious, and devoted students of the holy Scriptures? Shall one text, marred and misplaced, be accounted adequate to silence a hundred other texts, equally genuine, equally clear, and in their true and natural relations and integrity? If the thing were a matter of earthly fortune—an oil speculation, an operation in stocks, the tunneling of a mountain, the laying of an ocean cable,—would such procedure be accounted wise, and such testimony be neutralized and set aside so flippantly? But in that it is the great judgment of Almighty God, when mountains shall be thrown down and thrones overturned, and seas dried up, and the dead raised, and eternal doom settled, it would seem that in exact proportion to the overwhelming superiority and momentousness of the matter, are the indifference and light-hearted conceit with which men deal with it.

And if it even should be true that no man may ever know in advance the day and the hour, what then? Do we risk nothing by putting it off, saying it is no concern of ours? If we are in total ignorance on the subject, may it not be just as near and imminent as anybody says it is? And what do we lose by making ourselves ready for it, and looking for it any day? Would we not thus much better fill out the injunctions of Christ, than by settling down in a more than doubtful interpretation of a text, piqued and jeering at the honest and reasonable opinions of men who after all may be right? The judgment will come some day, and some day which somebody has named beforehand; and, even upon the admission that the time is and will ever be a secret till it comes, it is all sheer assumption for any man to say it cannot be this very year. What, then, is gained by it, even if this false view of the text could be satisfactorily made out? Will our ignorance of the time postpone or qualify us to meet it, or modify its character when it comes? Who will assert such a thing? Then what good is the doctrine? Whom does it benefit? What advantage does it give any one?

And while it is utterly fruitless of good, it is certainly very fruitful of evil. We have the evidence of this in the people who hold it. Large and solemn portions of the Bible they ignore, skip, and eschew, because they are so taken up with these matters of times and seasons.

Prophecy they are unwilling to study or treat, because to be thorough it must run into these dates and admeasurements. And their whole conception of God's plans and of the scheme of redemption is so crippled, distorted, and enfeebled, that many of them only half apprehended Christ, and preach only half a gospel. In spite of all they can do or say, they cannot declare their faith in this particular without giving encouragement to the blasphemous, the unbelieving, and the worldly, preventing them from taking the alarm which perhaps might otherwise move them, or, without arraying themselves on the same side with scoffers and jesting revilers, whose religion is to laugh at religion, and whose only faith is that all this ado about Christ's coming is a lie. And who can fathom the results for evil in these reports alone, which have proceeded, and ever must proceed, from such a state of things. Worse is it, a thousand times, than all the solemn miscalculations of days and hours, which form the merry staple of all the arguments of those who refuse to entertain these themes.

CHURCH, OR ANARCHY?

NUMBER THREE.

In testing the full fellowship, each is obliged to acknowlegde whether he has fellowship for each and all, or not. If he has, it is well; praise the Lord; if not, then it brings him up perhaps to a long neglected duty, of pointing it out, and providing the remedy; and as each has signified his desire for full fellowship himself, there is a groundwork to reconcile parties and settle all previously existing difficulties. So they are removed, because self is out of the question. The individual acts for the "body," and the cause of Christ; so the parties are reconciled, by wrongs being acknowledged, uncharitable suspicions removed, and we have our full christian fellowship. This course strikes at the root of the matter; hunts out the wedge of gold, or hard feelings, that have forced themselves between any, and reconciles all into one spirit; then, by God's blessing, they can be right. They may have wished to be before, but the thing was so complicated, and there was no order or rule adopted, so this could not be done. A lamentable evil was growing out of a want of full fellowship.

O! when will the professed believers in Christ see and deeply feel that they can not be christians unless they are reconciled to all who try to love God, as really as to God himself. Yet some stand back, and refuse to come into the agreement, even when their brethren desire to unite and fully understand each other, by an acknowledged recognition, so as to have a component strength. Why is it so? Are they unwilling to have a clean, thorough investigation of their christian character, and make such acknowledgments as they should? Are they unwilling to acknowledge their fellowship for all who can possibly be fellowshiped, so that not only God shall know where they are, but christians also; for they ought to know each other.

God's great sifting time is just before us; and we must get ready for the judgment. If it is urged that this looks like putting off the Lord's coming, and getting ready to live here a long time, we only say that this want of full fellowship will keep some out of the kingdom, and the causes of it must certainly be removed, if we would be saved. How sad for the Lord to come and find, instead of the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace, contention and every evil work, or carelessness about reconciling existing difficulties. Brethren, the Lord is at hand; let us get ready for his coming.

An evil which we have not noticed specially demands attention, and that is of talking about the faults of others, instead of going first to them. Jesus has given us an inimitable rule for our guide in this; a rule which couples simplicity with thoroughness, and depth of practical force, and is far beyond any constitutions of governments or codes of laws. But that rule cannot be enforced except where there is full christian fellowship, or a church. There is no rule for disorder and irregularity, and this rule of Jesus' is not an exception. This is evident from the fact that you cannot have full confidence to go to another about what you think is a fault of his, unless you have previously received authority from him to do so, and feel that his previous acknowledgment of fellowship for you will protect you from his saying he never had confidence in you (even if that acknowledgment might not have been honest as is possible), and so repelling all your efforts to either gain him, or save the reputation of the church from suffering on account of his persistent evil course; for it is this, more than a man's own injuries of feelings or character, that prompts one to go and tell another his fault the first time he ever tells it, between the two alone. If the man refuses at first to be reconciled, then "one or two more" are told, and they must be those who have previously acknowledged mutual fellowship in each other, and in the parties immediately concerned. The whole object is to save, if possible, and not destroy; so the rule provides the gentlest, most judicious and thorough method of attending to the matter that can be imagined. The matter cannot be retailed about. It is known only by the parties themselves. Then if there is a failure to gain thy brother, the next important step is to tell it to the church, to those who have full confidence in each other, and up to this time have had in the accused. Then, also, there is a leaning in a christian manner towards him, and no bitter, censuring spirit, but an earnest desire to save him, if possible. If the fellowship had not been previously established, it would need to be done now; and it might be extremely difficult to do so; for all must fellowship each other, and have had, previous to this, confidence in him who is accused; and there might be difficulties which now cannot be removed, which could then, and were when the fellowship was established; so that now, there is a church to tell it to. They have covenanted together to watch over each other by the gospel rule; and in pledge of fidelity have signed their names to the covenant; the accused one's name is there, so he is amenable by his own consent, and there can be now no hindrance to a thorough investigation. If the evil had been talked about them, the rule would have been broken, and perhaps one of God's own unjustly injured and defamed. There is reason for heartfelt joy that Jesus has given us such a blessed rule for the protection of the character of each, and of the church, from fellowshiping those who are unworthy.

In the Anarchial state, some would fellowship, while others did not, because all did not fully understand the case. Now, what one disapproves, all must disapprove, because all have the means of understanding whether the party has violated his right to fellowship by failing to maintain a christian character; and the individual offending is bound by this to a condition of guilt, and cannot be saved until he confesses. It is true that the church might err, but not if it is up on the high ground of full fellowship with God and each other, for it will not reject one for a slight thing.

Christians must be perfected together. The eyes, or officers; the feet, or ministers; the hands, or workers, are all necessary; and the diversity of gifts also, that the work may be well done, and the church be presented to Christ at last, without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing.

"But you have spoken about having a covenant written," says the objector, "and the names written on it. Why is this?" We answer, not to increase the obligation, for that cannot be increased. No obligation can be morally stronger than a verbal one; but to give tangibility to the agreement, as a pledge of good faith. Why not? The names of all christians are written in the book of life; and if it is no harm to have them there, it certainly is no harm here. If it is fitting to unite them there, it certainly is here. The very fact of their being represented or written in a book is our authority for doing it. If it is urged that if they are written there, it is enough; we answer, that the name here represents our fellowship with each other, without which fellowship it cannot be written there. There is really no more objection to writing your name, and the names of the brethren and sisters you have previously agreed to fellowship (and the full fellowship must be established by removing all that has been in the way, before a single name is written, else it would be stated on paper that a feeling existed that did not exist), than there is of signing a letter written to a friend, or an article written for the paper. No honest man would write a letter, and state things as facts, and send it without his name. Such letters are not noticed. A man's name is his representative. A name of no body is no name at all. Simply as a name, it has no significance, but the name of some body means his character. Your name, brother, means yourself; and if you are not afraid to speak words of fellowship, why shrink from writing them? Writing is only a mute substitute for speaking, and the name written only shows who speaks.

Then, christian, you need not refuse to write your name to the pledge of fellowship, any more than you should refuse the fellowship itself. Do not be afraid to have your name appear to so important a thing as a covenant to serve God in harmony with his people. God has made two covenants, and had his name attached to the first, and to the second the name of Jesus, and had thousands of copies of them printed; and he swore by himself, because he could swear by no greater, and said, "My covenant will I not break." You cannot serve God unless he helps you; but you can serve him only in the body. An isolated christian in any place, unless he is only one there, is an impossibility. We do not deem it radically essential to write the name; it is more for convenience than otherwise. But some may get wilfully out of the way, and although we would not distrust the statement of any one that is sincere, yet as all are human, the honest, faithful ones will not be harmed by writing their names, any more than they will be by making the acknowledgement in the first place. It is radically essential, however, to establish the fellowship of which we speak. Let us have it every where, and then all who honestly love God, when they understand it, will find their way to this blessed position, and love to be where they can feel the fellowship with God and his people, bundled up in the bundle of love, good wheat, ready to be garnered into God's great store-house when the harvest angels and Jesus come.

The church should have officers. They were set in the church in Paul's day,—deacons, deaconesses, and elders. We need these now,—deacons to look after the financial matters of the church and the poor, and provide for the Lord's table. The Supper is too much neglected, and they should see to its regular, or frequent observance; and the other officers should have their work according to the word. Let us have order in the house of God. Specially let us have all difficulties removed, and "full fellowship" established.

One point more, and we have done. It is with reference to the fellowship of the churches, as different localities make different churches necessary; but this is an easy matter. There were seven in Asia, and if they were not all in fellowship with each other, it was because those not fellowshiped were wrong; and it is so in all cases. It cannot, however, be otherwise than that each church that fully carries out the principles of christian fellowship will receive the fellowship of all such as act on the same principle.

We do not need any other head of the church than Christ; or to build on any other rock but him. No pope, universal bishop, or prelate, unless the Lord gives to some Paul "the care of all the churches."

Brethren, we have written for the sake of bringing out out what we believe to be light on this subject. God loves order. He brought order out of chaos when he made the world, and he wants the church to be set in order, living together in gospel harmony, keeping clear of schism, which is made by advocating peculiar notions, and tenaciously making them the test, and living together like christians, that when Jesus comes we may be glad with exceeding joy. "ARE WE RIGHT?"

That was an excellent article of Bro. Seymour's, and I pray that it may benefit those for whom it was intended. Often am I grieved to see how lightly TRUTH is esteemed by some who profess to love God's important messages.

Somehow I glory in "the cross of Chist," so far as owning my faith is concerned. Bless your dear timid souls, GOD is at the head of this little despised company, who cry, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Though our number of men, women, and children be much smaller than the hosts that oppose; with JEHOVAH on our side, we are the majority after all.

See how this looks. There's a man giving his children chaff to eat. They ask for bread, but no; there is nothing but chaff. They have chaff for breakfast, dinner, supper, day after day. Who wonders that they are gaunt, pale and deathly. Over yonder, a man deals just so in spiritual things; and, instead of giving each a portion of "meat in due season," he gives all a portion of musty, out-of-date, milk-and-water stuff, and having but half a living, they but half live.

For my part, I am hungry. My appetite is uncommonly keen, because, not liking chaff, I have had only the few crumbs gathered here and there. "Behold I come quickly." That is bread. "O don't get excited so. He may not come for thousands of years." That is consolidated chaff. From one table to another I go seeking bread, but get none; except a crumb now and then. If God would open an eating house and feed some of these half-starved souls, I would be thankful. Are all these human beings to be neglected, unwarned of the approaching Judgment?

A few miles away, in each direction, are brethren and sisters. Why don't they remember Westfield, this great village of rum, rowdies, tobacco and whips? Have any of God's servants a work to do here? If so, whether male or female, black of white, old or young, come, in God's name come. But what will you come to? One brother, and a few infidel shop hands, have spoken to husband about hiring a hall; but nothing moves. I didn't think of mentioning Westfield when I commenced to write; but if the Lord has taken this way of telling some of his faithful ones to come hither, Amen. One thing, I hope no one will come here to preach unless sent of the Lord. You can preach out in the open air, if no other place is afforded.

Blessed revelation, the event of Christ's second advent! How glad I am the Lord is not coming as a thief to his children, but has foretold it so plain that we may know he is nigh, just as well as we know summer is nigh when we see the trees budding. And with these signs he speaks to those who have ears to hear. Some will not hear his truth, but turn their itching ears toward more popular messages. Nevertheless, the promise is to those that "look for him." These will be saved, though they may appear ever so despicable now. I know what it is to look for my Lord, and some of you, brethren, know what it is to wait for him. Well, "wait and sing and pray." Bless his holy name. He will come and not tarry.

I pray for honor enough never to be ashamed of my blessed Hope, unpopular as it is. I do not expect the mass of professing Christians to receive the truth; indeed, the Bible explicitly says they shall "turn away from the truth" unto fables. God help us to "fight manfully" the battle of faith.

M. MATHEWS WEAVER.

Westfield, Mass., June, 1866.

A RESURRECTION LIFE NOT NECESSARILY IMMORTAL.

To claim that the life from the dead, or a resurrection life, must necessarily be immortal, is to deny a resurrection of the wicked; or else if raised up they must live forever. But as the latter proves too much, because the wicked have no promise of eternal life, therefore it is claimed the wicked will never live again. Now if the premise is true, the conclusion is inevitable. But is the premise true? We think not, for the following reasons.

Christ and the apostles have taught differently, and have exemplified their teaching by their works. Jesus says: "As the Father raiseth from the dead and quickeneth whom he will, so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Who, then, will the Son quicken? "All that are in their graves." (Jno. 5: 28.) Did Christ exemplify this truth by raising the dead? We think he did: why should we doubt it? Did he raise them by the power of an endless life? Where is the evidence for it?

Now if Jesus has once raised the dead, or some of them, to life, without giving them immortality, can he not, and will he not do it again? And especially, as he says he will raise all the dead, may we not, therefore, conclude that what he has done on a small scale demonstrates what he has power to do, and what he will do on a grand scale?

Again, we have no evidence that all those raised from the dead by our Lord were believers; and the presumption is, they were not: but they were raised up for the purpose of showing forth his glory or power, before his disciples and the world, thus proving his Messiahship, and confirming the promises made of God unto the fathers. See Romans 15: 8; 4: 17.—Voice.

THE BIBLE.—Let me entreat you to study the Bible. Study it with prayer, with expectation. With eyes alert and open, read it; in your most tranquil retirement, read it; and when a few of you, who are friends like-minded, come together, read it; search it; sift it; talk about it; talk with it. And as he thus grows mighty in it, I promise each earnest Bible student two rewards—it will make him both a wiser and a better man."

A VETERAN FALLEN.

How little thought the believing companies of the pilgrim church, when the cry, "Behold He cometh," called them forth to meet the Lord, that so many must fall and be laid away to repose in the chambers of death, before the Life-giver should be revealed to give glory, honor and eternal life to all his saints. So near did the coming of the "Holy and Just One" seem, that white-headed fathers and mothers rejoiced in the thought that they should never see death, but be changed in a moment from mortal to immortality. Such was the expectation of a venerable minister of Christ, who for nearly fifty years preached the glad tidings of redemption to the lost sons and daughters of Adam, of the Western States.

Henry Logan was born in Pennsylvania, Jan. 10th, 1783, and died at Plymouth, Marshall Co., Indiana, July 1st, 1866. On the 3d of December, 1808, he experienced that "joy and peace in believing" that has lit up so many sorrowful countenances with heavenly sunlight, since the glorious gospel has given the guilty the assurance of pardon, and the dying the hope of life. In a very few years he felt a "necessity laid upon him" to proclaim to the perishing "the unsearchable riches of Christ." While thousands gave every energy of body and mind to amassing wealth, Father Logan was pointing out the excellencies of the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, which is reserved in the heavenly country for all the faithful. He endured all the privations and labors incident to pioneer life in the wilds of the West.

To a great extent, he preached the gospel without any earthly recompense; sometimes laboring all night for the support of those dependent upon him, that he might make the gospel "without charge" to all. He was a man of prayer, and emphatically a son of exhortation. How often has his persuasive eloquence inspired the despondent mourner to come to Christ and find peace; how often has the wavering one been induced to choose the "better part," instead of worldly things, as he has thrilled the congregation with portraying the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" of the heavenly home; how often has his enrapturing addresses to the church prompted holier resolutions, and confirmed determinations in the christian life. Often has he led the repentant believer down to the waters of holy baptism, and buried him in the likeness of Jesus' death. Often has he gathered the little churches here and there around the table, where the consecrated loaf and cup of blessing call up remembrances of One whose "love was stronger than death."

When God's heralds proclaimed the coming of the heavenly Bridegroom near, the white snows of time had already fallen on Father Logan's temples. Yet he lifted up his head and rejoiced to think redemption was near. He thought it almost possible that he might enter "the inheritance of the saints in light," without going through the valley of death. The doctrine of eternal life through Jesus Christ alone was delightful to him. He realized in Jesus, as a Savior, something more than one who died to make existence blissful. He was to him "the Prince of Life." And because "he lives," it was his expectation to "live also." He formed no such erroneous idea of immortality and eternal life as to suppose (when instructed fully by the word of truth) that an earthly dead Adam was the fountain head of these, God's greatest gifts. He clearly discerned that "eternal life is in his Son." Accordingly, he expected to put on "glory and honor and immortality," and incorruptibility, at the resurrection, when Jesus comes. Hence the "coming of the Lord" was a theme fraught with interest to him.

His work is done. His end was peace. I visited him in his last illness, to witness the confidence of a christian in life's last conflict. An acquaintance of about seventeen years had prepared me to expect a triumphant close to a life spent in his Redeemer's service. Such was the case. He told me that "I knew his manner of life;" and although conscious of imperfections and short-comings, said, that in his long warfare, "he had never wickedly departed from God." After an illness of six weeks, the mysterious machinery of the "fearfully and wonderfully made" organization stood still, and Father Logan "slept in Jesus."

On the 3d of July, the writer addressed the friends and church, from 1 Thess. 4: 13–18, after which, we took our venerable father to the "house prepared for all living," to await the dawn of that morn that ushers in an eternal day.

Farewell, Father Logan. We remember well your counsels, admonitions, and exhortations. We remember hallowed assemblings by baptismal streams; we remember the table and its holy symbols of the broken body and shed blood of our once dying Redeemer, when you told us of love divine; and we sorrow when we reflect that we meet no more on earth till Jesus comes. But thy labor was great, and rest came. Sleep then, beloved father, till the church fulfills its mission. Sleep till the gospel is preached to all nations as a witness. Sleep till the thrones of earth are cast down; till earthly glory departs forever; till the crown falls from the head, and the sceptre from the hand, of men unworthy to rule. Sleep till Jesus sits upon the throne of his glory; then wake to share his triumphs; wake to enter the "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away;" wake to join the holy angels and all the redeemed on the golden streets, within the pearly gates and gem-built walls of the heavenly Jerusalem, to be ever with the Lord.

For the World's Crisis.

AN APPEAL

TO THE BRETHREN AND SISTERS WITHIN THE LIMITS OF THE R. I. AND EAST. CONN. CONF.

At the late conference held at River Point, an effort was made to raise funds sufficient to purchase cloth for a tent to be used at camp-meetings, and to hold meetings in, where public houses cannot be obtained. It was proposed to get cloth sufficiently thick to shed water. It will therefore cost more than common cotton cloth. The cost will not be far from $100; $65 of which has already been pledged, and mostly paid. And now we solicit all those brethren and sisters that live in isolated places, who are interested in this public enterprise, which we think is for the glory of God, to help us in this work, by giving what seems to be duty. Enclose it in a letter and send it to me, as I am appointed to obtain the cloth, and get the tent made.

South Killingly, Ct. E. Bellows.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, July 25, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, Geo. T. Adams.

☞ Good Fractional Currency.

In sending postal currency, be careful to see that it is good before sending it. Very much of this fractional currency now in circulation is counterfeit; and every week we are receiving worthless notes of this description, which we are obliged to return to the sender.

☞ BILLS! BILLS!

We shall send out bills of indebtedness soon to those who are owing the office on book and Crisis accounts. We should be glad to be saved that trouble, by a prompt and immediate remittance from all who are in arrears. Shall we hear from such at once?

DISCUSSION AT NATIC.

Our discussion at Natic, R. I., with Mr. Lester, took place on the evenings of July 11, 12th, and 13th. When we came together on Tuesday evening, July 10th, our opponent utterly refused to discuss the question advertised, as follows:—"Does the Bible teach the second coming of Christ, and the end of all the prophetical periods was at the destruction of Jerusalem?" His excuse was, that he was hasty in accepting it, and that he was not as well posted on the subject as his opponent. The evening was spent in devising some way to have the discussion go on. The audience insisted that it should not be given up, as many had come several miles in order to be present. Finally, it was agreed to discuss the following question:—"Does the Bible and reason teach the final salvation of the whole human race?" We then adjourned to begin the debate of this question on the following evening.

At the time appointed we began the discussion, which passed off pleasantly to its final close. Our opponent has a remarkable memory, but is not as well prepared to defend Universalism as some. He abounded in witticisms and amusing anecdotes; but the proof presented to show that all men will be saved, we think was not worth mentioning. Indeed, it seems strange to us how any one who pretends to believe the Bible, and has read it carefully, can come to the conclusion that all men will be saved.

On the second evening, finding the Bible so plainly opposed to his position, he attempted to impeach the good book, and called it "a system of guess-work," and thought nature was higher authority than the Bible; thus planting himself behind the Spiritualists' battery; but that afforded him no protection.

He finally came out boldly and said "all rewards and punishments are received in this life;" hence it followed that there is no salvation for any one in the life to come. He saw no other way to sustain his system, and, yet this last position proved a death blow to it. We referred him to the Antediluvians and Sodomites, and the murderer killed in the act of killing his christian neighbor. According to his position, the antediluvians and Sodomites became so wicked the Lord would not let them live any longer upon the earth, and so he took them home to heaven to live with him. While his faithful servants, Noah and Lot, were left to remain here upon a sin-cursed earth, passing through many hardships and perplexing scenes; those wicked wretches of Sodom with their antediluvian brethren, were shouting glory in heaven around the throne of God.

It is sad to see what absurdities men will advocate rather than embrace the truth, and give their hearts to Christ, and be saved in harmony with the divine plan of salvation. The enmity against the Bible appears to be increasing every day; and the opposers are growing bolder, and rapidly increasing in numbers. It is high time for the soldiers of Christ to arouse and meet the enemies of the cross with undaunted boldness; trusting in the Captain of our salvation to lead us on to certain victory, and endless triumph in the everlasting kingdom.

During the discussion we had the privilege of meeting Brethren Bellows, Thomas, and Damman, and Phetteplace. The latter was our chairman for the discussion. He did well. He has recently married Sr. Lucy R. Otis, a true helper in the gospel. These young preachers all appear well, and bid fair to be useful in the vineyard of the Lord. Let them be well sustained by the churches where they labor. There is very small inducement for young men to start out to preach the coming of Christ, at the present day, unless they truly love Jesus and his appearing, and are willing to wait for their reward till the Master comes. The honor and pay in this world are too small to suit a hypocrite or mere hireling. It is a pleasing sight to see young men of ability who are willing to take their lives in their hands and go over the hills and through the vales to sound the final alarm to this guilty world, and bear all the reproach of the ungodly, and a cold-hearted church, to win a bride for our coming King. Let us pray the Lord to send out more laborers into the vineyard, for the harvest is great, and there are but few faithful ones ready to work in the field.

We spent the Lord's day, July 15th, at Natic, and had a good time in the Lord. At 9½ o'clock, we met for a love-feast and had a refreshing season. Some came eight or nine miles in order to be present. The weather was very warm, but the hearts of many were in a corresponding state. Our evening meeting was one of special interest. It was truly a heavenly place. Many stirring testimonies were given after preaching. We parted joyful in the Lord, expecting to meet soon in the kingdom of heaven.

The evidences showing that the consummation of the christian's hope is at hand, continue to grow brighter and brighter. "Let us watch and be sober."

"The Coming Battle," is the title of a work we have just received, published by Mr. Baxter, in London. In this work he endeavors to show that "appalling national convulsions" may be "expected, from Scripture prophecy, between 1866 and 1875."

He says the war which we have passed is nothing to the war that is to come, and that we shall soon be in war with France. He thinks the Fenians will cause a mighty revolution in Ireland, and a Sepoy-like assassination, in which no Protestant will be safe.

Price of the work 20 cents. Address Box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa.

We have also received from the same author a work entitled, "Louis Napoleon the Destined Monarch of the World." This is an abbreviation of his larger work, and contains the most important part of it. Price 25 cts. Address box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa.

Bethlehem.—We have received an enlarged edition of the little "Bethlehem" for the children, by Bro. H. L. Hastings. This is an excellent and very interesting work for the young; and we think the adults in the family will be sure and read it too. For sale at this office. Price 10 cents, postpaid.

Bible Chronology.—Bro. E. Slager, of Moultonborough, N. H., has issued a tract of 16 pp., entitled, "Bible Chronology of the 6000 years," which he will forward without price to any one who will send for it.

The Weather.—When speaking of the heat of the week, ending July 15th, report says:—"The temperature at the beginning and at the end of the week, was the most unprecedented on record in the city of New York."

☞ Be sure and read "Highways and Hedges," in another column. Are there not other churches that will do as they have done in Lawrence? Let there be some more "surprise parties."

☞ Thanks to Sr. Calkins for the excellent articles sent for the children.

THE BACKSLIDER.

There is no class, probably, so miserable as the backslider. They neither enjoy Christ nor the world. Having tasted the joys of the christian religion, they can never find such pure peace and sweet comfort from any other source. Nothing satisfies them, but every anticipated cup of bliss is dashed to earth ere it reaches their lips. They know the right way, and the wrong pursue. The dark gloom of night hangs over them, illuminated by no bright beams from the future. Yet, if such would only turn again to the Lord, and serve him as before, he would fill them with the same sweet peace as they enjoyed at the first. "The way of transgressors is hard."

The following extract from a private letter will illustrate this point:—

"Dear Mr. Grant:—This world is cold and drear. True, the earth has sunshine, but what good can I get from that? My heart is sad. My mind is enveloped in thick darkness. O that I had never been born, then I had not known the misery of being dead while still seeming to live. O what bliss and joy I have allowed the evil one to snatch from my grasp. I thought I had a good strong hold; but alas! my hands slipped; my feet stepped from the road that leads to life.

"I used to dream of seeing the King in his beauty, of hearing the choir celestial chant their songs of praise and triumph. Many times I have awakened myself out of sleep praising the Lord. My tongue refused to be still. My heart seemed to be on fire. Many have been the times while at work, that I lost my tools. My mind was so occupied with the coming King, and the restitution, that I would forget all about working matters. I sometimes ask myself, can it be all a delusion? If not, then I am ashamed to go to God again, because I have backslidden so many times. I have no confidence in myself, nor in any body else. There are feelings in my heart that antedate its doom. I may seek o'er earth, o'er sea, the fond illusion, rest—it flies before me.

I subscribe myself a poor, miserable backslider."

SOUTHERN FEELING.

The following extract from the letter of a Petersburg (Va.) correspondent, found in one of our exchanges, shows the state of feeling in the rebel states, towards those who are trying to educate the slave:—

"Much is written at the North, these days, telling about the loyalty of the Southern people; that they are the negroes' best friends, etc. True, a man could travel through the South, and by being careful to select his company, could make a very favorable report. But we who have spent six months and upwards among them, mingling with all classes, know that the bitterest feeling of enmity exists towards the Freedmen. A scene I witnessed this morning shows the feeling in its true light. At two o'clock this morning I was awakened by the fire bells. I got up, went to the window, and saw there was a large fire up town; but being in a strange house did not like to go out. So I went to sleep; and, after two hours, was again awakened by the alarm bells. This time I decided to go out and see what was burning. So I went to Mr. Whiting's room and woke him. He is the Superintendent of Freedmen's schools for this district. We hurried forth in quest of the fire. On arriving at the scene, we found it was the burning of the African church; a new edifice, just finished at a cost of over $16,000. We found on inquiring that the fire, two hours previous, was the burning of a building in the rear of another colored church, used as class rooms on Sundays, and on week days as school rooms; Mr. Whiting personally conducting it.

It is now reported, on pretty good authority, that five colored churches were fired last night. Certainly three; the third being discovered before much damage had been done. The curtains from the windows had been pulled down, saturated with kerosene oil, scattered about the floor and set on fire. I also saw a number of colored dwelling houses on fire; and the colored people told me that they were fired by fire-brands being thrown on the roofs. After the fire I saw half drunken firemen gathered in front of a colored dwelling, and insulting in a most shameful manner the inmates. Others have been heard to say, that there would be a larger fire one of these days than the one last night. The rebels are gloating over the destruction and misery they have caused; and they think they have made one good move towards driving no 'nigger' teachers out of the land. These are simply facts; and the future looks black. I shudder when I contemplate it. O that Jesus would come, speedily, and put an end to the tragedy. Perhaps their cup is not quite full; but it is filling fast. God keep us in this hour of trial. Yours longing for the Prince of Peace."

THINGS IN ITALY.

Things in Italy are fast approaching a crisis of great importance to that nation, and the ecclesiastical power at Rome. The abolishing "of all the religious orders," or societies, in Italy, by the Italian Parliament, is a death-blow to Papacy, so far as its "dominion" is concerned; and other heavy strokes may be expected soon.

The following news items show the state of things in Italy.

The War Feeling in Italy—Garibaldi's Purpose.—The best informed European correspondents agree that the volunteers under Garibaldi, already numbering one hundred thousand men, will constitute a revolutionary army, ready to follow its leader anywhere, and especially to Venice and Rome. Just before leaving Caprera, Garibaldi wrote the following letter to a committee of English ladies, who propose to give him their assistance:

"Dear Ladies:—I am deeply gratified by your sympathy in the cause of my country, so nobly manifested. If I am fortunate enough to be enabled to pursue that path which will emancipate mankind from the bondage and tyranny of an impostor, it will be by the invulnerable buckler afforded me by the assistance which I receive, and the support which I derive from the best-beloved by God of all his creatures—woman. I am, with gratitude and affection, yours for life, G. Garibaldi.

The tenor of this letter is generally interpreted to mean that Garibaldi goes forth to war upon the Pope, but whether Italy sympathizes with him in this appeal to Protestant sympathies may be doubted. The Paris correspondent of the New York Times, who writes understandingly on the subject, says:

Italy is in a state of civil war. What has been called brigandage in the south of Italy is now recognized as a guerrilla warfare, which extends day by day. There are Vigilance Committees, large bodies of government troops, arrests, imprisonments and banishments, but the reaction increases. It is a mixed up war, political and religious. The Italian Parliament, a few days ago, by a large majority, took the first steps in passing a bill for the destruction of all the religious orders. Measures so violent must provoke resistance. All the old governments know their friends and their agents. The whole body of the clergy must be at heart opposed to those whose views correspond with those of Gen. Garibaldi. Italy may see a civil war as fierce, as fanatical and as ferocious as that of La Vendee. The aid of Prussia may be counterbalanced by this fire in the rear, from a reaction strongest, no doubt, in Southern Italy, but extending more or less over the Peninsula.

Spiritualism Unveiled.—This is the title of a small work of seventy-seven pages, by Rev. Miles Grant, editor of the World's Crisis. It is a production of great force in the editor's outspoken manner. He aims to show this modern ism to be the work of demons, and makes a thorough examination of its origin, morals, doctrines, and politics. In the examination of the morals of this work of demons, he quotes largely from the testimony of the popular believers in the systems, and shows beyond dispute that the moral influence corresponds with what would be the work of devils, its tendency being downward, away from the inspiring tendency of the holy religion of Jesus. He shows most clearly, from undoubted testimony, that this ism denies that Jesus was begotten by the Holy Spirit; that he was the Son of God as taught in the Scriptures; that his death had any more to do with our salvation than that of any martyr; that he was raised from the dead, that he will ever come again personally to this earth, or that he forgives sins. He concludes by saying that he has hardly begun to open the deep iniquity of the demoniacal system.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

CORRECTION.

Editor of the World's Crisis,—Dear brother: Although you may scarcely have space for the correction, I wish to modify one expression which I was surprised and sorry to find that I had made in referring to that excellent work of our eminent and esteemed brother Shimeall, "The Political Economy of Prophecy." Instead of writing, "if somewhat marked by the positiveness which rather peculiarly characterizes prophetic interpreters," I ought to have written, and much regret that I did not write just what is simply true and just—"marked by the earnestness of powerful conviction." Please rectify an inadvertence, which I trust our much respected brother, the author, will kindly overlook. I will only add that I consider the information contained in that volume of the very highest value, and eminently important to be diffused among christians (and all of every class) in the exigency of these times. The interpretation, as I said before, I regard as marked by sound judgment and sagacity, which rapidly occurring events will verify and confirm. And I sincerely hope that the book may be extensively circulated and read. Asking your pardon for this trespass on your kindness, I am sincerely yours, in the hope of the heavenly kingdom,

A REQUEST.

I am sick with a very sore, painful cancer, which deprives me of the use of my right arm; in a great measure. I have called on the great Physician. His medicine is the prayer of faith. Instead of sending me to earthly helps, he told me to call on the elders of the church of Christ, and let them pray, "and the prayer of faith shall save the sick." The Lord always works with his children, and in his own way. In answer to my own little prayer, he has done much for me; so in answer to the rest of his faithful one's prayers, I expect to be healed.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER EIGHT.

Bro. Grant:—I returned home last night from my works in Chaux-de-Fonds and vicinity, and desire to write you something more in respect to my labors there. We closed our lectures in Chaux de Fonds the evening of June 28th. Our assembly there was composed of different nations. The Polish refugees of the first class received the glad tidings of Jesus soon coming with joyful hearts, and no more trouble themselves in regard to the mass of the priests. One of these was one of the commanders of the army in the late insurrection, and was wounded eighteen times. Two of the others were also officers,—all are men of education and intelligence. One French gentleman, the father of a family, and two French ladies, all Catholics, also embraced cordially the truths we preach. One of these ladies invited me to her house for dinner, and asked me to pray for her husband, a German infidel. I had a very interesting interview with him. He informed me that he was entirely disgusted with the sects, and had no confidence in them, and for that reason did not attend church. After conversing with him some time upon the Bible, and the sad divisions in the church of God, and the necessity of the perfect union of christians in this time, the Spirit of God accompanying my and Bro Hanhard's remarks, he was deeply convicted, and asked me to pray for him. We knelt down, and were blessed in prayer. He seemed tender as a lamb afterward, and his house is now open for the servants of God. Another Catholic, an Italian, now rejoices in the hope of the soon coming kingdom. Several Protestant families of respectability and influence, received the word with joy. One brother of much understanding and influence has opened his house for advent meetings. The last evening of our lectures, this brother rose, after I sat down, and said: "My decision is made to serve God and wait for the coming of his son; but I must confess here, that before hearing Bro. C. I considered myself a christian; but after listening to two or three of his conferences, I felt that I was hardly three-quarters converted. Now, thro' the grace of God, I trust I am a christian; and the last idol I cherished, my beloved pipe, I threw out of my window just before coming here, and I do not wish to use any more of the Lord's money so foolishly as to spend it for tobacco, when it is so much needed to carry forward the cause of God." He expressed much gratitude for our lectures, and to the American brethren for sending a missionary to Europe.

Two collegians also, leading members of the Young Men's Christian Association of that city, are now greatly interested in the study of prophecy. May God bless abundantly the little flock in that place, and make them very useful in spreading the light in that vicinity.

Sunday, June 24th, I spent in the morning and afternoon with the German Baptist brethren, as they call themselves (marching three hours), of whom I have heretofore written, who are very much interested in the doctrine of Christ's soon coming. They would not be called Baptists in America, for they do not practice immersion; they sprinkle, not infants, however, only believers. They seem very humble christians, as far as I have seen, intelligent and well educated. They are nearly all farmers, and scattered at considerable distance from each other. There is quite an awakening among them. They seem much interested in the study of the Bible, and ready to embrace its teachings as fast as they comprehend them. I trust many of them will be united with us.

Bro. John D. Hanhardt assisted me in my labors at Chaux de Fonds, to much acceptance. His heart is entirely consecrated to the work of the Lord, as is also his father's, David S. Hanhardt. Both are rendering much assistance, especially among the German people.

From Chaux de Fonds we went to Fleurier, June 29th, and spent two days with the dear brethren and sisters there, and had a refreshing time with them. I have recently received a letter from Bro. Geymet, who writes from La Tour, Italy. He says that after working with his hands for several weeks, he is now free to give himself entirely to the work of the Lord, and has recommenced his labors in the valley of Rora. He wrote that the priests were much exasperated in regard to the suppression of monasteries and convents. He says: "For this, the seven thunders again make themselves heard! They (the priests) say, that all comes from the Protestants, and have commenced a conspiracy against them, as being the cause of the war. . . . One priest wrote to Rome for the privilege of forming a crusade against the Protestants; he went to a Count in Brikeras, a short distance from La Tour, asking hospitality; but he had him arrested and put in prison. He had already collected in the poor village of Villar, two miles from La Tour, nearly 600 francs. One poor woman, who had three francs, gave it for arms with which to exterminate the Protestants. Several bishops have been banished, and many priests are in prison for resisting the execution of the decree of government against the monasteries and convents."

The Pope has excommunicated all the members of the Italian government; but of what avail? Bro. Geymet says he needs much the tract on Daniel 2 and 7, to spread, but I have none now to send him. He desires the prayers of the brethren, that God may give him the wisdom and strength he so much needs. Notwithstanding the war that is about us in Germany and Italy, it is very quiet in Switzerland. There is an attentive ear to hear on the subject of Christ's coming, and many acknowledge that we live in a time of great importance in the history of the world.

I am sorry to have occasion to say that many of the leaders of the sects begin to be alarmed in regard to our influence among the people, and try hard to stir them up against us, and use their influence to keep the churches and large public houses of assembly shut against us. For that reason, dear brother, as I wrote you two weeks since, we feel much the need of an independent place, which, as we are situated, can only be a tent.

Permit me, after much reflection on this subject, to write you my plans in regard to this matter. The brethren of the Crisis office have been so kind as to publish a second edition of the "Thrilling Narrative" for the aid of the "European Mission." Dear brethren and sisters, be so kind, as soon as you read this letter, each one of you, who has at heart the conversion of your fellowmen in Europe, to send immediately $1.00 to the Crisis office for that book. Then in one or two weeks the money will be on the way; in two weeks more it will reach us, and in one week after we shall be laboring with the Parisian tent and the American flag from place to place. Here the weather is such that we could labor thus till November, and afterward, if it please God to restore peace to Italy, or Slavonian Turkey. We can labor there through the ensuing winter independent of those in authority. Please send all papers in future via Bremen or Hamburg. If sent thus, we have nothing to pay here, otherwise each paper costs us from four to six sous, which is worth saving. Your affectionate brother,

M. B. Czechowski.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

We have had a series of surprise parties recently, in the highways and hedges of this city, and this article is penned to give the readers a brief account of them, and especially to give information voluntarily to the unknown "friends" in Lawrence, Mass., concerning the substantial christian comfort that they have afforded some of the poor of this city by the check for $50 they sent us to aid in clothing and feeding them.

Do not start, christian friends, when I tell you that I look with favor upon surprise parties. I do not sanction all kinds of surprise parties, but there is one kind that I most heartily approve of, whilst the others are held by me in the most uncompromising detestation, and I purpose, by the help of the Lord, to cling to the one, and to despise the others.

Last Saturday morning, in company with Sr. Bussier and one of our mission girls, I started to carry some solid blessings to some of the poor whom we have with us always. We went fully equipped with the "sword of the Spirit," our "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," "righteousness" for our "breastplate," and "faith" for our "shield," "and for a helmet, the hope of salvation." In addition to these we had flour, meal, bread, potatoes, sugar, soap, greenbacks, postal currency, etc., etc.

The first home we visited was "Auntie Gray's." "Auntie Gray" is a colored saint of nearly eighty years of age. She has followed the Good Shepherd more than fifty years, and to-day is like a "shock of corn fully ripe." Her home is in a small house in a narrow alley, within a stone's throw of millions of wealth. Her room is about nine by twelve feet. Her furniture consists of a bed, two chairs, a chest, a small table, a coal box, and a stove. Every thing is kept clean and in order. Here Auntie lives alone, yet not alone, for the Father, the Word and the Spirit dwell there too. No wonder that she says, "It makes poverty go light." To try her faith a little, I said, as I entered the room, "Auntie, we are going on a missionary tour, and if you had a few pennies for the Lord, we could make good use of them." She looked at us sadly for a minute, and then replied, "The Lord has been good to me, but I have not one penny in the world; but if I had the money for that washing up there (and she pointed to a few towels that she had just washed for a neighbor), I would give the Lord a part of it." My heart was deeply moved. That was the effect of the work of grace upon the heart of a rich poor woman. She had laid all upon the altar. I told her that "the Lord, knowing that she was penniless, had opened the hearts of his children hundreds of miles away, and we had brought the blessing with us." What a blessed season followed as we gave her the bounty. Then we sang, prayed, read God's word, and talked about his faithfulness, and then left with benedictions upon our heads. That was the first surprise party of the day. The mercury was standing at ninety-seven in the shade, but our joy could not be measured.

The next place visited was "Aunt Tena Thompson's," a colored saint of seventy-six years, whose home is on the corner of St. Mary's Alley. Her family consists of herself and a blind son who is fifty-six years old. She is quite infirm, and her son, to get a living, sells matches at the street corners, and does various "odd jobs," but his mother being so sick at present, prevents his being away from her much; so that they have to depend on the charities of the world. When we entered their home no one was in their room, the son being "down cellar," and the mother up stairs. We deposited a bag of flour and other christian God-bless-yous on the table. The blind son soon came into the room, and to try his faith, I asked him if he would "give us some cold meat or bread to give to the poor." He looked a little puzzled for a moment, and then replied, "Dear brother, we have no food in the house, and I was just going out to market to beg something for myself and poor mother." I said, "I think you had better stay at home to-day. The Lord knows that you have need, and he will take care of you." "I know it," he replied; "the Lord has kept us thus far in a wonderful manner." "But do you not fast at times?" said I. "O yes," said he; "we fast a good bit sometimes; but too much fasting is injurious." So thought I. The mother then came tottering down stairs, and as she saw the provision on the table that the Lord had sent her, tears filled her eyes, and joy and thanksgiving filled the hearts of both mother and son. Sister Bussier engaged in prayer, after which we read the precious word, and sang the praises of Him who is the God of the aged and of the poor.

Next to "little Mary's" mother's home. This place has not changed materially since its description, some months ago, given in the Crisis. We got here about noon, and found that the mother and four children had eaten nothing since the day before. We soon piled up the little table, or chest rather, with flour, meal, bread, potatoes, soap, etc., etc., and the sparkling eyes told the feelings of the party.

Then to Maria's mother's, where the same scenes were witnessed. Next to Sr. Annie Washington's, who has five mouths to feed; then to "Blind Susan's," one of the Bedford street converts, who has proved for the last sixteen months that she is the Lord's. Next to Sr. Hilton's, another from the same locality, who has served Jesus for the past thirteen months most faithfully. An incident in my own experience connected with this sister's conversion may not be out of place here.

During a protracted effort, she had been to the anxious bench night after night, but found no peace, until the last night of that meeting. I learned from her prayers that she had confessed and forsaken her sins, and given up all for Jesus, but the peace she desired had not been obtained. That last evening she was crying unto the Lord with one other poor soul who soon found Christ. Sister H. was then alone. Immediately I dropped upon my knees, and called upon the Lord to fill her with the Holy Spirit. I felt that my prayer would be answered, and afterwards I stood before her, and once more called for the blessing; when at once the burden fell from her, and light, joy and peace broke in upon her heart. She leaped for joy, and my heart was so unutterably full that I too leaped for joy. That was the first and only time that I have leaped in a public meeting. Generally my heart gets very large, and I can weep only.

Other families were wretched, and many interesting facts concerning them might be written. It would be a recital of want, woe, oppression, sickness, crime, etc.

Dear brethren and sisters in Lawrence, you have carried joy in one day to the hearts of forty persons. You have given bread to the hungry, medicine to the sick, and money to the needy. Those, who in the morning had not a mouthful of food, suddenly found themselves supplied with enough to last them a week. I told them who sent the money, and many prayers are now going up to heaven in your behalf. In addition to this, you have brought manifold blessings upon the heads of Sr. Bussier, little Maria, and myself.

We have received $2.00 more towards purchasing the "Home." I copy the following from "The Press," of July 16th, of this city:

"Last week the mortality among children was very great, no less a number than one hundred and one having died from cholera infantum. Many of these little ones never breathed any air besides that incident to narrow courts and alleys in densely packed and not very clean neighborhoods, in different locations in our city." etc.

Still the harvest of death goes on. We are made sad daily. My health is excellent. I weigh one hundred and forty pounds, the most that I ever weighed in my life. The heat has been very oppressive for the last two weeks. Yet Satan is as busy as ever. Heat and cold are alike to him, and they are the same with us. We feel that we are doing our last work. Soon there will be no poor ones to visit, no sick to administer to, no dying saints to encourage, no living sinners to warn, no backsliders to entreat. Our labor is solemn. The Lord has opened the way for me to preach to poor fallen ones in the Venereal Ward for Women, at the Philadelphia Alms House, on Wednesday afternoons. I have spoken twice, and the word of the Lord has affected some. Pray that this new effort may be crowned with the blessing of the Lord. This is a sad field of duty. Some of these persons are very young and beautiful, but the world has cast them off; but Jesus died to save them. At first some laughed, but now they weep. Pray for them.

Left Sunday we commenced open air meetings on St. Mary's street. Time, half-past six P. M. This is one of the vilest sections of the city. For an audience we had, besides christians, the classes spoken of in Revelations, who shall be "cast into the lake of fire." Some appeared to be much affected. May the Lord grant that permanent good may result from these efforts. We depend on the word and Spirit of the Lord for success.

Yours looking for Christ,

F. H. Burbank.

DORCAS MISSION.

We acknowledge in this manner the receipt of a barrel of clothing, books, etc., from Dansville, N. Y., a half-barrelful from Portsmouth, N. H., and $1.00 from a friend in Ct., town not made out; $1.50 from E. T. Haskell, Worcester Co., Mass.; $1.25 from S. H. O., Auburn, N. Y.; and $10.00 from a brother and his companion in Binghampton Ct.; also $1.00 from G. L., of Thomaston, Ct.

"Friends" have just sent $50.00 to aid in clothing and feeding the poor. Contribution from Lawrence, Mass. All have our heartfelt thanks and our prayers. The Lord blesses us continually, and we find it to be blessed to trust in him. Pray for us, that we may ever abound in the work of the Lord.

Eld. H. L. Hastings has sent us at his own charges 43,000 pages of tracts, value $43.00, for distribution among the poor. The Lord will pay him. His tracts are excellent for our missionary labors, and we trust that the Lord will furnish him with funds, so that we may be fully supplied. The colored people here are delighted with them.

Yours, etc., in the highways,

F. H. Burbank.

Bro. E. Barrow, Woodbull, N. Y., writes: "I thank God for what I have received in the past few months through your paper. I love the precious truth of God. I belong to the M. E. Church; but O how blind it is. How little truth we have had. I think there are many here thirsting for the word of God."

A VETERAN FALLEN.

How little thought the believing companies of the pilgrim church, when the cry, "Behold He cometh," called them forth to meet the Lord, that so many must fall and be laid away to repose in the chambers of death, before the Life-giver should be revealed to give glory, honor and eternal life to all his saints. So near did the coming of the "Holy and Just One" seem, that white-headed fathers and mothers rejoiced in the thought that they should never see death, but be changed in a moment from mortal to immortality. Such was the expectation of a venerable minister of Christ, who for nearly fifty years preached the glad tidings of redemption to the lost sons and daughters of Adam, of the Western States.

Henry Logan was born in Pennsylvania, Jan. 10th, 1783, and died at Plymouth, Marshall Co., Indiana, July 1st, 1866. On the 3d of December, 1808, he experienced that "joy and peace in believing" that has lit up so many sorrowful countenances with heavenly sunlight, since the glorious gospel has given the guilty the assurance of pardon, and the dying the hope of life. In a very few years he felt a "necessity laid upon him" to proclaim to the perishing "the unsearchable riches of Christ." While thousands gave every energy of body and mind to amassing wealth, Father Logan was pointing out the excellencies of the inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, which is reserved in the heavenly country for all the faithful. He endured all the privations and labors incident to pioneer life in the wilds of the West.

To a great extent, he preached the gospel without any earthly recompense; sometimes laboring all night for the support of those dependent upon him, that he might make the gospel "without charge" to all. He was a man of prayer, and emphatically a son of exhortation. How often has his persuasive eloquence inspired the despondent mourner to come to Christ and find peace; how often has the wavering one been induced to choose the "better part," instead of worldly things, as he has thrilled the congregation with portraying the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" of the heavenly home; how often has his enrapturing addresses to the church prompted holier resolutions, and confirmed determinations in the christian life. Often has he led the repentant believer down to the waters of holy baptism, and buried him in the likeness of Jesus' death. Often has he gathered the little churches here and there around the table, where the consecrated loaf and cup of blessing call up remembrances of One whose "love was stronger than death."

When God's heralds proclaimed the coming of the heavenly Bridegroom near, the white snows of time had already fallen on Father Logan's temples. Yet he lifted up his head and rejoiced to think redemption was near. He thought it almost possible that he might enter "the inheritance of the saints in light," without going through the valley of death. The doctrine of eternal life through Jesus Christ alone was delightful to him. He realized in Jesus, as a Savior, something more than one who died to make existence blissful. He was to him "the Prince of Life." And because "he lives," it was his expectation to "live also." He formed no such erroneous idea of immortality and eternal life as to suppose (when instructed fully by the word of truth) that an earthly dead Adam was the fountain head of these, God's greatest gifts. He clearly discerned that "eternal life is in his Son." Accordingly, he expected to put on "glory and honor and immortality," and incorruptibility, at the resurrection, when Jesus comes. Hence the "coming of the Lord" was a theme fraught with interest to him.

His work is done. His end was peace. I visited him in his last illness, to witness the confidence of a christian in life's last conflict. An acquaintance of about seventeen years had prepared me to expect a triumphant close to a life spent in his Redeemer's service. Such was the case. He told me that "I knew his manner of life;" and although conscious of imperfections and short-comings, said, that in his long warfare, "he had never wickedly departed from God." After an illness of six weeks, the mysterious machinery of the "fearfully and wonderfully made" organization stood still, and Father Logan "slept in Jesus."

On the 3d of July, the writer addressed the friends and church, from 1 Thess. 4 : 13–18, after which, we took our venerable father to the "house prepared for all living," to await the dawn of that morn that ushers in an eternal day.

Farewell, Father Logan. We remember well your counsels, admonitions, and exhortations. We remember hallowed assemblings by baptismal streams; we remember the table and its holy symbols of the broken body and shed blood of our once dying Redeemer, when you told us of love divine; and we sorrow when we reflect that we meet no more on earth till Jesus comes. But thy labor was great, and rest came. Sleep then, beloved father, till the church fulfills its mission. Sleep till the gospel is preached to all nations as a witness. Sleep till the thrones of earth are cast down; till earthly glory departs forever; till the crown falls from the head, and the sceptre from the hand, of men unworthy to rule. Sleep till Jesus sits upon the throne of his glory; then wake to share his triumphs; wake to enter the "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away;" wake to join the holy angels and all the redeemed on the golden streets, within the pearly gates and gem-built walls of the heavenly Jerusalem, to be ever with the Lord.

AN APPEAL

TO THE BRETHREN AND SISTERS WITHIN THE LIMITS OF THE R. I. AND EAST. CONN. CONF.

At the late conference held at River Point, an effort was made to raise funds sufficient to purchase cloth for a tent to be used at campmeetings, and to hold meetings in, where public houses cannot be obtained. It was proposed to get cloth sufficiently thick to shed water. It will therefore cost more than common cotton cloth. The cost will not be far from $100; $65 of which has already been pledged, and mostly paid. And now we solicit all those brethren and sisters that live in isolated places, who are interested in this public enterprise, which we think is for the glory of God, to help us in this work, by giving what seems to be duty. Enclose it in a letter and send it to me, as I am appointed to obtain the cloth, and get the tent made.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Wednesday, July 25, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Good Fractional Currency.

In sending postal currency, be careful to see that it is good before sending it. Very much of this fractional currency now in circulation is counterfeit; and every week we are receiving worthless notes of this description, which we are obliged to return to the sender.

☞ BILLS! BILLS!

We shall send out bills of indebtedness soon to those who are owing the office on book and Crisis accounts. We should be glad to be saved that trouble, by a prompt and immediate remittance from all who are in arrears. Shall we hear from such at once?

DISCUSSION AT NATIC.

Our discussion at Natic, R. I., with Mr. Lester, took place on the evenings of July 11, 12th, and 13th. When we came together on Tuesday evening, July 10th, our opponent utterly refused to discuss the question advertised, as follows:—"Does the Bible teach the second coming of Christ, and the end of all the prophetical periods was at the destruction of Jerusalem?" His excuse was, that he was hasty in accepting it, and that he was not as well posted on the subject as his opponent. The evening was spent in devising some way to have the discussion go on. The audience insisted that it should not be given up, as many had come several miles in order to be present. Finally, it was agreed to discuss the following question:—"Does the Bible and reason teach the final salvation of the whole human race?" We then adjourned to begin the debate of this question on the following evening.

At the time appointed we began the discussion, which passed off pleasantly to its final close. Our opponent has a remarkable memory, but is not as well prepared to defend Universalism as some. He abounded in witticisms and amusing anecdotes; but the proof presented to show that all men will be saved, we think was not worth mentioning. Indeed, it seems strange to us how any one who pretends to believe the Bible, and has read it carefully, can come to the conclusion that all men will be saved.

On the second evening, finding the Bible so plainly opposed to his position, he attempted to impeach the good book, and called it "a system of guess-work," and thought nature was higher authority than the Bible; thus planting himself behind the Spiritualists' battery; but that afforded him no protection.

He finally came out boldly and said "all rewards and punishments are received in this life;" hence it followed that there is no salvation for any one in the life to come. He saw no other way to sustain his system, and, yet this last position proved a death blow to it. We referred him to the Antediluvians and Sodomites, and the murderer killed in the act of killing his christian neighbor. According to his position, the antediluvians and Sodomites became so wicked the Lord would not let them live any longer upon the earth, and so he took them home to heaven to live with him. While his faithful servants, Noah and Lot, were left to remain here upon a sin-cursed earth, passing through many hardships and perplexing scenes; those wicked wretches of Sodom with their antediluvian brethren, were shouting glory in heaven around the throne of God.

It is sad to see what absurdities men will advocate rather than embrace the truth, and give their hearts to Christ, and be saved in harmony with the divine plan of salvation. The enmity against the Bible appears to be increasing every day; and the opposers are growing bolder, and rapidly increasing in numbers. It is high time for the soldiers of Christ to arouse and meet the enemies of the cross with undaunted boldness; trusting in the Captain of our salvation to lead us on to certain victory, and endless triumph in the everlasting kingdom.

During the discussion we had the privilege of meeting Brethren Bellows, Thomas, and Damman, and Phetteplace. The latter was our chairman for the discussion. He did well. He has recently married Sr. Lucy R. Otis, a true helper in the gospel. These young preachers all appear well, and bid fair to be useful in the vineyard of the Lord. Let them be well sustained by the churches where they labor. There is very small inducement for young men to start out to preach the coming of Christ, at the present day, unless they truly love Jesus and his appearing, and are willing to wait for their reward till the Master comes. The honor and pay in this world are too small to suit a hypocrite or mere hireling. It is a pleasing sight to see young men of ability who are willing to take their lives in their hands and go over the hills and through the vales to sound the final alarm to this guilty world, and bear all the reproach of the ungodly, and a cold-hearted church, to win a bride for our coming King. Let us pray the Lord to send out more laborers into the vineyard, for the harvest is great, and there are but few faithful ones ready to work in the field.

We spent the Lord's day, July 15th, at Natic, and had a good time in the Lord. At 9½ o'clock, we met for a love-feast and had a refreshing season. Some came eight or nine miles in order to be present. The weather was very warm, but the hearts of many were in a corresponding state. Our evening meeting was one of special interest. It was truly a heavenly place. Many stirring testimonies were given after preaching. We parted joyful in the Lord, expecting to meet soon in the kingdom of heaven.

The evidences showing that the consummation of the christian's hope is at hand, continue to grow brighter and brighter. "Let us watch and be sober."

"THE COMING BATTLE," is the title of a work we have just received, published by Mr. Baxter, in London. In this work he endeavors to show that "appalling national convulsions" may be "expected, from Scripture prophecy, between 1866 and 1875."

He says the war which we have passed is nothing to the war that is to come, and that we shall soon be in war with France. He thinks the Fenians will cause a mighty revolution in Ireland, and a Sepoy-like assassination, in which no Protestant will be safe.

Price of the work 20 cents. Address Box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa.

We have also received from the same author a work entitled, "Louis Napoleon the Destined Monarch of the World." This is an abbreviation of his larger work, and contains the most important part of it. Price 25 cts. Address box 1199, Philadelphia, Pa.

BETHLEHEM.—We have received an enlarged edition of the little "Bethlehem" for the children, by Bro. H. L. Hastings. This is an excellent and very interesting work for the young; and we think the adults in the family will be sure and read it too. For sale at this office. Price 10 cents, postpaid.

BIBLE CHRONOLOGY.—Bro. E. Slager, of Moultonborough, N. H., has issued a tract of 16 pp., entitled, "Bible Chronology of the 6000 years," which he will forward without price to any one who will send for it.

THE WEATHER.—When speaking of the heat of the week, ending July 15th, report says:—"The temperature at the beginning and at the end of the week, was the most unprecedented on record in the city of New York."

☞ Be sure and read "Highways and Hedges," in another column. Are there not other churches that will do as they have done in Lawrence? Let there be some more "surprise parties."

☞ THANKS to Sr. Calkins for the excellent articles sent for the children.

THE BACKSLIDER.

There is no class, probably, so miserable as the backslider. They neither enjoy Christ nor the world. Having tasted the joys of the christian religion, they can never find such pure peace and sweet comfort from any other source. Nothing satisfies them, but every anticipated cup of bliss is dashed to earth ere it reaches their lips. They know the right way, and the wrong pursue. The dark gloom of night hangs over them, illuminated by no bright beams from the future. Yet, if such would only turn again to the Lord, and serve him as before, he would fill them with the same sweet peace as they enjoyed at the first. "The way of transgressors is hard."

The following extract from a private letter will illustrate this point:—

"DEAR MR. GRANT:—This world is cold and drear. True, the earth has sunshine, but what good can I get from that? My heart is sad. My mind is enveloped in thick darkness. O that I had never been born, then I had not known the misery of being dead while still seeming to live. O what bliss and joy I have allowed the evil one to snatch from my grasp. I thought I had a good strong hold; but alas! my hands slipped; my feet stepped from the road that leads to life.

"I used to dream of seeing the King in his beauty, of hearing the choir celestial chant their songs of praise and triumph. Many times I have awakened myself out of sleep praising the Lord. My tongue refused to be still. My heart seemed to be on fire. Many have been the times while at work, that I lost my tools. My mind was so occupied with the coming King, and the restitution, that I would forget all about working matters. I sometimes ask myself, can it be all a delusion? If not, then I am ashamed to go to God again, because I have backslidden so many times. I have no confidence in myself, nor in any body else. There are feelings in my heart that antedate its doom. I may seek o'er earth, o'er sea, the fond illusion, rest—it flies before me.

I subscribe myself a poor, miserable backslider."

SOUTHERN FEELING.

The following extract from the letter of a Petersburg (Va.) correspondent, found in one of our exchanges, shows the state of feeling in the rebel states, towards those who are trying to educate the slave:—

"Much is written at the North, these days, telling about the loyalty of the Southern people; that they are the negroes' best friends, etc. True, a man could travel through the South, and by being careful to select his company, could make a very favorable report. But we who have spent six months and upwards among them, mingling with all classes, know that the bitterest feeling of enmity exists towards the Freedmen. A scene I witnessed this morning shows the feeling in its true light. At two o'clock this morning I was awakened by the fire bells. I got up, went to the window, and saw there was a large fire up town; but being in a strange house did not like to go out. So I went to sleep; and, after two hours, was again awakened by the alarm bells. This time I decided to go out and see what was burning. So I went to Mr. Whiting's room and woke him. He is the Superintendent of Freedmen's schools for this district. We hurried forth in quest of the fire. On arriving at the scene, we found it was the burning of the African church; a new edifice, just finished at a cost of over $15,000. We found on inquiring that the fire, two hours previous, was the burning of a building in the rear of another colored church, used as class rooms on Sundays, and on week days as school rooms; Mr. Whiting personally conducting it.

It is now reported, on pretty good authority, that five colored churches were fired last night. Certainly three; the third being discovered before much damage had been done. The curtains from the windows had been pulled down, saturated with kerosene oil, scattered about the floor and set on fire. I also saw a number of colored dwelling houses on fire; and the colored people told me that they were fired by fire-brands being thrown on the roofs. After the fire I saw half drunken firemen gathered in front of a colored dwelling, and insulting in a most shameful manner the inmates. Others have been heard to say, that there would be a larger fire one of these days than the one last night. The rebels are gloating over the destruction and misery they have caused; and they think they have made one good move towards driving us 'nigger' teachers out of the land. These are simply facts; and the future looks black. I shudder when I contemplate it. O that Jesus would come, speedily, and put an end to the tragedy. Perhaps their cup is not quite full; but it is filling fast. God keep us in this hour of trial. Yours longing for the Prince of Peace."

THINGS IN ITALY.

Things in Italy are fast approaching a crisis of great importance to that nation, and the ecclesiastical power at Rome. The abolishing "of all the religious orders," or societies, in Italy, by the Italian Parliament, is a death-blow to Papacy, so far as its "dominion" is concerned; and other heavy strokes may be expected soon.

The following news items show the state of things in Italy.

THE WAR FEELING IN ITALY—GARIBALDI'S PURPOSE.—The best informed European correspondents agree that the volunteers under Garibaldi, already numbering one hundred thousand men, will constitute a revolutionary army, ready to follow its leader anywhere, and especially to Venice and Rome. Just before leaving Caprera, Garibaldi wrote the following letter to a committee of English ladies, who propose to give him their assistance:.

"DEAR LADIES:—I am deeply gratified by your sympathy in the cause of my country, so nobly manifested. If I am fortunate enough to be enabled to pursue that path which will emancipate mankind from the bondage and tyranny of an impostor, it will be by the invulnerable buckler afforded me by the assistance which I receive, and the support which I derive from the best-beloved by God of all his creatures—woman. I am, with gratitude and affection, yours for life, G. GARIBALDI.

The tenor of this letter is generally interpreted to mean that Garibaldi goes forth to war upon the Pope, but whether Italy sympathizes with him in this appeal to Protestant sympathies may be doubted. The Paris correspondent of the New York Times, who writes understandingly on the subject, says:

Italy is in a state of civil war. What has been called brigandage in the south of Italy is now recognized as a guerrilla warfare, which extends day by day. There are Vigilance Committees, large bodies of government troops, arrests, imprisonments and banishments, but the reaction increases. It is a mixed up war, political and religious. The Italian Parliament, a few days ago, by a large majority, took the first steps in passing a bill for the destruction of all the religious orders. Measures so violent must provoke resistance. All the old governments know their friends and their agents. The whole body of the clergy must be at heart opposed to those whose views correspond with those of Gen. Garibaldi. Italy may see a civil war as fierce, as fanatical and as ferocious as that of La Vendee. The aid of Prussia may be counterbalanced by this fire in the rear, from a reaction strongest, no doubt, in Southern Italy, but extending more or less over the Peninsula.

SPIRITUALISM UNVEILED.—This is the title of a small work of seventy-seven pages, by Rev. Miles Grant, editor of the World's Crisis. It is a production of great force in the editor's outspoken manner. He aims to show this modern ism to be the work of demons, and makes a thorough examination of its origin, morals, doctrines, and politics. In the examination of the morals of this work of demons, he quotes largely from the testimony of the popular believers in the systems, and shows beyond dispute that the moral influence corresponds with what would be the work of devils, its tendency being downward, away from the inspiring tendency of the holy religion of Jesus. He shows most clearly, from undoubted testimony, that this ism denies that Jesus was begotten by the Holy Spirit; that he was the Son of God as taught in the Scriptures; that his death had any more to do with our salvation than that of any martyr; that he was raised from the dead, that he will ever come again personally to this earth, or that he forgives sins. He concludes by saying that he has hardly begun to open the deep iniquity of the demoniacal system.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

CORRECTION.

Editor of the World's Crisis,—Dear brother: Although you may scarcely have space for the correction, I wish to modify one expression which I was surprised and sorry to find that I had made in referring to that excellent work of our eminent and esteemed brother Shimeall, "The Political Economy of Prophecy." Instead of writing, "if somewhat marked by the positiveness which rather peculiarly characterizes prophetic interpreters," I ought to have written, and much regret that I did not write just what is simply true and just—"marked by the earnestness of powerful conviction." Please rectify an inadvertence, which I trust our much respected brother, the author, will kindly overlook. I will only add that I consider the information contained in that volume of the very highest value, and eminently important to be diffused among christians (and all of every class) in the exigency of these times. The interpretation, as I said before, I regard as marked by sound judgment and sagacity, which rapidly occurring events will verify and confirm. And I sincerely hope that the book may be extensively circulated and read. Asking your pardon for this trespass on your kindness, I am sincerely yours, in the hope of the heavenly kingdom,

A REQUEST.

I am sick with a very sore, painful cancer, which deprives me of the use of my right arm, in a great measure. I have called on the great Physician. His medicine is the prayer of faith. Instead of sending me to earthly helps, he told me to call on the elders of the church of Christ, and let them pray, "and the prayer of faith shall save the sick." The Lord always works with his children, and in his own way. In answer to my own little prayer, he has done much for me; so in answer to the rest of his faithful one's prayers, I expect to be healed.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.

NUMBER EIGHT.

BRO. GRANT:—I returned home last night from my works in Chaux-de-Fonds and vicinity, and desire to write you something more in respect to my labors there. We closed our lectures in Chaux de Fonds the evening of June 28th. Our assembly there was composed of different nations. The Polish refugees of the first class received the glad tidings of Jesus soon coming with joyful hearts, and no more trouble themselves in regard to the mass of the priests. One of these was one of the commanders of the army in the late insurrection, and was wounded eighteen times. Two of the others were also officers,—all are men of education and intelligence. One French gentleman, the father of a family, and two French ladies, all Catholics, also embraced cordially the truths we preach. One of these ladies invited me to her house for dinner, and asked me to pray for her husband, a German infidel. I had a very interesting interview with him. He informed me that he was entirely disgusted with the sects, and had no confidence in them, and for that reason did not attend church. After conversing with him some time upon the Bible, and the sad divisions in the church of God, and the necessity of the perfect union of christians in this time, the Spirit of God accompanying my and Bro Hanhard's remarks, he was deeply convicted, and asked me to pray for him. We knelt down, and were blessed in prayer. He seemed tender as a lamb afterward, and his house is now open for the servants of God. Another Catholic, an Italian, now rejoices in the hope of the soon coming kingdom. Several Protestant families of respectability and influence, received the word with joy. One brother of much understanding and influence has opened his house for advent meetings. The last evening of our lectures, this brother rose, after I sat down, and said: "My decision is made to serve God and wait for the coming of his son; but I must confess here, that before hearing Bro. C. I considered myself a christian; but after listening to two or three of his conferences, I felt that I was hardly three-quarters converted. Now, thro' the grace of God, I trust I am a christian; and the last idol I cherished, my beloved pipe, I threw out of my window just before coming here, and I do not wish to use any more of the Lord's money so foolishly as to spend it for tobacco, when it is so much needed to carry forward the cause of God." He expressed much gratitude for our lectures, and to the American brethren for sending a missionary to Europe.

Two collegians also, leading members of the Young Men's Christian Association of that city, are now greatly interested in the study of prophecy. May God bless abundantly the little flock in that place, and make them very useful in spreading the light in that vicinity.

Sunday, June 24th, I spent in the morning and afternoon with the German Baptist brethren, as they call themselves (marching three hours), of whom I have heretofore written, who are very much interested in the doctrine of Christ's soon coming. They would not be called Baptists in America, for they do not practice immersion; they sprinkle, not infants, however, only believers. They seem very humble christians, as far as I have seen, intelligent and well educated. They are nearly all farmers, and scattered at considerable distance from each other. There is quite an awakening among them. They seem much interested in the study of the Bible, and ready to embrace its teachings as fast as they comprehend them. I trust many of them will be united with us.

Bro. John D. Hanhardt assisted me in my labors at Chaux de Fonds, to much acceptance. His heart is entirely consecrated to the work of the Lord, as is also his father's, David S. Hanhardt. Both are rendering much assistance, especially among the German people.

From Chaux de Fonds we went to Fleurier, June 29th, and spent two days with the dear brethren and sisters there, and had a refreshing time with them. I have recently received a letter from Bro. Geymet, who writes from La Tour, Italy. He says that after working with his hands for several weeks, he is now free to give himself entirely to the work of the Lord, and has recommenced his labors in the valley of Rora. He wrote that the priests were much exasperated in regard to the suppression of monasteries and convents. He says: "For this, the seven thunders again make themselves heard! They (the priests) say, that all comes from the Protestants, and have commenced a conspiracy against them, as being the cause of the war. . . . One priest wrote to Rome for the privilege of forming a crusade against the Protestants; he went to a Count in Brikeras, a short distance from La Tour, asking hospitality; but he had him arrested and put in prison. He had already collected in the poor village of Villar, two miles from La Tour, nearly 600 francs. One poor woman, who had three francs, gave it for arms with which to exterminate the Protestants. Several bishops have been banished, and many priests are in prison for resisting the execution of the decree of government against the monasteries and convents."

The Pope has excommunicated all the members of the Italian government; but of what avail! Bro. Geymet says he needs much the tract on Daniel 2 and 7, to spread, but I have none now to send him. He desires the prayers of the brethren, that God may give him the wisdom and strength he so much needs. Notwithstanding the war that is about us in Germany and Italy, it is very quiet in Switzerland. There is an attentive ear to hear on the subject of Christ's coming, and many acknowledge that we live in a time of great importance in the history of the world.

I am sorry to have occasion to say that many of the leaders of the sects begin to be alarmed in regard to our influence among the people, and try hard to stir them up against us, and use their influence to keep the churches and large public houses of assembly shut against us. For that reason, dear brother, as I wrote you two weeks since, we feel much the need of an independent place, which, as we are situated, can only be a tent.

Permit me, after much reflection on this subject, to write you my plans in regard to this matter. The brethren of the Crisis office have been so kind as to publish a second edition of the "Thrilling Narrative" for the aid of the "European Mission." Dear brethren and sisters, be so kind, as soon as you read this letter, each one of you, who has at heart the conversion of your fellowmen in Europe, to send immediately $1.00 to the Crisis office for that book. Then in one or two weeks the money will be on the way; in two weeks more it will reach us, and in one week after we shall be laboring with the Parisian tent and the American flag from place to place. Here the weather is such that we could labor thus till November, and afterward, if it please God to restore peace to Italy, or Slavonian Turkey. We can labor there through the ensuing winter independent of those in authority. Please send all papers in future via Bremen or Hamburg. If sent thus, we have nothing to pay here, otherwise each paper costs us from four to six sous, which is worth saving. Your affectionate brother,

M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

We have had a series of surprise parties recently, in the highways and hedges of this city, and this article is penned to give the readers a brief account of them, and especially to give information voluntarily to the unknown "friends" in Lawrence, Mass., concerning the substantial christian comfort that they have afforded some of the poor of this city by the check for $50 they sent us to aid in clothing and feeding them.

Do not start, christian friends, when I tell you that I look with favor upon surprise parties. I do not sanction all kinds of surprise parties, but there is one kind that I most heartily approve of, whilst the others are held by me in the most uncompromising detestation, and I purpose, by the help of the Lord, to cling to the one, and to despise the others.

Last Saturday morning, in company with Sr. Bussier and one of our mission girls, I started to carry some solid blessings to some of the poor whom we have with us always. We went fully equipped with the "sword of the Spirit," our "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," "righteousness" for our "breastplate," and "faith" for our "shield," "and for a helmet, the hope of salvation." In addition to these we had flour, meal, bread, potatoes, sugar, soap, greenbacks, postal currency, etc., etc.

The first home we visited was "Auntie Gray's." "Auntie Gray" is a colored saint of nearly eighty years of age. She has followed the Good Shepherd more than fifty years, and to-day is like a "shock of corn fully ripe." Her home is in a small house in a narrow alley, within a stone's throw of millions of wealth. Her room is about nine by twelve feet. Her furniture consists of a bed, two chairs, a chest, a small table, a coal box, and a stove. Every thing is kept clean and in order. Here Auntie lives alone, yet not alone, for the Father, the Word and the Spirit dwell there too. No wonder that she says, "It makes poverty go light." To try her faith a little, I said, as I entered the room, "Auntie, we are going on a missionary tour, and if you had a few pennies for the Lord, we could make good use of them." She looked at us sadly for a minute, and then replied, "The Lord has been good to me, but I have not one penny in the world; but if I had the money for that washing up there (and she pointed to a few towels that she had just washed for a neighbor), I would give the Lord a part of it." My heart was deeply moved. That was the effect of the work of grace upon the heart of a rich poor woman. She had laid all upon the altar. I told her that "the Lord, knowing that she was penniless, had opened the hearts of his children hundreds of miles away, and we had brought the blessing with us." What a blessed season followed as we gave her the bounty. Then we sang, prayed, read God's word, and talked about his faithfulness, and then left with benedictions upon our heads. That was the first surprise party of the day. The mercury was standing at ninety-seven in the shade, but our joy could not be measured.

The next place visited was "Aunt Tena Thompson's," a colored saint of seventy-six years, whose home is on the corner of St. Mary's Alley. Her family consists of herself and a blind son who is fifty-six years old. She is quite infirm, and her son, to get a living, sells matches at the street corners, and does various "odd jobs," but his mother being so sick at present, prevents his being away from her much; so that they have to depend on the charities of the world. When we entered their home no one was in their room, the son being "down cellar," and the mother up stairs. We deposited a bag of flour and other christian God-bless-yous on the table. The blind son soon came into the room, and to try his faith, I asked him if he would "give us some cold meat or bread to give to the poor." He looked a little puzzled for a moment, and then replied, "Dear brother, we have no food in the house, and I was just going out to market to beg something for myself and poor mother." I said, "I think you had better stay at home to-day. The Lord knows that you have need, and he will take care of you." "I know it," he replied; "the Lord has kept us thus far in a wonderful manner." "But do you not fast at times?" said I. "O yes," said he; "we fast a good bit sometimes; but too much fasting is injurious." So thought I. The mother then came tottering down stairs, and as she saw the provision on the table that the Lord had sent her, tears filled her eyes, and joy and thanksgiving filled the hearts of both mother and son. Sister Bussier engaged in prayer, after which we read the precious word, and sang the praises of Him who is the God of the aged and of the poor.

Next to "little Mary's" mother's home. This place has not changed materially since its description, some months ago, given in the Crisis. We got here about noon, and found that the mother and four children had eaten nothing since the day before. We soon piled up the little table, or chest rather, with flour, meal, bread, potatoes, soap, etc., etc., and the sparkling eyes told the feelings of the party.

Then to Maria's mother's, where the same scenes were witnessed. Next to Sr. Annie Washington's, who has five mouths to feed; then to "Blind Susan's," one of the Bedford street converts, who has proved for the last sixteen months that she is the Lord's. Next to Sr. Hilton's, another from the same locality, who has served Jesus for the past thirteen months most faithfully. An incident in my own experience connected with this sister's conversion may not be out of place here.

During a protracted effort, she had been to the anxious bench night after night, but found no peace, until the last night of that meeting. I learned from her prayers that she had confessed and forsaken her sins, and given up all for Jesus, but the peace she desired had not been obtained. That last evening she was crying unto the Lord with one other poor soul who soon found Christ. Sister H. was then alone. Immediately I dropped upon my knees, and called upon the Lord to fill her with the Holy Spirit. I felt that my prayer would be answered, and afterwards I stood before her, and once more called for the blessing; when at once the burden fell from her, and light, joy and peace broke in upon her heart. She leaped for joy, and my heart was so unutterably full that I too leaped for joy. That was the first and only time that I have leaped in a public meeting. Generally my heart gets very large, and I can weep only.

Other families were wretched, and many interesting facts concerning them might be written. It would be a recital of want, woe, oppression, sickness, crime, etc.

Dear brethren and sisters in Lawrence, you have carried joy in one day to the hearts of forty persons. You have given bread to the hungry, medicine to the sick, and money to the needy. Those, who in the morning had not a mouthful of food, suddenly found themselves supplied with enough to last them a week. I told them who sent the money, and many prayers are now going up to heaven in your behalf. In addition to this, you have brought manifold blessings upon the heads of Sr. Bussier, little Maria, and myself.

We have received $2.00 more towards purchasing the "Home." I copy the following from "The Press," of July 16th, of this city:

"Last week the mortality among children was very great, no less a number than one hundred and one having died from cholera infantum. Many of these little ones never breathed any air besides that incident to narrow courts and alleys in densely packed and not very clean neighborhoods, in different locations in our city." etc.

Still the harvest of death goes on. We are made sad daily. My health is excellent. I weigh one hundred and forty pounds, the most that I ever weighed in my life. The heat has been very oppressive for the last two weeks. Yet Satan is as busy as ever. Heat and cold are alike to him, and they are the same with us. We feel that we are doing our last work. Soon there will be no poor ones to visit, no sick to administer to, no dying saints to encourage, no living sinners to warn, no backsliders to entreat. Our labor is solemn. The Lord has opened the way for me to preach to poor fallen ones in the Venereal Ward for Women, at the Philadelphia Alms House, on Wednesday afternoons. I have spoken twice, and the word of the Lord has affected some. Pray that this new effort may be crowned with the blessing of the Lord. This is a sad field of duty. Some of these persons are very young and beautiful, but the world has cast them off; but Jesus died to save them. At first some laughed, but now they weep. Pray for them.

Left Sunday we commenced open air meetings on St. Mary's street. Time, half-past six P. M. This is one of the vilest sections of the city. For an audience we had, besides christians, the classes spoken of in Revelations, who shall be "cast into the lake of fire." Some appeared to be much affected. May the Lord grant that permanent good may result from these efforts. We depend on the word and Spirit of the Lord for success.

Yours looking for Christ,

F. H. BURBANK.

DORCAS MISSION.

We acknowledge in this manner the receipt of a barrel of clothing, books, etc., from Dansville, N. Y., a half-barrelful from Portsmouth, N. H., and $1.00 from a friend in Ct., town not made out; $1.50 from E. T. Haskell, Worcester Co., Mass.; $1.25 from S. H. O., Auburn, N. Y.; and $10.00 from a brother and his companion in Binghampton Ct.; also $1.00 from G. L., of Thomaston, Ct.

"Friends" have just sent $50.00 to aid in clothing and feeding the poor. Contribution from Lawrence, Mass. All have our heartfelt thanks and our prayers. The Lord blesses us continually, and we find it to be blessed to trust in him. Pray for us, that we may ever abound in the work of the Lord.

Eld. H. L. Hastings has sent us at his own charges 43,000 pages of tracts, value $43.00, for distribution among the poor. The Lord will pay him. His tracts are excellent for our missionary labors, and we trust that the Lord will furnish him with funds, so that we may be fully supplied. The colored people here are delighted with them.

Yours, etc., in the highways,

F. H. BURBANK.

BRO. E. BARROW, Woodhull, N. Y., writes: "I thank God for what I have received in the past few months through your paper. I love the precious truth of God. I belong to the M. E. Church; but O how blind it is. How little truth we have had. I think there are many here thirsting for the word of God."

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

Dear Sisters scattered abroad:—Please remember that our Female Union Missionary Association will hold its annual meeting for business at this great gathering. It is requested that all our sisters, who are laboring as missionaries, should either come or send in their reports to this meeting. Let us see, sisters, what has been done the past year; how many meetings you have held; how many have professed conversion; how many religious visits to families, and tracts distributed. From the letters that I have received, I know there has been a great work done, and I would like to see you all, or as many as possible, together at this meeting. We need each other's sympathy and social conversation to encourage each other.

I am waiting with great patience for this campmeeting; for I expect it will be a missionary meeting, and we shall hear from the different missions East, West, North and South, and it will do us all good to hear from each other. I have received letters from a great many that I have never seen in the flesh, but hope to see them at this meeting.

Come, sisters, one and all, and let us have a good time in our social meetings this summer. Let us lay aside every idea but to bring souls to Christ, and to build up believers. Our business meetings will be held from one to three o'clock on Thursday and Friday, when the reports will be read before the meetings. We expect our brethren to take part with us,—all those that love mission work.

I expect some of our young converts at this meeting. They are coming to hear more about the blessed truth of Jesus' soon coming, and to be buried with Christ in baptism. May the good Lord bless them.

I would like to see the sisters, and learn who they are as early as possible, when they arrive on the ground. You will find me at Bro. Hastings' Pilgrim Tent.

Now, sisters, remember our covenant of prayer at twelve o'clock every day, that the Lord will go with us, and be with us, and lead all our meetings, and then we shall do good and get good.

Any of the sisters sending me their reports for this meeting, must do so before the 15th of August, as I have so many things to arrange before I leave the city, that I shall be very much hurried. Please don't neglect writing,—all that cannot attend.

Once more we say, come, and come all, to Wilbraham campmeeting, and you will enjoy it better for a week than any other place this side of the kingdom.

Correspondence.

From Bro. W. H. Fisher.

BRO. GRANT:—The warm month of July finds me laboring in the cause of Christ in Conn.; which cause I love, and it lies nearest to my heart of any thing on earth. As is usually the case at this season of the year, especially in a farming community, the minds of the people are deeply engrossed in the things and cares of this world. Yet there are some in this region that are just as earnest in the cause, and labor for the salvation of the perishing just as hard this warm weather as in cool. Such christians are a blessing to any community. You always know where to find them. They are of the same stamp as Paul, rejoicing in the Lord always.

Since my last return to this State, I have labored principally in Yalesville and Cheshire St. Yalesville is a pleasant little manufacturing village, situated on the banks of the Quinipiac river, and on the line of the Springfield, Hartford, and New Haven R. R., in the town of Wallingford. There is a little band of dear brethren and sisters here that are struggling to overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil, and gain an abundant entrance into the kingdom. The Lord is blessing them in their efforts. We have had some heavenly sittings together with them. Two meetings in particular, Thurs. evening June 28th, and Sunday eve. July 1st. There was heard the joyful shout of the saints, blending together with the voice of weeping and songs of praise. We felt it good to be there. May the good Lord still continue to bless them.

Part of the day, July 1st, we spent on Wallingford North Farms, with Bro. Hitchcock, who preaches here regularly every two weeks. It was blessed indeed to listen to the words of divine truth, as they fell from his lips. He has labored long and faithfully with this people, and has had the pleasure of seeing the word of God prosper in his hands, by souls being brought into the fold of Jesus. May the rich blessing of God rest upon him.

The cause on Cheshire St. is not quite so prosperous as it was three months ago; yet there are a few here that are running for the prize, and striving for the kingdom.

Wednesday, July 4th, we had a tent meeting near Bro. Dudley's, in Wallingford. There were between one and two hundred present. It was the first time we ever spent the fourth of July in this way. We found it to be a much better way than the way the world spend it. We learn there has been some interest awakened, as a result of the meeting, and I pray it may continue. Pray for us. Yours in hope of eternal life,

Cheshire, Conn. WM. H. FISHER.

From Sr. J. E. Baldwin.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—It is with a sense of my weakness and unworthiness that I attempt to write a few lines for the Crisis. There are various subjects which have rested upon my mind with considerable weight. I have felt sometimes that it was my duty to write some of my feelings. I have felt a burden for the churches, when I see them running into pride, and following the fashions of the world, when the apostle says, "Be not conformed to this world." My heart is pained when I see those who profess to be followers of Christ, and especially those who are looking for his appearing, trying to look like the world's people. My dear sisters, will you think of what I now write, and the next time you take your embroidery, or fancy work, will you stop and ask yourself this question: Am I spending my time as I shall wish I had done when I stand before God in judgment? When we make up our minds to serve God, do we not give our time, talents, money, and all we have and are to him? Then let us strive to make good use of our time and talents, so that it may be said unto us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Another wrong is, speaking evil one of another. O how much evil comes from trifling and backbiting our brethren and sisters. How quickly the Spirit of God is grieved, when we try to destroy the confidence that others have in their friends. Now let us watch and pray, and try to so order our speech, and bridle our tongues, that when we mingle with the world's people, that if we do not say anything to do good, we may say no evil. But do not think while you read this, that I am free from all these temptations. No, I feel to take this exhortation to myself; and feel to ask the Lord to give me grace to overcome. Your sister, striving to gain the rest that remains for the people of God. JULIA E. BALDWIN.

East Litchfield, Conn.

From Sr. M. C. Whitaker.

To the Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—Truly the Lord is good, and doeth good continually. His mercy endureth forever. Praise ye the Lord. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy." How beautiful are the words of the Psalmist, when we realize the goodness of God toward all his children. I can say for one, that I find him a present help in every time of need. When called to pass through trials and temptations, we have the blessed promise that he will deliver us out of them all. O, how good the Lord has been to me; one so unworthy, so frail as I.

It has been my lot for a year back to pass through trials and persecutions, yet the Lord has been with me. I can say with one of old, "The mouth of the wicked, and the mouth of the deceitful are opened against me; they have spoken against me with a lying tongue. They compassed me about also with words of hatred; and fought against me without a cause. . . . They have rewarded me evil for good"; "but I give myself unto prayer." Glory to God. My trust is in him, who doeth all things well. I do not ask or expect the applause of this world, nor of cold-hearted professors. If I can but have the smile and approbation of my heavenly Father, it is all I want.

I live where we have but little preaching (of the right stamp), but we keep up two weekly prayer meetings, which are a great help to us. By the grace of God helping me, I will try to meet you all where meetings ne'er break up, and Sabbaths never end.

Your unworthy sister, bound for the kingdom, MARY C. WHITAKER.

Newfane, Vt.

P. S.—Since penning the above, Bro. Hadlock has been here and held one meeting the fourth of July. We had a blessed good time. One started anew for the kingdom. Bless the Lord, he will work in spite of opposition. Glory be to his name. May the Lord bless Bro. H., is my prayer. M. C. W.

From Bro. H. Bailey.

BRO. GRANT:—I am happy to inform you that Sr. Lucy R. Phetteplace (formerly Sr. Otis), has been holding meetings in Brewster's, N. Y., for three weeks, with good success. A fair congregation of attentive listeners and seekers for the truth have attended the meetings. One lady, belonging to the Methodist Church, has become satisfied that we have the truth, and has been circulating tracts among the Methodists in Brewster's, who received some reproof for having confessed her faith in our views, as it is in Christ. She works boldly, and gave me two dollars to send to you for tracts to distribute among her friends in another town, where she formerly resided, and wishes Sr. Phetteplace to go into the Methodist Church in the adjoining town to preach, which she promises to do in the fall should the Lord permit. Your brother in Christ, H. BAILEY.

Obituaries.

AIKEN. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Grover, Vt., on the morning of July 8th, after a very distressing illness of only a few days, Bro. J. W. Aiken, aged seventy-four years.

It becomes my duty to record the death of another member of our heavenly Father's family. Bro. and Sr. Aiken embraced the "blessed hope" under the faithful labors of Bro. I. H. Shipman, at Hardwick, Vt. (where they then resided), and were baptized by him at the campmeeting at Cabot, in 1844.

In 1852, they moved to Glover Village, where were few, if any, of like precious faith. For fourteen years they have had light in their dwelling, and many a weary pilgrim has found a welcome home beneath their roof. Bro. A.'s faith and hope were firm unto the end. He felt like singing the praise of God upon the bed of death; and comforted his weeping companion with those words,—"We shall meet again in a few days, never more to be parted." May the blessing of God rest upon our bereft sister, until she shall meet her companion resurrected from the grave.

The writer attended the funeral service at the church in G., on the 9th, assisted by Rev. Mr. Perkins and N. M. Scott. Text,—"For what is our hope?" N. WHEELER.

Herald please copy.

SCHOOLCRAFT. Died at Oxford, C. E., June 30th, 1866, after an illness of about six months, Bro. Anthony Schoolcraft, aged sixty years.

Bro. Schoolcraft was a lover of God and good men. For many years religion with him was no mystery; but a living, active principle. The hope of soon seeing Jesus, which his sincere heart cherished, grew firmer as he neared the end. His testimony to an unswerving faith and hope in Christ on his dying bed, was very gratifying to the writer, who visited him a short time before his death. He leaves a wife, three sons, six daughters, two brothers, and one sister to mourn his loss. A sermon was delivered by the writer, from Acts 26: 8.

JOHN CHAPMAN.

FLETCHER. Died in Rome, Me., Jan. 8th, 1866, Adella M., youngest daughter of John and Cynthia Fletcher, aged thirteen years and six months.

This is the second time, within the past few months, that death has entered the family circle and borne away one of its brightest flowers. After a protracted illness of some twenty-four days, of typhoid fever, the lovely girl fell asleep in Jesus, to await the resurrection morning, when she, with the other sister, will come again from the enemy's land, no more to sicken and die. May the Lord hasten the glad day. W. H. BLAISDELL.

BONNEY. Died in Hartford, June 19th, 1866, Bathsheba H., wife of Daniel S. Bonney, aged thirty-two years, two months.

Sister Bonney sleeps in hope of a better resurrection. Her illness was protracted and distressing, but she endured it with christian patience. An affectionate husband and children mourn her loss, but not without hope.

"Asleep in Jesus, peaceful rest,
Whose waking is supremely blest."

L. L. HOWARD.

HANSCOM. Died in Wayne, Me., June 17th, Bro. D. M. Hanscom, aged forty years.

It is with sadness that I record the death of Bro. Hanscom. He died in peace, after nearly four months of great suffering. He closed his eyes with the same blessed hope of soon awaking in the Master's likeness that he has preached to others. We can say in the language of the poet, "Servant of God, well done."

Since 1854, he has been constantly engaged in the work of the gospel. No man among us ever labored more earnestly to spread the cause of truth. He leaves a wife and two promising little boys to mourn his loss. We have laid him away in a beautiful little pine grove, in the town of Livermore, there to rest till the Master comes.

Victorious his fall, he will rise as he fell,
With Jesus, his Master, in glory to dwell;
He will join the redeemed when they reach the bright coast,
For he fell in the battle, he died at his post.

Havre July 8th, Brest 7th.

The Italians have crossed the Po.

Paris papers of the 7th state that the Augsburg Gazette says Benedek has demanded 30,000 reinforcements. The same paper says there is a report that the Archduke Albert has been appointed to supersede Benedek.

The fortifications of Vienna were being increased and 600 guns are now in position.

A Prussian army, has entered Bavaria.

The Austrians have entirely evacuated Lombardy and retired across the Mincio.

The Tyrolese priests are setting the peasants against Garibaldi, by proclaiming his force as bandits and denouncing him as antichrist.

Garibaldi has 5000 men in his command, well-armed but not well equipped. His headquarters are at Latona.

The battle of the 3d inst. lasted twelve hours, the Austrians maintaining their position obstinately for six hours. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon a strong position at Bristritz was carried by assault, after which they were rapidly driven from other positions. The whole Austrian army was in full retreat in the evening.

The Austrians have evacuated Materzello and Gafarro, and they would be occupied by Garibaldi.

A Milan dispatch of the 5th says a corps of the Bavarian army had entered the Austrian Tyrol and that the Austrians have abandoned all their positions on the right bank of the Mincio.

Amiens was being decimated by the cholera.

King Victor Emmanuel has not acceded to the armistice proposed through France. He alleges as a reason that he has to consult with his ally, the King of Prussia. In consequence, the Italian government has been advised that it will have to cease immediately every act of hostility against Venetia, it being French territory.

A French commissioner is going at once to Venice to assume its government in the name of the Emperor. Orders have been issued to the French squadron in the Mediterranean immediately to repair to Venice, and hoist the French flag instead of the Austrian upon all the fortified posts on the Venetian coast.

The cession of Venice to France is complete and definite and without any other condition on the part of Austria except to withdraw the guns and all munitions of war in fortified places within forty-eight hours. The whole of Venetia will be French territory, and it will depend upon the good will of France either to keep or to part with it.

It is the intention of Austria to continue the war against Prussia if she perseveres in her pretensions as asserted in her project of Federal reform communicated to the governments of northern Germany. The Austrian Emperor declares his resolution to transfer his capital to Pesth should he be unable to defend Vienna, and to call to arms the whole population of his States.

"Monadnock" writes to the New York Times as follows:

"The whole of the 4th of July the Emperor sat by his telegraph wire in the Tuileries, and till very far in the night, talking with Berlin, Vienna and Florence. Alone, with only his telegraphic operator, he settled, by direct communication with the Emperor of Austria, after midnight, the details of the transfer of Venetia. Thus the unfinished work of the liberal Count Cavour is finished by the illiberal Count Bismarck. Venetia is liberated by a German battle on the soil of Bohemia! Who would have dared to predict such an event at the moment of the death of Cavour?"

Liverpool, July 8. The Paris Temps announces that Prussia and Italy have accepted an armistice on the following conditions: Prussia is to retain her present possessions and the troops to be supported by the countries occupied. Austria is not to increase her armies in the field. Italy is to occupy one fortress in the Quadrilateral. Italy in reply demanded the occupation of two fortresses in the Quadrilateral.

In commercial circles the Moniteur's announcement of the cession of Venetia and the mediation of Napoleon was accepted as almost conclusive evidence of peace. The excitement in the London Stock Exchange on the 5th was great. On the 6th these sanguine hopes were gradually melting away. The Minister of Police of Berlin announced that the proposals for an armistice presented by Gen. Gablens had been declined.

The semi-official Nord Deutche Allemeure Zeitung says the King, Bismark and other Ministers are sufficient guaranties that no conditions will be acceded to which do not satisfy the claims of Prussia and the sacrifices made to sustain them.

Intelligence from the Venetian frontier states that the Austrians are strengthening their force at Rovigor.

It is stated that a portion of Austrian forces in Venetia have been ordered North.

There has been a severe engagement between the Prussians and Bavarians near Darmbach in Saxe-Weiner. The latter were repulsed, and the Prussians occupied Darmbach in force. The Prussians captured eight positions, and were advancing victoriously.

The Austrian prisoners taken in the battle of the 3d inst. are estimated at 20,000, and 116 guns were captured. The losses sustained by the first Prussian army was considerable. Those of the second were comparatively small.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Southampton, July 10th.

The Great Eastern was safely anchored and had finished coaling. The rest of the cable was expected to arrive hourly. The condition of the cable on board is tested night and day and improved daily since the immersion under the water in the tanks, and is now considered electrically perfect. The shore end was successfully laid and tests perfect. The W. Corry was paying out the cable. Splicing the main cable to the shore end commences on the 11th. All is going on well. The 1865 cable has been tested and is as perfect as when laid.

The proportion of wounded in the late battles is eight Austrians to one Prussian.

The Moniteur says negotiations between the belligerents were progressing favorably. There is no doubt that an armistice will be agreed to on conditions.

It is rumored that the French squadron has been ordered to Venice. Toulon authorities have been ordered to prepare ten steamers, frigates and corvettes.

The Russian official journal cautions Prussia to remember that there are other strong and united powers in Europe interested in the balance of European power.

The Prussians have made Parderbitz their headquarters. Prague has been abandoned, and it is expected that the Prussians will seize it.

The Italians have been severely beaten by the Austrians. Borgeoforte and Montesuello had been repulsed five times.

Benedek has been relieved from the command of the Austrian army.

La Patrie says the reply of the King of Prussia thanks Napoleon cordially, and says he will send instructions to the Prussian Minister without delay. The King concludes: "I have sent a dispatch to Baron Goetz, empowering him to settle the condition of an armistice, which can only be concluded in concert with the King of Italy."

Italy has laid down as the condition of her acceptance of the armistice, the immediate occupation by her forces of two fortresses of the Quadrilateral.

Liverpool 14th, Queenstown 15th.

The Atlantic Telegraph fleet arrived off Valentia on the 13th. The cable was successfully spliced to the shore end and the Great Eastern commenced paying out. The signals through the whole cable were perfect.

The accounts as to the progress of French mediation are conflicting. Nothing authentic has transpired. The threatened armed intervention of France is not confirmed, but French vessels have gone to Venetia.

It is reported that Prussia has declined the armistice.

The French journals declare that France, Prussia and Italy have come to an arrangement upon the proposals to be made to Austria. They are upon the basis that Austria is to be excluded from the Germanic Confederation.

Benedek's army was rapidly accumulating. On the 11th his force was computed at 150,000, exclusive of cavalry and artillery, and was daily increasing.

The London Globe regards the Prussians as within a week or ten days of Vienna.

London, July 15. The Vienna Presse of the 14th says that the proposed mediation of Napoleon is ended for the present, and Austria must trust to her own strength and resources. She has resolved to make the most strenuous exertions to maintain her position as a great power.

DOMESTIC.

New York, July 18. Yesterday was the hottest day ever known in this city. The thermometer stood at 104 in the shade. There were 43 cases of sunstroke, 23 of which proved fatal. There were nine fatal cases out of 16 in Brooklyn.

A severe drouth prevails in the neighborhood of Petersburg, Va.

July 19. The total number of cases of sunstroke this summer is 258, of which 135 proved fatal.

New York, July 20. The Commercial says facts show conclusively that the cholera is now raging in certain portions of the city. It is beyond doubt that the epidemic is pursuing its incipient steps, beginning in regions most favorably disposed for its development. The facts relative to the number of cases on Hart's Island are deemed so appalling that publicity is denied. Surgeon Calhoun of that post has died of cholera, and an able corps of physicians have been sent there, and also to Governor's Island. Seven hundred recruits who were recently sent from Hart's Island for the army in Georgia had the cholera break out among them before reaching Savannah, three dying before arriving. Several additional cases are reported in this city to-day.

July 17. It is positively stated that Mr. Seward will tender his resignation, but that he may be requested to remain.

Hon. Freeman Clark, Comptroller of the currency, has tendered his resignation, to take effect on the 24th inst.

Albany, July 18. A detachment of the 10th regiment left here this morning accompanied by the sheriff, for the scene of the anti-rent troubles. On arriving at Knowersville, W. S. Church, the chief party interested, and one of the Deputy Sheriffs, were arrested by a constable on charge of an assault, taken six miles to a magistrate and bailed.

Some of the parties who resisted the Sheriff yesterday were arrested by detectives. On reaching the house where the first process was resisted it was found barricaded. Several of the crowd fled and were fired at, but without effect, and six additional arrests were made.

The house had been broken open and the furniture removed into the road and soldiers quartered there. The troops to-morrow will proceed to execute further processes. On the march the inhabitants refused to give the soldiers water to drink.

July 21. The troops still remain encamped in the anti-rent district, several anti-renters intimating a readiness to settle the demands.

New York, July 22. The cholera continues increasing in this city and in Brooklyn. On the islands a healthier state of affairs was reported yesterday. There were ten cases of cholera officially reported in this city and the same number in Brooklyn. Numerous other cases were reported, but not confirmed. Orders have been issued to prepare the Battery barracks for the reception of cholera patients. A meeting of the citizens is to be held this evening to protest against it.

July 23. The number of confirmed cases of cholera yesterday was 14. The epidemic is increasing on Governor's Island. There were two deaths yesterday and more than the usual number of cases. Of 24 cases on the island all were boys from 16 to 20 years of age. On Hart's Island the average number of cases is from 20 to 30 daily with the proportion of 10 to 15 per cent of deaths.

There were five new cases in Brooklyn yesterday. A cholera hospital has been established in that city in the infected district.

THE WEATHER.—From all quarters come reports of excessively hot weather, country towns faring no better than the cities. At Worcester the mercury rose to 95 in the coolest places. At Taunton 105, New Bedford 97, Fall River 100, Providence 97, Woonsocket 100, Springfield 100.—Boston Journal.

Changed.

Notice is hereby given, that the place for holding the quarterly conference of the Northern Ohio Churches, for August 25th and 26th, commencing at 2 o'clock P. M., of the 25th, will be Norwalk, instead of Berlin, as announced in Crisis of July 4th. Consequently, King will be in Norwalk, and Stetson in Berlin on Aug. 12th.

G. W. STETSON, P. C.

Tent Meeting.

A tent meeting will be held in Wallingford, Ct., on Sunday, Aug. 12th. Subject,—the time of the coming of our blessed Lord. We hope to see a general gathering at this meeting to bear on the above subject. A. DECKER.

Universalism.

Having formerly had seven years experience in Universalism, thereby knowing some of its workings, I desire to do what little I can in battling against this great error. I shall be glad to speak on that subject wherever doors may be opened, and, at the same time, circulate that unanswerable argument against Universalism,—"Universalism Exposed from the Inner Temple," now issued in tract form by the Adv. Chr. Pub. Society.

Address W. C. STONE, Crisis Office, Boston.

For the World's Crisis.

A SACRIFICE.

To thee, O God, to thee, to thee,
A sacrifice I fain would be,
Would yield myself into thy hands,
And glad obey all thy commands,

My motives pure, my conscience clear,
And sprinkled from tormenting fear;
That thou hast loved me is the cause
Why I would now obey thy laws.

With thy sweet Spirit let my mind
And life and peace be close entwined;
Take from my heart carnality,
And let me live from hence to thee.

In close confinement let each thought
By thy sufficient grace be brought,
My every anxious care be still,
Save but to do thy holy will.

However dark the clouds that rise,
Thy hand there let me recognize;
As glad to suffer let me be,
As e'er I am to reign with thee.

Uphold by thee and by thy grace,
Ne'er let me cease to run the race,
For Abram's faith let me contend,
And lo! the promise's at the end.

All evil help me now withstand,
And then at last at thy right hand
Grant me a place on Canaan's shore,
My conflict done, my warfare o'er;

O, let me range those fields of light,
In robes by Jesus' blood made white;
There in thy presence let me dwell,
While loud hosannahs round thee swell.

For the World's Crisis.

"ART THOU THE KING OF THE JEWS?"—John 18: 33.

"Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews; but now is my kingdom not from hence" (Jno. 18: 36); from this place forward. "But now [the present time or age] we see not yet all things put under him; but we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor [not crowned king]; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings."—Heb. 2: 8–10. "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace [favor] that should come unto you, . . . when it [the prophetic spirit] testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you; . . . wherefore, gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace [the salvation of your souls, v. 9] that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ."—1 Pet. 1: 10, 13.

"For we have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; but were eye witnesses of his majesty."—2 Pet. 1: 16. His kingship, his kingly glory, and this majesterial power and glory, Peter here places at his coming. "When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power; but ye shall receive power." What power? The same which the Father hath reserved to himself concerning the times and seasons. When shall we receive this power? "After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."—Acts 1: 6–8. "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth, . . . and he will show you things to come."—John 16: 13. And so Paul testifies in 1 Thess. 5: 1, 2, 4. "But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you." Why not, Paul? "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night [to the wicked]; but ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief."

"And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world [oikoumene—habitable] for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."—Matt. 24: 14. Then shall the end of what come? "Why, of Jerusalem and of the Jewish polity," some man may say, and many men do say; but to this exception is taken; for if "the end" refer to the destruction of Jerusalem, then, why bring that other quotation, so ready in every unbeliever's mouth, written in Mark 13: 32: "But of that day and hour knoweth no man," etc.? for Peter says it is at "the end" that we are to receive the "salvation of our souls," and that was not at the destruction of Jerusalem. Besides they did know when Jerusalem was to be desolated, and fled to Pella, for the Savior informed them that they should know the approximation of that event of its being surrounded by armies. Luke 21: 20, 21. So it could not refer to Jerusalem's destruction by Titus; for the city was not only to fall with great distress in the land, and wrath upon the Jewish people, who were to fall by the edge of the sword, and be led away captive into all nations; but Jerusalem was to be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled; which accords with Christ's answer to the Pharisees, Luke 17: 20, when they demanded of him as to when the kingdom of God should come. And "he answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation; neither shall they say, lo here, or, lo there, for behold the kingdom of God is within you."

We feel inclined to digress a little, in order to make a point or two here. The Pharisees were the straitest sect of the Jews' religion. Being exceedingly zealous, they were very exact and precise in relation to all the lesser details of the law, as well as being scrupulously critical in all their observations in relation to any thing that had the remotest reference to the fulfillment of the Abrahamic covenant; thus abrogating to themselves the power and ability to determine all vexed questions. They in their pride of heart, and overweening self-conceit, came to Jesus, not to learn of him, but to bring his teachings into contempt; and his answer not only contains a gentle rebuke, but a cutting sarcasm on their assumed wisdom. The kingdom of God is not discerned by scrupulous observation, neither can they say, look here, or see there, notwithstanding the "Royal Majesty is among you." This language was addressed to those whom John styled a "generation of vipers"; and yet, men who have been through a "theological course" have purchased to themselves "a good degree" (?); have had hands laid upon them, and are duly set apart as guides to the blind, lights of those that are in darkness, instructors of the foolish, and teachers of babes; having the form of knowledge, and the form of the truth, quote this twenty-first verse of the seventeenth chapter of Luke as authority from the Lord Jesus Christ, to prove that the kingdom of God is set up within us, in the hearts of believers. Just as if the Savior told the children of the devil that "the kingdom of God" was within them! just as if he taught that the Pharisees were believers in the gospel of the Son of God! Preposterous! "How the gold becomes dim."

Coopersville, N. Y. G. W. STETSON.

For the World's Crisis.

LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE.

We who are believers in the second coming of Christ, are confidently assured that the light which Jesus Christ brought into the world has shone in upon our understanding, bringing us from the darkness of error to the marvellous light of the gospel. We believe, also, that we have been so blessed by God as to be enabled, through his abundant grace, to know the true light; even that light which shineth brighter and brighter unto the perfect day; that the grace of God is given us in such a measure, that we should proclaim to the world the unsearchable riches of Christ. This being the case, the command of the Savior is binding upon us to let our light shine, and so shine, that the world may see our good works, and glorify our Father in heaven.

Now the question arises, how can we let our light shine according to the command of the Redeemer? I answer, by obeying the precepts of the gospel. We must openly profess our faith in the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." And having professed our faith in this glorious doctrine, we should be careful and walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called; for it will be useless for us to let our light shine, unless we let it so shine that all may see that we are followers of the crucified Redeemer. How lamentable it is, that we see so many going contrary to this glorious light, indulging themselves in sin.

I always shudder when I hear any one profane the name of God, because I know that he is disobeying a holy law, the law of a just God; and bringing upon himself swift destruction. Dear christians, I beseech you to beware of those who trifle with so holy a faith. Let us turn from them, and let our light so shine that all those who are inquiring the way to Zion may see our good works, and be influenced to seek after the truth where it may be found; and seeking, they may find; and having found the truth, be filled with joy, and glorify their Father who is in heaven; and that the veil that has been spread over their eyes may be removed; and the darkness that had gathered between them and their Maker be vanished before the glorious light of truth; and instead of beholding a God of wrath, revenge, and cruelty, behold him as he is,—a God of justice, mercy, and love.

My beloved who believe in the second coming of Christ, we have a great work to do. Let us not be drones in our Master's vineyard, but faithful workmen. Let us strive evermore to let our light shine for the glory of God, that at Christ's coming to judge the earth, we may be counted worthy to sit down in his glorious kingdom, which, according to prophecy, is soon to be set up here on the earth. Now, in consideration of this solemn and interesting subject, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us," that we may be made heirs of Christ's kingdom, where peace and joy shall ever dwell. J. ELKINS.

A TROUBLED WORLD.

In view of the iniquity which now abounds throughout the world, it is not to be wondered at that intelligent, thinking men should make up their minds that we are living in a time pregnant with important events. Said a preacher of some note, and whose body is now turning to dust, "I believe that between this and the year 1870, there will be a very critical period in the earth's history. I look forward sometimes with hope, but generally with fearfulness."

An intelligent lady remarked, "I believe that you Advent folks are right; but I have no heart in the matter; I think that the time is near when I and my family will all perish together."

Another, in view of the moral darkness which is prevailing and increasing, said, "I think those who are in their graves are the best situated." Professed ministers of the gospel (some of them) are getting into trouble in consequence of the low state of religion. "Two thirds of the members of my church," says a pastor, "are honorary members. They don't come to prayer-meetings; they do not attend Sunday-school; they don't add to the life of the church; they are but passengers on the gospel ship; they bear no burdens, add no strength; their names are on our books; they are honorary members."

The Wisconsin Puritan says: "Certain children of the devil, dressed in christian clothes, are trying to join the churches. One of these is the card table, which, it is insisted, is perfectly harmless if only used without stakes. Another is small domestic billiard-tables. Another still, is domestic wine. And still another, is parlor dancing, and now and then a public ball."

The masses are watching the course of the fallen churches, and the worldly-mindedness and inconsistent walk and conversation of the membership is driving them farther and further from salvation, and many are troubled, not knowing which way to look for a remedy.

Another cause for trouble, is the degeneracy of the youth. A Boston paper says, "The race of Puritans has pretty much passed away, and with them the manners, and to a great degree, the morals of their day. I do not believe the young generation is as good as the preceding one; I am certain that the boys and young men of to-day have more vices, less regard for decency, and are more unrefined than those of the preceding generation."

The progress of the Papacy is another cause of trouble with many. The paper above referred to says that Bishop Hoskins of that city was one of the committee to determine upon the wants of the theological department of the public library, and adds, "Bostonians need not a long memory to go back to the time when a cross was a sure sign of a Romish institution, but now the symbol of redemption crowns alike the Unitarian, Methodist, and the Orthodox churches: and the Sisters of Charity depend very largely upon Protestants for their support."

The London Patriot says, "A strong petition has been sent from England to the Pope of Rome, asking for a restoration of communion between the two churches, and that people may smile at such attempts, but parties putting them forth are in earnest, and are men of settled purpose."

Things in the natural and moral world are a source of trouble. The Cincinnati Times has, under the head of "Great Times," the following:—"Cholera in Italy and France, Trichinæ in Germany, and Rhinderpest and Sheep plague in Russia, Holland, and England; fatal miasmatic chills among the birds of Italy; epidemic among the oysters on the French coast, and 'suspended animation' of eleven American States, to say nothing about Fenianism." He might add, Increasing intemperance, awful profanity, abounding licentiousness. Crimes increasing of every kind, and of the blackest dye. The progress of Spiritualism, making the fallen churches "a hold of foul spirits and cage of unclean birds."

In view of these things, together with the vast preparation for war among the nations, and increasing perplexity among them, is it strange that men's hearts are failing them for fear of those things which are coming upon the earth?—Review & Herald.

THE LORD IS GOOD.

Great and holy is the Lord,
In him I put my trust;
I love each hour to read his word,
For he has taught me thus.

He's been with me through many trials,
He's spared my worthless life;
And oft when I was very faint,
He helped me through the strife.

The lofty and the humble too,
May come to him and live;
He's merciful, he's kind and true,
And life he'll freely give.

THE HEBREW SH'EOL HELL.

A most powerful—and to the priests, profitable—association of ideas, has been connected with the word HELL. By means of this association, they operate upon the fears of the fearful, and render them mental slaves and cowards, who dare not think for themselves, but accept their opinions vicarially and pastorially. Thus the Divine government becomes frightfully misrepresented, christianity maligned, and infidelity engendered.

The vulgar, physical, and contradictory notions attached to the word "hell"—as a place gleaming with flame yet utterly dark! where bodies and immortal souls are made to suffer misery without disorganization, injury or death!—find, indeed a partial correspondence in Milton's Paradise Lost, but none at all in the Jewish Scriptures. The slightest collation of texts will show, that men have no authority for transferring the modern-made meaning of the fire hell, with its pains and penalties, to the one Hebrew word, trifoldly, translated grave, pit, and hell.

Sh'eol means something dug or hollowed out—literally shooled or shoveled—i. e. a pit or grave—what is grooved or grubbed out. Hence also, what is covered—a shealing or "hovel"—a hole or hollow. All these words are kindred. In the Bible it never once stands for a place of torment. The modern quibble that the place hell is a figure for the state hell, is pure moon-shine. A "state" implies a "place;" and has, and can have no more meaning, or sense, than the taste of a tart without either tart or taster!

When Sh'eol is personalized, or localized, it is always represented as within the present earth, and, in regard to time, during, or at the boundary of this mortal life. In two or three texts it is used antithetically with Shamem, "heavens"—i. e. the upper parts of the air, or the heights above, in contrast to the lower parts of the earth, or the depth beneath; but it is not in one solitary instance put as a place of roasting in opposition to one of rest—or as a place of suffering in opposition to one of bliss. The ancient Hebrews were complete strangers to the abominable conceptions of the modern hell-mongers.—Dr. Lees.

WHY ARE NOT REVIVAL EFFORTS MORE SUCCESSFUL?

The fault is sometimes in the manner in which the minister discharges his duty. He may be perfectly honest and sincere, and think he is doing the very best that can be done to promote a revival, yet through faults of his manner of doing his duty hinder it. He may hinder the work of God by his manner of preaching; his style perhaps is dull, dry, and uninteresting, yet he considers it sound, true, and faithful. It is just as some venerable minister preaches for whom he has the highest respect. But still dullness of style will have its effect on the minds of the people. It thins out his congregation; it promotes sleep in the front pews, and whisper and titter in the galleries. At any rate, it is an obstacle in the way of a revival. It will require a strong influence to overcome it and convert sinners while it remains in the way.

Again, ministers hinder revivals by being too formal. People are altogether too much inclined to fall into a regular routine of church going and religious exercises, that they go round and round in always treading in the same track, without thought or emotion. Ministers sometimes become so formal as to be nearly useless, so far as making an impression on the minds of sinners is concerned, by merely yielding to the tastes of their members. This thing should be done so and so; that should be done in that way, etc., till every thing said and done in the church has assumed such a fossilized condition as to give not the least intimation of the existence of life. Such a state of things in a church will sufficiently account for the want of success of any effort to promote a revival.

Again, ministers hinder a revival by a too distant and quasi respectful air and manner in their preaching and intercourse with their people. It is true that sometimes the people require just this kind of manners in their minister; but it is better to disregard their notion of propriety than by yielding to it to fail of the conversion of sinners. The human mind cannot be influenced for good without coming in contact with it. Ministers should avoid offensive familiarity of course, yet speak kindly, plainly, and right to the point with their people. In general I think ministers would do better to preach extemporaneously, i. e., in language and manner, not in thought. Well studied thoughts and an off-hand manner, talking to the people with conversational freedom, is more acceptable and does infinitely more good than the stiff, unsympathetic dignity of some of our pulpits.

Again, ministers hinder revivals by taking up too much of the time in prayer and conference meetings. If a minister can pray and speak ever so well, he has no right to monopolize all the time. The spirit and interest of a meeting depend very much on getting the members engaged in it. As revival efforts are frequently carried on, nobody but the minister seems to have anything to do. In such cases a failure is not to be wondered at.

Revival efforts often fail for want of friendly invitations given by the members of the church to sinners to attend the meetings. It is true, an invitation is not necessary to inform them that it is their privilege to attend the meetings. Yet a friendly word spoken has its influence. It often happens that a person comes to a meeting in consequence of an insignificant word spoken in kindness, who would not have come without it. He feels differently when he is there in consequence of it, and through that state of feeling, the gospel takes effect and he is converted. Now, it is often the case that no member of the church says anything to his neighbor about the meeting. The members themselves go as though it was a kind of private matter of theirs. No impression is made on the minds of sinners. There is nothing to break in upon the worldly influences which carry them along in their sins. This is not the course which politicians pursue. They make use of every influence in their power to induce their neighbors to attend their meetings. Their success in making proselytes to their views depends much upon this kind of social frankness. Now where this is lacking in the church, is it anything strange that revival efforts should fail?—Religious News Letter.

"YOUR SLAVE FOREVER."

An English gentleman was at one time a passenger in a Turkish vessel. During the voyage his attention was attracted to an intelligent and pleasing, but very sad young Mussulman on board. On becoming acquainted with him he learned some facts concerning him which deeply touched his sympathies. He found that he was a slave, and belonged to the captain of the vessel. He had been born free, and was rich, but had been made a captive in war; and his sad misfortunes, and the gloomy destiny before him, were so weighing down his spirits, that he was almost miserable, under the galling yoke.

The English gentleman secretly resolved to release him. So he cautiously inquired of the captain the value he set upon his slave. Finding the price much higher than he expected to pay, he abandoned the plan. But every day during the voyage his affection for the young Mussulman so increased, that at last he decided to offer the price named. The offer was accepted.

The slave overheard the conversation between the captain and the Englishman, and supposing he was buying him for his own use, to retain him in bondage, he started up, and sprang forward with his eyes full of fire, and his lips trembling in indignation, and cried out in a burning rage:

"Do you call yourself a free-born Briton, and an enemy to slavery wherever it exists, and yet purchase me? Have I not as much right to my freedom as you have to yours?"

He was about proceeding in this strain, when the English gentleman turned towards him and gently said:

I have bought you to set you free."

In an instant the angry passions all died in the Mussulman's face. Bursting into tears, he fell down at the feet of his deliverer, and clasping his knees, he exclaimed:

"You have taken my heart captive! I am your slave forever!"

This is what Jesus Christ has done for us. We were all of us Satan's slaves, condemned to serve sin all our lives, and at last receive eternal death for our wages. But the Lord Jesus had compassion on us, and became willing to redeem us. The price was very great. It cost him his life. At one time as the burden of the coming woe pressed upon him, his flesh shrank from the sacrifice, and he prayed if possible that the bitter cup might pass from him. But he loved us much; he paid the price, and bought us.

Now we are free. Do you know this? Though Jesus Christ has redeemed you, are you Satan's slave still? Have you been angry about the purchase, or afraid of him who hath bought you? have you thought that he wished to retain you a slave, and have you refused to change masters?

If so you will find you have made a sad mistake. No human slavery can be as bitter and severe as the bondage of Satan. And no human freedom can be as sweet and easy as the liberty wherewith Christ maketh his children free;" he does not call his followers servants, but friends. He blesses them abundantly. He gives them peace in this world, and eternal life and rest and joy in the world to come. All that you lose by Satan, you will gain in Christ.

It is no profit to him that he has bought you. It was purely love for you, and pity for your wretched condition, that moved him to redeem you with his own precious blood. Ought you not to fall at his feet and beg forgiveness for your past ingratitude, and declare yourself his willing slave forever? You would do this to an earthly benefactor. Will you do less to a heavenly Redeemer?

And remember, he has all power in heaven and in earth. You may lightly esteem the favors of human friends, but you can not trifle with his grace. His long suffering is great. He may patiently bear with your hardness of heart many years, but the day will come when his favor will be turned to frowns, and his pity will be changed to wrath. He now invites you to share his deliverance, and inherit his glory, will then bind you with chains of death, and bid you depart from his presence forever. Will you suffer this when salvation is free?—E. A. A.—The Christian.

ABOUT FRETTING.

Fretting is unpleasant. It springs from unpleasant feelings. It is attended with unpleasant looks. It is accompanied with unpleasant tones of voice. It gives to the one who frets, and to every thing about him, an unpleasant appearance.

Fretting is unprofitable. It is no benefit to him who frets. It is no benefit to any who may chance to hear it. It is ungenerous. It is doing on our part what we do not like to have done. It is treating others as we do not like to be treated.

Fretting is undignified. Little perplexities, or great ones, should not be allowed to ruffle the mind. Sir Isaac Newton was above fretting. Once, on leaving his study, his little dog upset his lamp, and thus destroyed the manuscript of some of his great works, which had cost him the labor of years. On returning and seeing what was done, the great philosopher did not fret, but calmly said to his little dog, "Diamond, thou little knowest the mischief thou hast done me," and as calmly went about repairing his loss.

Fretting is unchristian. It is unbecoming in any, and especially in those who bear the christian name. The christian religion does not beget fretfulness.

Fretting is unnecessary. It is unpleasant, unprofitable, undignified, unchristian, unnecessary. An old dilemma of the schoolmen, "There are two things we ought not to fret about—what cannot. What can be urged in its favor? If unnecessary, why practice it? Why not make an end of it—have it exterminated? When there is so much that is good, what need have we of that which is evil? If we can help, and what we cannot." If we are fretting about what we can help, then stop fretting. But if we are fretting about what we cannot help, then fretting will accomplish nothing.

A HINT TO MEN FOLKS.

Do ever men folks think how much work they make a woman by going into a house with muddy boots? It would take but a moment for them to use the scraper and leave outside the dirt which they tracked over the floor, oil-cloth and carpet, or which they leave on the stove-hearth or fender—all of which must be mopped, cleaned, scraped and wiped off. And when you go home at noon or night, do you ever notice how you act? You enter the door with a slam—it closes half, and some woman must shut it after you. Your overcoat is thrown on a chair in one corner of the room—your hat sails away in another corner to light upon a stand, or under it—gloves are thrown on a table—neck-wrapper hung on the first handy chair, and down you sit in the centre of the room where every one must navigate around you. Hats, boots, coat, newspapers, overcoat, gloves, boots, jack-knife, hair-brush, and all articles you may have in your hands, are scattered as though a hurricane had swept through the room. Books, papers, magazines, almanac and memorandum books are routed from their place. And when you have to leave, what a time is there! No one knows where your things are. "Where is my hat?" "Where is my overcoat?" "Who had my gloves?" Every one in the house is put upon the witness-stand, and it is more trouble to get you started down town than to launch a steamer, or to start a new stage-coach. Then after you are gone, the woman must spend a quarter of a day, more or less, in picking up things which you have scattered.

The trouble is, you don't think. It would take but a moment to hang up your coat and hat—to put your gloves in your coat-pocket—to draw your neck-wrapper through the sleeve of your overcoat and to cultivate your bump of order. It takes but a moment to put an article in its place, and then it can be found. The woman who takes care of the house has enough to do without choring after her liege lord or waiting on a lot of men all day. A woman's work is never finished. You expect her to keep the house neat and tidy. If it is not so, you run to a saloon. You expect her hair to be always smooth, her dress always in order, her stockings always neat, your clothing always in order, the dust swept from its thousand gathering places, something good to eat three times a day besides lunches, and her to be as neat and attractive as she was the night you popped the question. How can she be all this, if she has to spend half her time picking up what you throw down? If your wife, mother or sister be neat, you should be. If not, teach her neatness by good examples. We print this little chapter in hopes that it will make some men who read it a little more thoughtful and neat, and that it may help those who never have too much.—Ex.

THE FALLING STARS.

As there has been much speculation relative to the cause of what some are pleased to call the "Meteoric Shower" of Nov. 12, 1833, and as many who are opposed to the present truth, profess to consider it as an event which does not fulfill the prophecy of our Savior in Matt. 24, "The stars shall fall from heaven;" it may be well to regard the opinion of a writer in Tract No. 23, published by the American Reformed Tract Society, who unwittingly bears testimony to the truth of our Lord's prediction. He does not stand alone, but his testimony is corroborated by that of other astronomers of note at the present time. Some would-be wise men have inscribed the cause to be "A highly electrical state of the atmosphere," some have called them "Gaseous Aerolites," etc. The testimony referred to, is as follows:

"The source whence these (so called) meteors proceed, is distincty ascertained to be a belt of small Planetoides, revolving around the sun, in a little less than a year, and in an orbit intersecting the earth's, at such an angle that every thirty-three years or thereabouts, the earth meets the full tide on the 12th of November. These meteors are true and proper stars. All the observations made during the year 1833, agree with those of previous years, and confirm what may be regarded as sufficiently well established, the cosmical origin of shooting stars."—Ex.

A "STRANGE" PREACHER.

His name was strange. Many will think his conduct was strange also. He was a zealous preacher, and a sweet singer. Nothing gave him so much pleasure as to go about the country preaching and singing. A gentleman well off in worldly goods, desiring to make him and his family comfortable in their declining years, generously presented him with a title-deed for three hundred and twenty acres or land. Strange accepted the donation with thankfulness, and went on his way preaching and singing as he went. But after a few months he returned, and requested his generous friend to take the title-deed. Surprised at the request, the gentleman inquired:

"Is there any flaw in it?"

"Not the slightest."

"Is not the land good?"

"First rate."

"Isn't it healthy?"

"Yes."

"Why, then, do you wish me to take it back? It will be a comfortable home for you when you grow old, and something for your wife and children, if you should be taken away."

"Why, I'll tell you. Ever since, I've lost my enjoyment for singing. I can't sing my favorite hymn with a good conscience any longer."

"What is that?"

"This:

'No foot of land do I possess,
Nor cottage in the wilderness,
A poor wayfaring man.

'I dwell awhile in tents below,
Or gladly wander to and fro,
Till I my Canaan gain.

'Yonder's my house and portion fair,
My treasures and my heart are there,
And my abiding home.'

"There!" said Strange, "I'd rather sing that hymn than own America. I'll trust the Lord to take care of my wife and children."

He continued singing and preaching, and the Lord, said the preacher, did take care of him and his children after him.—Merry's Museum.

DO GOOD.

Thousands of men breathe, move, and live, pass off the stage of life—and are heard of no more. Why? They do not a particle of good in the world; none were blessed by them as the instruments of their redemption. Not a word they spoke could be recalled, so they perished; their light went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than the insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die? O man, live for something. Do good; leave behind you a monument of virtue, that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name in kindness and love, and mercy on the hearts of thousands you may come in contact with year by year. You will never be forgotten. No! your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind, as the stars on the brow. Good deeds will shine as the stars of heaven.—Dr. Chalmers.

SHORT ARTICLES FOR CHILDREN.

As our space for the children is somewhat limited, it becomes important that those who write for them should be short. Besides, the children's department will be much more interesting when filled with several short articles, than with one or two long ones. As a general rule, we prefer articles that might be written on one page of letter paper. We want short, pithy articles, like those you find in this paper. Come, children, can't you send us some? Try.—EDITOR.

FROM SISTER MARIA.

BRO. GRANT:—I am glad you are renewing an interest in the "children's department" of our paper; and as you say many of the little friends who read the Crisis do not take the Pilgrim, I thought maybe they would like to read some verses that were published in the second number of the Pilgrim. I wrote them before my baby came to live with us; and a few months ago, when he was so sick we thought he must die, the enemy whispered to me, tauntingly, "Ah! 'lay' your 'baby' down now; see if you 'do not weep.'" Thank God, my baby is not yet laid down. SISTER MARIA.

Westfield, Mass.

LAY THE BABY DOWN.

Lay the baby down;
Let him go to sleep
In his snow white gown.
Mother, do not weep,
As thou foldest now
His chubby little hands;
Start not, that his brow
Is wreathed with icy bands.

Lay the baby down!
See! his eyelids close.
Watch the ruby lips,
Fading like a rose.
Oh, that weary look!
Oh, that piercing moan!
Lay the baby down,
Silent—and alone!

Lay the baby down!
Breathe a fervent prayer
For the mourning ones
Weeping by him there.
Hearts that loved him well,
Ready are to break;
Darling little one,
We would see thee wake.

Lay the baby down
In his coffin-bed;
Mosses on his breast,
Flowers on his head.
When the Savior comes
He will wake to bliss,
Dwelling in a world
Fairer far than this.

TAKE THE BABY UP.

Take the baby up,
Mother, to your breast.
See! he waketh now
From his dreamless rest.
Now the sun has broke
In his little room,
And the rosy light
Has in splendor come.

Take the baby up!
Oh, how bright his eyes!
See! he gazes now
To the glowing skies.
What does baby see?
What does baby hear?
Hark! what sound is this
That salutes my ear?

"Take the baby up!"
'Tis the Savior's call,
"Children, hasten home!
Welcome, great and small!"
Storms of wrath come down
On the men of sin,
But the little ones
Are with God shut in.

Take the baby up!
Oh, sad mothers, smile!
All the babes will wake
In a little while,
Robed in purest white,
Bright with new-made charms;
Ye shall fold them soon
In immortal arms.

THE BLIND BOY.

I read not long since of a gentleman being stopped in the street by a stranger, who asked him, "Sir, did you ever thank God for your reason?" "I don't know that I ever did," the gentleman replied. "Do it quickly, then," said the stranger, "for I have lost mine." Did our young readers ever thank God for their eyesight? If not, the following story will remind them of their duty.

I once knew a little boy who took the small pox, and when he grew better, it was found that it had shut up both of his eyes. He had a little sister Annie, twelve years old, who used to find ways to make him happy, and would often take long walks with him. One day they sat down to rest at the foot of a tree.

"Annie," said James, "what a pleasant day this is; the air feels soft and warm to my face. I hear the water running over the smooth stones, and the birds singing over our heads, and the pretty ducks in the pond. How I wish I could see them again!" Then he thought how sad it would be to be always blind, and began to cry.

"Don't cry, James," said his sister; "maybe you will see yet. There was George Scott, you know, had the small pox, and was blind for weeks; but he got well, and now he sees as well as anybody. Besides, you know God will do right about it, as mother says; and if he leaves you to be blind, will make you happy some other way."

But poor James kept on crying, with his head bent upon his hands, and his elbows on his knees. The flood of tears pressed their way between his eyelids, which had stuck together, and when he lifted up his head, he cried out, "Oh, Annie, I can see! There are the hills, and the clear blue sky, and the ducks in the pond! Oh, how glad I am!"

Annie was as joyful as he, and they hurried home to tell the good news. At night, when the father prayed in the family, and thanked God for restoring sight to James, he wept for joy.

How little do children know of the blessing of sight. If they had lost it awhile, like James, they would never forget to thank God for eyesight.

UNCLE THOMAS.

LITTLE FOLKS' WORDS.

A little babe in Scotland was left without a mother. Its father was a profane and wicked man. But the nurse who took care of the infant was a good woman, who loved the Lord Jesus Christ, and early taught the little child about the Savior.

One day, when the little girl was only twenty months old, her father came into the room with some of his companions, and uttered an oath. Instantly the babe lisped out in its childish tones, "Oh, the grace of God!" The father's hard heart was touched, and he thought about his little daughter's words till he was led to seek the grace of God and be saved.

"Bessie," said a little girl to her mamma's servant, "sit down and rest, and let me iron my playthings."

"Oh, no, child," said Bessie, "I cannot rest."

"But, Bessie, just rest a little while, and let me have the iron."

"No, child, there is no rest for the wicked."

"Are you wicked, Bessie?"

"Yes, dear, very wicked."

"But, Bessie, there is a cure for you:—

'There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains.'"

The little girl's words were just the right ones, in the right place; and Bessie, the poor wicked servant, sought that cure which her little friend pointed out to her.

Little folks do not know how much good or evil they may bring about by their words. Nothing that you say is lost. Some one is made to feel better or worse by every word you speak. Angry words call out angry ones in return, and produce envy, and hatred, and pride, and all manner of evils. But pleasant, kind, and gracious words, are like oil on water, which smooths its roughness. Be careful what you say. Think before you speak. Strive to speak words which will do good, and help or comfort others. Let no guile be found in your mouths. By your words you may save a soul. May God bless you, and make your words to be fitly chosen, like apples of gold in baskets of silver. E. A. A.

CHRIST OUR GUEST.

AN INCIDENT IN AN ORPHAN'S ASYLUM.

When one of the boys had said the grace, "Come, Lord Jesus, be our guest, and bless what thou hast provided;" a little fellow looked up and said, "Do tell me why the Lord Jesus never comes? We ask him every day to sit with us, and he never comes?"

Dear child, only believe, and you may be sure he will come, for he does not despise your invitation.

"I shall set him a seat," said the little fellow, and just then there was a knock at the door. A poor frozen apprentice entered, begging a night's lodging. He was made welcome. The chair stood empty for him. Every child wanted him to have his plate; and one was lamenting that his bed was too small for the stranger, who was quite touched by such uncommon attentions. The little one had been thinking all the time Jesus could not come, and so he sent this poor boy in his place,—is that it? Yes, dear child, that is just it. Every piece of bread, and every drink of water that we give to the poor, or the sick, or the prisoners, for Jesus' sake, we give to him. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. If, then, you want to do something for Jesus, do it to some one of his poor distressed children, and he will regard it just the same as if you had shown the kindness to himself; for he loves his people as himself.

THE GOLDEN RULE.

"Father," said my little nephew Edgar, "George Bently calls me a fool. Do you think I am?"

"Why, Edgar," said his father, preserving his gravity, "tell me why he calls you so."

"Well, sir, Aunt Kate sent me to pay a bill, and said that I should have back fifty cents. I met George on the way, and he went with me. The storekeeper took out a package of new currency, and handed me one, as he thought, and turned right around to wait on a customer. As I took up the money, instead of one fifty cents, it was two. I gave back one, and, as he took it, he said, 'Thank you, my boy; I made a mistake. As soon as we were outside the door, George said, 'What a fool; why did you not keep it? He never would have known it.' Just for a moment, I was very sorry that I had done it; but at once I thought, God will know it."

"Edgar," said his father, "that was a great temptation; you did right, and practised the Golden Rule, 'Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.'"

A few weeks after, Edgar was sent to the same store to purchase some oranges; his father gave him the right amount; when he returned he found that in payment he had mistaken fifty cents of his own private funds for ten cents that had been given him for the oranges. Without a moment's hesitation, he went back and asked to have the mistake rectified.

"Certainly, I will make it right," said the merchant; "I have not forgotten the two fifty cent pieces."—New York Observer.

THE CIRCUS.

A circus came to town, and everybody knows how the music, and the grand tent and horses, set all the little boys agoing. Quarters of dollars and shillings are in great demand, and many a choice bit of money have the circus-riders carried away, which was meant for better purposes.

A little boy was seen looking around the premises, with a great deal of curiosity.

"Halloo, Johnny," said a man who knew him, "going to the circus?"

"No, sir," answered Johnny; "father don't like them."

"O, well, I'll give you money to go, Johnny," said the man.

"Father doesn't approve of them," answered Johnny.

"Well, go for once, and I'll pay for your ticket."

"No, sir," said Johnny, "my father would give me money if he thought it were best; besides, I've got twenty-five cents in my strong box,—twice enough to go."

"I'd go, Johnny, for once; "it's wonderful the way the horses do," said the man. "Your father needn't know it."

"I sha'n't," said the boy.

"Now, why?" asked the man.

"'Cause," said Johnny, twirling his bare toes in the sand, "after I've been, I could not look my father right in the eye, and I can now."—Friend of Virtue.

GOOD RESOLUTIONS.—A little girl of six years old died a little while ago. About a year before her death, she had a small writing-desk given her. After her death, her mother unlocked it, and found this writing:—

"The minute I wake up in the morning I will thank God.

"I will mind my father and mother always.

"I will try to have my lessons perfect.

"I will try to be kind, and not get cross.

"I want to behave like God's child."

MARY.—Luke 1: 38.

Lowly, and yet of noble birth,
A daughter of great Judah's line—
Secluded from the pride of earth,
Content to learn the will divine:
Her life proclaimed this pure record,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Gabriel, whose form with glory shone,
Announced her mother of that Child
Who yet shall reign on David's throne,
Th' eternal King—"the Undefiled!"
Her trusting heart believed, adored,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

To Bethlehem the Magi come,
And with the wond'ring shepherd's gaze
On Him, denied on earth a home,
Though born a Prince of endless days.
But no complaint the wise men heard,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

And when the offering day arrived,
Joseph and his beloved came
Where Anna prayed, and long had lived,
Where Simeon blessed the Babe and them:
She felt, though he foretold a sword,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Truly the sword did pierce her soul
As she beheld her tortured Son!
But yielding to divine control,
Her spirit groaned, Thy will be done.
In her sad heart strong faith was stored,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Lo, with the apostolic band,
Waiting with one accord in prayer,
Obedient to their Lord's command,
Methinks I see her kneeling there,—
There, where the Spirit was outpoured,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Mary, thy name like music sweet
Rolls down through Time's revolving years;
We call thee "blessed," and 'tis meet
For us, who are Christ's worshipers;
But, shunning all idolatry,
We may not, will not worship thee;

No, for thou hast returned to dust,
Dissolved by death's relentless sting;
But at the rising of the just
Thou shalt awake, and vict'ry sing;
Again thy tongue shall speak this word,—
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

For the World's Crisis.

"LO HERE, OR LO THERE."
Luke 17: 21.

When the Savior had ended his speech to those children of iniquity, the Pharisees, he turns from them to warn and instruct his disciples against that very class of men who had but a little while before been quizzing him; a class who, being themselves in error, arrogate to themselves the only true and holy apostolic succession, being orthodox in the faith and evangelical in the truth, while all others are denominated heterodox, schismatics, and errorists, whose damnation now of a long time slumbereth not. Christ first foretells the time of perils,—"The d-a-y-s w-i-l-l c-o-m-e,"—alas! alas! he spoke the truth. "The days will come when ye [the disciples] shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it. And they [the pharisaical set] shall say to you, [the disciples] See here; or, See there; go not after them, nor follow them." Why will they say, "Lo here, or lo there?" In order to call your attention to the effects of preaching in different localities, and to tell you that this power of God in the conversion of souls is the kingdom of God set up within those who are converted; or, the kingdom set up in their hearts. "Go not after them, nor follow them," saith Jesus.

How long shall this continue? So long as the Jews are captive among all nations, and Jerusalem is trodden down of the Gentiles (Luke 21: 24); and then what? "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory (21; 27)." "For as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of man be in his day." Who is ever deceived or mistaken concerning the bright, vivid, sudden, forked lightning's flash, as for a moment it lights up the dark and angry vault of heaven, overspread with rolling, surging, tempest-tossed thunder clouds, "black as Erebus and dark as Hades," like the thick canopy of night spread over us? And are we to be told after reading of the down-treading of the children of the free woman for eighteen centuries, and having witnessed the groanings of earth, the carnage and slaughter, the tears and sufferings, the despotisms and oppressions, the wrongs and outrages with which the earth is filled, the "carnival of death," and crime, that fills our own land with lamentation and weeping, with curses and blasphemies against God and his Christ,—I say, are we to be told that this has been so many hundred years of "the kingdom of God," wherein his will is done upon the earth as it is now done in heaven? Do teachers of heavenly and divine truths expect to impose such a pandemonium on earth upon lovers of truth, peace, and righteousness, and seekers after holiness, who love the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, and his peaceable kingdom, and the days of the Son of man, in which the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace filleth the earth so long as the sun and moon endureth, with any hope or expectation of success? If so, may the good Lord deliver us, and may they be confounded and most thoroughly disappointed, is my most devout supplication.

Christ himself positively affirmed that before the kingdom of God, comprehending "one of the days of the Son of man," should come, himself must suffer many things, and be rejected of that race of men, the Jews, and they, the disciples, should not see one of his days when persecutions against his church arose, and they should anxiously long to behold one of his days.

But it is urged by those claiming to be teachers among Protestants and Catholics, that "the kingdom of God" was "set up" by the gift of the Spirit on the "day of Pentecost," and that the church of Christ on earth constitutes that kingdom, by Christ ruling in the hearts of believers, through the Spirit.

Now look at it. The disciples were themselves baptized with the Holy Spirit, as none are at this day; preached the kingdom of God from Pentecost until they were killed for their witnessing in its favor. Some of them coming down over thirty years this side of the destruction of Jerusalem, making over half a century that some of them were absolutely living, in the days of the Son of man, if it be true that the kingdom was set up at Pentecost, and yet Christ told them they should not see one of his days when they should desire to.

Again, he is still rejected of that race of men, and the church are still filling up the measure of his sufferings that were left behind; the Gentiles are still treading down the holy city, and their times are not yet ended; and until they are, the times of the Messiah cannot begin, and the Jews are not yet crying, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" and we in the kingdom. What infatuation!

"The kingdom of God" (Luke 17: 20), "the days of the Son of man" (17: 22), "the Son of man . . . . in his day" (17: 24) "his times" (1 Tim. 6: 15), "his appearing and his kingdom" (1 Tim. 4: 1), "shall he appear the second time" (Heb. 9: 28), "the last time" (1 Peter 1: 5), "the day of the Lord" (1 Thess. 5: 3, and 2 Peter 3: 10), "the day of God" (3: 12), "the dispensation of the fullness of times" (Eph. 1: 10), "appointed a day in the which he will judge the world" (Acts 17: 31), "ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Luke 13: 35), "the times of restitution of all things" (Acts 3: 21), "everlasting kingdom of our Lord" (2 Pet. 1: 11), and "thy kingdom come" of our Lord's prayer, all refer, I apprehend, to one and the same epoch, only with reference to the events transpiring therein it is relatively like one of our days. Some things are done at the beginning, then others succeed in their regular order. Save, perhaps, this difference, that instead of measuring time by hours, as now, it may be measured by events.

Acts 1: 9–11.—"And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men [probably the same two seen in the mount of transfiguration] stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same JESUS . . . shall so come, in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven." Paul's testimony is in perfect harmony: "For our conversation [Clarke says, our citizenship] is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Phil. 3: 20, 21. Also in 1 Thess. 1: 9, 10: "How ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God; and TO WAIT for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead." Again he says, in 2: 19: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" Chap. 3: 13: "To the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God . . . at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, with all his saints." Rom. 2: 6, 7: "Who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, [he will render] eternal life. But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, [he will render] indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile, . . . in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel."

Acts 3: 19, 21: "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing [at the resurrection] shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which [sending, second coming] before was preached unto you; [referring to his person] whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his his holy prophets since the world began." 1 Thess. 4: 14–17: "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; for this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent [precede, or go before, old Saxon] them which are asleep; for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain [unto the coming of the Lord] shall be caught up, together with them [that are resurrected] in clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so [by a resurrection and a change] shall we ever be with the Lord; wherefore comfort one another with these words."

1 Cor. 15: 51: "Behold I shew you a mystery; we [i. e., the church, see chap. 1: 2] shall not all sleep; but we shall all [the same all that sleep not] be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; . . . and the dead shall be raised . . . and we [the living] shall be changed." Jno. 11: 21: "Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. . . . Thy brother shall rise again. . . . I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. . . . I am the resurrection [quickening spirit, life-giver, 1 Cor. 15: 21, 22, and 45–47] and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live [in the resurrection at the last day]; and whosoever liveth [at the last day] and believeth in me, shall never die," because they will be changed. 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52; 1 Thess. 4: 14–17.

Jno. 21: 21–23: "Peter seeing him [John, following], saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? . . . Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die."

Here, again, the very same idea prevails that is found in 1 Cor. 15: 51, 1 Thess. 4: 15, and Jno. 11: 26, that believers, who are alive at the coming of Christ, shall NEVER die," but be instantaneously changed from mortals to immortals.

In all these fifteen passages, not only is the kingdom placed at the second coming of Christ, but almost every blessing promised to us is made dependent upon that event, by the apostle Paul; in so much, that if there be no second personal appearing of the Savior, then there is no salvation for any body, so far as the gospel is concerned; and if the gospel salvation be not true, then may we well doubt all others; in fact, doubt if there be any other. I know not any.

Here it will not be out of place to consider the difference of opinions, and conclusions, held and deduced from the same premises, in the times of the apostles and our own. Then, if it was said or implied that an individual was to tarry until the Lord came, the opinion prevailed that the individual "should not die." Now, it is just the reverse, and the individual is surely to die, because the Lord is coming. Then, Mary and Martha both held that if the Lord had been there their brother would not have died. Now, we are taught that the Lord does come to every believer that dies. Then, it was held that believers would die until the Lord came. Now, it is claimed with strange inconsistency, that whenever they do die the Lord does come to them; yet, notwithstanding they do die, they still live forever and cannot die. Then it was taught that without a resurrection of those who had died in the faith, there would be no salvation of the soul. 1 Peter 1: 7–9. Now it is taught that the soul of the believer being a conscious entity, and immortal in its essence, is saved when the believer dies, independent of a resurrection. Then it was taught that believers would get the victory over death when they rose from the dead; and now, it is taught that they get the victory when death triumphs over them, and lays them in the grave.

Then, it was believed that even christians perished, unless saved by being raised to life again; now, it is claimed that when they are in death then they are in life; and being safe and happy in celestial glory, it is impossible for them to perish, whether there be a resurrection or not. Then, it was held that death was not only an enemy, that had a poisonous sting, and constituted the wages for sin, shutting us up in a dark prison house, and was a burden that made us groan; but that it took away knowledge, destroyed all distinctions, and caused joy, love, hatred and envy to perish; now, death hath peans of praise sung in its behalf; garlands of never-dying flowers woven as a chaplet for its crown; wreaths of unfading green twined around its lintels; eulogies pronounced upon its glorious achievements; nay, it is caressed as a friend, that graciously condescends to play the servitor, and stand at the gates to open wide the portals of glory, and bids us "pass over the river," and enter upon untold delights; and is styled "the dulcet voice of the adorable Son of God," that "calls us to his arms;" "the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God."

JOY IN THE ADVENT.

TRANSLATED FROM LUTHER.

"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21: 28.

But here you may ask: Who can lift up his head in the presence of such fearful wrath and the awful judgment? Does not all the world tremble at the contemplation of that day, and the more hang its head, and look down for very alarm and terror; how then shall we look up, and lift up our heads in peacefulness and longing for its coming? Answer: All this is said for christians alone, who are christians indeed, and not for heathens and Jews. But true christians are so surrounded with temptations and the pursuits of sin, and all descriptions of evil, that to them this life is insipid and loathsome. On this account they wait, and long, and pray to be delivered from sin and from evil, as is set forth in the Lord's Prayer: "Thy Kingdom come. Deliver us from evil." Are we true christians, so shall we also pray from the depths of our hearts. And if we do not pray that prayer from our souls, and with all earnestness, we are not yet proper christians.

And as our proper prayer is, so must certainly our feelings and practice be, contemplating these signs, however awful, with satisfaction and longing for what they foretell, as Christ exhorts: "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up." He does not say: "Tremble and be afraid, or cast down your heads;" for that which cometh is what we have so earnestly besought. Is it our soul-felt desire to be freed from sin, from death, from hell, then we must needs covet this coming above all things, and love it. Thus also says St. Paul (2 Tim. 4: 8): "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." But what will he give to them that hate and shun that appearing? Beyond question, he will consign them to perdition as his enemies. And in Titus 2: 13, we read: "We should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." So in Luke 12: 36, also: "Be ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding."

Those, however, who are frightened, and would not that Christ should come, what mean they when they pray, "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done; Deliver us from evil?" Do they not lie to God before his very face, to their own condemnation? Are they not striving against the will of God, who desires that day for the redemption of his people? There is, therefore, necessity for great carefulness, that there may be no hatred, dislike, or dread of that day found in us, for such trepidation is an unfavorable symptom, and appertains to the unrenewed and lost, whose hard heads and obdurate hearts need to be shaken and broken with such shocks and terrors, that they may reform. But to believers that day must be comforting and precious. To them it is to be the day of highest joy and security, just as it shall be to the unbelieving the day of their highest terror and curse. It is also ever so in this life, that gospel truth is to the good most precious, and to the evil most hateful. And why should believers fear, and not be exceeding glad, seeing that their trust is upon Christ, that the Judge is coming for their redemption, and that this is their portion?—Prophetic Times.

LIFE IN THE FUTURE.

There is life in the future for thee, brother;
There is life in the future for thee;
Though death's gloomy shadows encircle thee round,
There is life in the future for thee.

CHORUS.—A home in the kingdom we see,
And a life in the future for thee;
A home in the kingdom we see,
And a life in the future for thee.

Oh, 'twas matchless, ineffable love, brother,
That purchased on Calvary's tree,
With the blood of the just, this unspeakable gift—
This life in the future for thee.

Christ is the great fountain of life, brother,
And faith brings its waters to me;
Thou hast eaten the bread that from heaven came down,
There is life in the future for thee.

What matters earth's sadness and toil, brother,
If we but that future life see?
There'll be ample time for rejoicing and rest;
There is life in the future for thee.

Then cling with an unyielding grasp, brother,
By the strong hand of faith to life's tree;
Though death shall his own lawful captives retain,
There is life in the future for thee.

THOUGHTS UPON BAPTISM.

My attention has recently been called with renewed interest to an examination of this subject, as connected with God's own arrangement for salvation, as revealed in the Scriptures of truth; and as the testimony has come up in rather a new light, I take the liberty of writing it out for the Crisis, with the hope that some may be aided in their investigations of this deeply interesting subject.

I am free to admit there is no virtue in water, in and of itself, to cleanse the heart, but there is virtue in obedience; for we read that Christ has become "the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; and that the "willing and obedient" are to "eat of the fruit of the land." A willing heart is first necessary, which naturally leads to obedience, the same as faith leads to works. Both are essential to salvation.

When Christ was about leaving the world, he said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Belief first, and baptism second, and the result of belief. This order was observed by the apostles in all their ministrations; and thus an example is given to the church for all subsequent time, and is in exact harmony with the teachings of the Scriptures.

We will now introduce a familiar illustration. A couple are engaged to be married. First, their love is placed upon each other, which leads, secondly, to the making of the marriage contract, and thirdly, to its consummation. The second and third steps are the result of the first, and work no change in the hearts or affections of the parties, that being a prior work.' But in taking the third step, a very great change takes place in the relation the parties sustain towards each other. By that last act they become husband and wife, in the sight of God and man; and the bride takes upon her legally the name of the bridegroom, and becomes an inheritor of his property, and they twain become one flesh. If they omit the last step, and assume the connubial relation at the second stage, all would hold them to be adulterers. Their plea of sincere love and good intentions would not screen them, neither would the plea of ignorance. Now if I have a right apprehension of the subject, this, in all its parts, is a correct parallel of the christian's life to his full union with Christ, as follows:

1st. Christ has manifested his love to us, and invites us by the gospel to become his upon the terms he himself has pointed out. 2d. We accept of those invitations, and reciprocate his love by giving our hearts to him, and resolve to become his for time and eternity, by a hearty submission to his will. At which point the Savior meets us, and lifts upon us the light of his countenance, and imparts some tokens of his gracious love to our hearts. We then, for the first time, begin to feel the blessed assurance, that we are indeed Christ's, and Christ is ours, and are blessed more, perhaps, than at any other point of our christian experience. This we call conversion.

Up to this point (thank God), nearly all christians are agreed; and from this epoch date the beginning of their christian experience. But, sad to say, multitudes who have reached this point there end their experience. A large proportion, however, begin to reason on this wise: "There is no virtue in water to cleanse the heart (which is already right in the sight of God), and I believe a few drops are just as good as an ocean; and besides this, I was sprinkled in infancy, and the church calls that baptism; and the Bible enjoins but one baptism. I will therefore confess Christ by joining myself with his body, the church, and thus consummate the good-begun work."

If this is God's revealed plan, then all who thus do are right. If it is not his plan, I can see no escape from the declaration of Christ, who says, "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." The sanction of all the ecclesiastics of the world, aside from the sure "word," can avail nothing with God. Let us see what God hath said concerning this matter.

Christ said (as before quoted), "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved."

We read in Acts 15: 14, that Christ has visited "the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." In other portions, we learn that the apostles baptized believers (only) into Christ, into his name; that this people are his peculiar treasure, "members of his body," are "married to Christ." That they are to be "the Bride, the Lamb's wife;" and that ere long his weary bride will be gathered to "the marriage supper," and be presented by him, on the great coronation day of the King of kings and Lords of lords, before his Father and his holy angels.

O think, beloved in the Lord, will be present any on that august day who has failed to take upon him "his name," in the manner he himself has prescribed? His bride will then be clothed upon with linen clean and white, which is declared to be "the righteousness of saints." If any should perchance get there, not having on that wedding garment, they would, at the inquiry of the Master, become "speechless," and be cast out and condemned as adulterers, as surely as we should condemn the couple who went to living together as husband and wife without being lawfully married. If we will make the crown sure, all those holy resolutions made at our first espousal must be reduced to practice.

The reason why many are constantly referring back to their first experience as evidence that they are christians, is that they have failed to take the succeeding steps in the divine life, and hence have no increased evidence, either from the word or the Spirit, that they are walking in that straight and narrow road (marked out in the Bible) that leads to life. A correct baptism is essential to a right beginning, but that is not all; we must be constantly progressing, both by a correct faith and by well doing, and then we shall know that we are Christ's, and Christ is ours. Any thing short of this actual knowledge is unsatisfactory to the true christian.

In conclusion, I will say, if it was becoming in Christ to fulfill all righteousness and be baptized of John in Jordan, is it not becoming in us to imitate his example, and obey his most positive command? If we fail thus to do, we certainly shall always lack the evidence we so much need, that we are accepted of him. We want the living word as well as the Spirit to witness with our spirits that we are his. If recorded testimony, made by proper authority, is the best evidence to prove legitimacy in human courts, so also will the divine record be best testimony at the bar of God to prove that we have been legally married to Christ. Therefore let us all be sure we have it. Amen.

WHERE DO SOULS COME FROM?

It is a very easy matter to assert that the human soul is immortal, but a little harder one to give its origin. It is obvious, however, that if it is an intelligent entity, existing independent of the body, it must be either "pre-existent," "transmitted," or "created at birth." No other position can be taken, as all must admit. Which of the above will the advocates of "soul-entityism" choose? Either will involve them in difficulties from which it will be hard to extricate themselves. For if the soul is pre-existent—as a distinct entity, why do we not call to mind some things which transpired prior to being imprisoned in the body? Why, we might inquire, were we ever thus imprisoned in tenements of clay? Why were we not left to range the blissful fields of God's unbounded empire, instead of being encumbered with these old earthly clods? Would it not be unjust in Jehovah to thus confine an innocent soul? and then, if peradventure through the weakness of the flesh it occupies it blunders along "a few brief years in carelessness and security," doom it to eternal woe?

And not only this, but if the soul is pre-existent it favors the idea of transmigration! For if it pre-existed in any form, who knows but what it occupied another body? And if it did, how natural to suppose it might another still, after leaving this. Yes, dear reader, you, if this theory be true, may in a short time find yourself crawling around in the body of a woodchuck!

But if it is not pre-existent, it is either "created at birth," or "transmitted"; and if transmitted it is divisible, and if divisible it is destructible, hence not immortal. And if created at birth, then Jehovah must be daily creating souls, not only for legitimate children, but also for illegitimates. Thus is the blasphemous charge brought against God of sanctioning adultery. And not only this, but as it is estimated that "over eighty thousand children are born daily," and contended that "over half the human race will ultimately be damned," Jehovah must be daily employed in creating over forty thousand candidates for hell fire!! Who dare occupy such a position? Who dare thus slander the Supreme Ruler of the universe? And yet those who claim that the soul, as a distinct entity, is created at birth, do occupy just such a position, and do thus slander God, even though through ignorance.

The position I shall take is, that the soul is transmitted; not as a superadded entity, but as a soul—a Bible soul! In Ex. 1: 5, we read, "All the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls." This proves beyond all cavil that the soul is transmitted; and, as we have already remarked, if transmitted it is divisible, and if divisible it is destructible; and this is also easily proved by the same kind of evidence: "Save me from them that persecute me, and deliver me; lest they tear my soul (not body) like a lion, rending it in pieces."—Ps. 7: 2. If the soul were indestructible, it could not be torn to pieces. How would one look trying to tear in pieces an indivisible, indestructible ghost? Josh. 11: 11. "And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them; there were none left to breathe." Joshua must have understood the tactics of ghost fighting, if he smote indivisible ghosts with a sword. This not only proves the destructibility of the soul, but it also proves that it lives by breathing; and this is in accordance with Gen. 2: 7,—"And the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground, breathed into him (a ghost man?) the breath of life, and man became (what he was not before) a living soul." He was not a living soul until the breath of life entered his nostrils; and how natural then it is to suppose that he will not be a living soul after the breath of life leaves him.

Now, we again ask, which position shall we take—that the soul is pre-existent, created at birth, or transmitted? We feel that we are ready to answer: it is transmitted (Ex. 1: 4), therefore destructible (Ps. 7: 7: Joshua 6: 11). And if this evidence can be relied upon, the doctrine of immortal-soulism sinks forever into dark oblivion, where the first propagator of it will soon follow. It has no foundation in the Bible, reason, or philosophy, but is the corner stone of nearly every false system of religion that has ever contaminated the world. It is the fruit of Satan's lie; a bold issue against Jehovah's declaration—"The soul that sinneth it shall die." Death is a cessation of life in unspeakable agony, or any thing short of extinction of being; and the individual who tries to controvert it is replying against God.

Beware, therefore, how you try to ignore the plain declarations of the transcript of his holy will—"The wages of sin is death"; and John foresaw a time when "there will be no more death"; but if the wicked were to die the death that never dies, they would be dying eternally. John doubtless foresaw the time when the old mother of harlots would meet her final doom, and with her go the filthy rags so dearly cherished by her apostate daughters.—Prophetic Watchman.

NUMBER THREE.

THE WRITER'S EXPERIENCE IN SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES BY COMMITTING PORTIONS OF THEM TO MEMORY.

"The Bible! 'tis a book divine,
Where heavenly truth and mercy shine,
And wisdom speaks in every line"

Soon after the Lord in mercy opened our eyes to behold spiritual things, we commenced committing to memory portions of the inspired volume, carefully, prayerfully, and exactly, word for word, without the slightest deviation from the written letter. First, we committed the Sermon on the Mount, the most practical part of the epistles of Paul, Peter, James and John; of the Psalms, Proverbs, and the holy prophets. We then committed the whole of Matthew's gospel, whole of Psalms, and whole chapters in the writings of Solomon, and of the prophets. Likewise, whole chapters in Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, James and John, 1st and 2d Peter, and the letters addressed to Timothy and Titus by Paul. This committing to memory portions of the blessed Bible, was made a daily business. On some days only one verse was committed, on others, two, three, four, six, eight, or ten. The passages committed in the morning were often repeated during the day, going out and rising up. While occupied in our usual avocations, or business transactions, these golden gems were turned over and over, again and again, meditated upon and brought home to our heart. The glorious results of this persevering in meditating and treasuring up these "apples of gold in pictures of silver," are inexpressible. We mention only a few of these blessings.

1. This hiding the word of God in our heart, by these daily committals, assisted us in prayer, not only in using scriptural language, in approaching the "GREAT I AM," but, as whole Psalms and other parts of the Bible, were made up of prayer entirely, we could, when in a state of spiritual aridity, and when the heavens were brass over us, and our words seemed to rise no higher than our head, then take the words of the Holy Spirit's dictation, and lift up holy hands without wrath or doubting, and soon feel our hearts kindle with true, spiritual devotion. Often, when clouds and darkness were thus around us, the healing beams of the sun of righteousness would dawn.

2. This method of examining the Bible by careful and prayerful committal of its pages, assisted us very much in ordering our conversation, at home and abroad, in the social circle and around the table. A verse or two, taken from this pure fountain, was often introduced on these occasions for elucidation and edifying conversation. Moreover, it aided us equally in giving a happy turn to social or family interviews, when, otherwise, precious, golden moments would have been occupied on things of a trifling nature, or commonplace, or on things of little or no profit. Furthermore, when conversation was likely to flag, a passage from this Lighthouse would be introduced for mutual edification and spiritual enlargement.

3. In our missionary trips from house to house, in cities and villages, this familiarity with holy inspiration was of special advantage; also around sick-beds, on occasions when the Bible could not easily be come at, we could then have recourse to this stock on hand, treasured in our memory, and repeat verbatim such passages as would comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, administer consolation to the sick and dying.

4. In teaching Sabbath schools, Bible classes, also in attending meetings for prayer, conference, testimony, and on more public ministrations, this fund of holy "writ" stored for future use, we found incalculably beneficial. Thy word,

"Where'er it enters in,
Is sharper than a two-edged sword
To slay the man of sin."

5. In writing for the press, or otherwise, the same blessed results were experienced as when imparting oral instruction.

6. In severe temptation we could apply this "sword of the Spirit" skillfully in warding off the fiery darts of the enemy; from the fact of our having so many of the great and precious promises before our mind's eye. Our blessed Lord set an example here, when tempted by Satan, after his long fasting of forty days. What did he say? "Get thee hence, Satan, for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."—Matt. 4: 10. Mark well the purport, "It is written."

7. This hiding God's truth thus, effectually destroyed, and killed out forever, the least and last tendency to silly, nonsensical chit-chat, foolish talking and jesting, and things of little or no profit, so common with many church members. This attempt at witticisms to excite vain laughter, eats out the life and essence of true piety. Whenever you see persons given to light, trifling, or frivolous conversation, like the crackling of thorns under a pot, take it for granted such individuals are very superficial in Bible theology, and know but little, if any thing, of the marrow and fatness of the gospel.

8. Another exceedingly important item in thus bringing home the spirit of the Bible to our inmost soul, was, it killed, or destroyed, entirely and forever, all relish for insipid, frothy, and ephemeral publications—the popular periodicals of the day, the fashion-plate magazines and comicals, the multitudinous mixed up things of the bitter and the sweet, God and Mammon, Christ and Belial, so frequently advertised and puffed by religious editors! When once the truths of the Bible have taken firm root in the heart, and become more precious than gold, sweeter also than honey and the honey-comb, these sugar-coated poisons, snakes in the grass, satanic transformations, appear disgusting and heart-sickening, and are repudiated, as the froth and scum of the pit, fit neither for the land nor the dung-hill. Whenever you see persons poring over these "literary serpents" with evident delight, you know certainly that they have not yet learned the first principles of true discipleship.

"Fill first the bushel with the wheat,
With wisdom—food for souls to eat;
Then chaff, the fiction of the day,
Will find no place, and blow away."

9. This investigating the writings of holy men inspired, opened our eyes to see the vanity and sinfulness of worldly conformity in dress, equipage, church building, the pride of aristocracy, the uniting of Christ with Belial in matrimonial connections, religious festivals, and secret, oath-bound societies. When you see the professed disciples of Jesus following the wake of worldly popularity, receiving honor from one another, rest assured that God's word has not done its perfect work.

10. This method of searching the Scripture, with accompanying influences of the Holy Spirit, eradicated entirely and forever a sectarian spirit, and the spirit of caste. We were led, also, to hate oppression in every form, as God hates it, and as every holy being must hate it. Every slaveholder has an abolition lecturer within himself, in his own soul, that says to him in the language of Cowper:

"I would not have a slave to till my ground;
To carry me—to fan me while I sleep,
And tremble when I wake, for all the wealth
That sinews bought and sold have ever earned."

11. Again, this memorizing, treasuring up daily the word of life, led us into the secret of the higher christian walks—"Holiness to the Lord,"—to embrace the doctrine of perfect love, that casteth out all fear. We saw clearly from the many passages committed on the assurance of faith, that here was hope, well-grounded, immovable, for every one, on the altar Christ Jesus consecrated; that it was our privilege and duty to "rise and shine," put on the whole armor of God, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, to be filled with faith and the Holy Spirit, with all the fullness of God, able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, length, depth, and height of redeeming and sanctifying grace, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth all knowledge. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

Beloved reader, are not the blessings here enumerated, resulting from treasuring up God's truth in the heart by committing portions of it daily, worthy of your immediate, prayerful consideration? Can you hesitate a moment from following on to know the Lord, in this way, till the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your heart? "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation; for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Pet. 1: 20, 21.

MARY.—Luke 1: 38.

Lowly, and yet of noble birth,
A daughter of great Judah's line—
Secluded from the pride of earth,
Content to learn the will divine:
Her life proclaimed this pure record,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Gabriel, whose form with glory shone,
Announced her mother of that Child
Who yet shall reign on David's throne,
Th' eternal King—"the Undefiled!"
Her trusting heart believed, adored,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

To Bethlehem the Magi come,
And with the wond'ring shepherd's gaze
On Him, denied on earth a home,
Though born a Prince of endless days.
But no complaint the wise men heard,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

And when the offering day arrived,
Joseph and his beloved came
Where Anna prayed, and long had lived,
Where Simeon blessed the Babe and them:
She felt, though he foretold a sword,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Truly the sword did pierce her soul
As she beheld her tortured Son!
But yielding to divine control,
Her spirit groaned, Thy will be done.
In her sad heart strong faith was stored,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Lo, with the apostolic band,
Waiting with one accord in prayer,
Obedient to their Lord's command,
Methinks I see her kneeling there,—
There, where the Spirit was outpoured,
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

Mary, thy name like music sweet
Rolls down through Time's revolving years;
We call thee "blessed," and 'tis meet
For us, who are Christ's worshipers;
But, shunning all idolatry,
We may not, will not worship thee;

No, for thou hast returned to dust,
Dissolved by death's relentless sting;
But at the rising of the just
Thou shalt awake, and vict'ry sing;
Again thy tongue shall speak this word,—
"Behold the handmaid of the Lord."

For the World's Crisis.

"LO HERE, OR LO THERE." Luke 17: 21.

When the Savior had ended his speech to those children of iniquity, the Pharisees, he turns from them to warn and instruct his disciples against that very class of men who had but a little while before been quizzing him; a class who, being themselves in error, arrogate to themselves the only true and holy apostolic succession, being orthodox in the faith and evangelical in the truth, while all others are denominated heterodox, schismatics, and errorists, whose damnation now of a long time slumbereth not. Christ first foretells the time of perils,—"The d-a-y-s w-i-l-l c-o-m-e,"—alas! alas! he spoke the truth. "The days will come when ye [the disciples] shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it. And they [the pharisaical set] shall say to you, [the disciples] See here; or, See there; go not after them, nor follow them."—Why will they say, "Lo here, or lo there?" In order to call your attention to the effects of preaching in different localities, and to tell you that this power of God in the conversion of souls is the kingdom of God set up within those who are converted; or, the kingdom set up in their hearts. "Go not after them, nor follow them," saith Jesus.

How long shall this continue? So long as the Jews are captive among all nations, and Jerusalem is trodden down of the Gentiles (Luke 21: 24); and then what? "Then shall they see the Son of man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory (21; 27)." "For as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of man be in his day." Who is ever deceived or mistaken concerning the bright, vivid, sudden, forked lightning's flash, as for a moment it lights up the dark and angry vault of heaven, overspread with rolling, surging, tempest-tossed thunder clouds, "black as Erebus and dark as Hades," like the thick canopy of night spread over us? And are we to be told after reading of the down-treading of the children of the free woman for eighteen centuries, and having witnessed the groanings of earth, the carnage and slaughter, the tears and sufferings, the despotisms and oppressions, the wrongs and outrages with which the earth is filled, the "carnival of death," and crime, that fills our own land with lamentation and weeping, with curses and blasphemies against God and his Christ,—I say, are we to be told that this has been so many hundred years of "the kingdom of God," wherein his will is done upon the earth as it is now done in heaven? Do teachers of heavenly and divine truths expect to impose such a pandemonium on earth upon lovers of truth, peace, and righteousness, and seekers after holiness, who love the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, and his peaceable kingdom, and the days of the Son of man, in which the righteous flourish, and abundance of peace filleth the earth so long as the sun and moon endureth, with any hope or expectation of success? If so, may the good Lord deliver us, and may they be confounded and most thoroughly disappointed, is my most devout supplication.

Christ himself positively affirmed that before the kingdom of God, comprehending "one of the days of the Son of man," should come, himself must suffer many things, and be rejected of that race of men, the Jews, and they, the disciples, should not see one of his days when persecutions against his church arose, and they should anxiously long to behold one of his days.

But it is urged by those claiming to be teachers among Protestants and Catholics, that "the kingdom of God" was "set up" by the gift of the Spirit on the "day of Pentecost," and that the church of Christ on earth constitutes that kingdom, by Christ ruling in the hearts of believers, through the Spirit.

Now look at it. The disciples were themselves baptized with the Holy Spirit, as none are at this day; preached the kingdom of God from Pentecost until they were killed for their witnessing in its favor. Some of them coming down over thirty years this side of the destruction of Jerusalem, making over half a century that some of them were absolutely living, in the days of the Son of man, if it be true that the kingdom was set up at Pentecost, and yet Christ told them they should not see one of his days when they should desire to.

Again, he is still rejected of that race of men, and the church are still filling up the measure of his sufferings that were left behind; the Gentiles are still treading down the holy city, and their times are not yet ended; and until they are, the times of the Messiah cannot begin, and the Jews are not yet crying, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" and we in the kingdom. What infatuation!

"The kingdom of God" (Luke 17: 20), "the days of the Son of man" (17: 22), "the Son of man .... in his day" (17: 24) "his times" (1 Tim. 6: 15), "his appearing and his kingdom" (1 Tim. 4: 1), "shall he appear the second time" (Heb. 9: 28), "the last time" (1 Peter 1: 5), "the day of the Lord" (1 Thess. 5: 3, and 2 Peter 3: 10), "the day of God" (3: 12), "the dispensation of the fullness of times" (Eph. 1: 10), "appointed a day in the which he will judge the world" (Acts 17: 31), "ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Luke 13: 35), "the times of restitution of all things" (Acts 3: 21), "everlasting kingdom of our Lord" (2 Pet. 1: 11), and "thy kingdom come" of our Lord's prayer, all refer, I apprehend, to one and the same epoch, only with reference to the events transpiring therein it is relatively like one of our days. Some things are done at the beginning, then others succeed in their regular order. Save, perhaps, this difference, that instead of measuring time by hours, as now, it may be measured by events.

Acts 1: 9–11.—"And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold, two men [probably the same two seen in the mount of transfiguration] stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same JESUS . . . shall so come, in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven." Paul's testimony is in perfect harmony: "For our conversation [Clarke says, our citizenship] is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Phil. 3: 20, 21. Also in 1 Thess. 1: 9, 10: "How ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God; and TO WAIT for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead." Again he says, in 2: 19: "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" Chap. 3: 13: "To the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God . . . at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, with all his saints." Rom. 2: 6, 7: "Who will render to every man according to his deeds; to them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, [he will render] eternal life. But unto them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but obey unrighteousness, [he will render] indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile, . . . in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel."

Acts 3: 19, 21: "Repent ye, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing [at the resurrection] shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which [sending, second coming] before was preached unto you; [referring to his person] whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his his holy prophets since the world began." 1 Thess. 4: 14–17: "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him; for this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent [precede, or go before, old Saxon] them which are asleep; for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain [unto the coming of the Lord] shall be caught up, together with them [that are resurrected] in clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so [by a resurrection and a change] shall we ever be with the Lord; wherefore comfort one another with these words."

1 Cor. 15: 51: "Behold I shew you a mystery; we [i. e., the church, see chap. 1: 2] shall not all sleep; but we shall all [the same all that sleep not] be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; . . . and the dead shall be raised . . . and we [the living] shall be changed." Jno. 11: 21: "Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. . . . Thy brother shall rise again. . . . I know he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. . . . I am the resurrection [quickening spirit, life-giver, 1 Cor. 15: 21, 22, and 45–47] and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live [in the resurrection at the last day]; and whosoever liveth [at the last day] and believeth in me, shall never die;" because they will be changed. 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52; 1 Thess. 4: 14–17.

Jno. 21: 21–23: "Peter seeing him [John, following], saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? . . . Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die."

Here, again, the very same idea prevails that is found in 1 Cor. 15: 51, 1 Thess. 4: 15, and Jno. 11: 26, that believers, who are alive at the coming of Christ, shall NEVER die," but be instantaneously changed from mortals to immortals.

In all these fifteen passages, not only is the kingdom placed at the second coming of Christ, but almost every blessing promised to us is made dependent upon that event, by the apostle Paul; in so much, that if there be no second personal appearing of the Savior, then there is no salvation for any body, so far as the gospel is concerned; and if the gospel salvation be not true, then may we well doubt all others; in fact, doubt if there be any other. I know not any.

Here it will not be out of place to consider the difference of opinions, and conclusions, held and deduced from the same premises, in the times of the apostles and our own. Then, if it was said or implied that an individual was to tarry until the Lord came, the opinion prevailed that the individual "should not die." Now, it is just the reverse, and the individual is surely to die, because the Lord is coming. Then, Mary and Martha both held that if the Lord had been there their brother would not have died. Now, we are taught that the Lord does come to every believer that dies. Then, it was held that believers would die until the Lord came. Now, it is claimed with strange inconsistency, that whenever they do die the Lord does come to them; yet, notwithstanding they do die, they still live forever and cannot die Then it was taught that without a resurrection of those who had died in the faith, there would be no salvation of the soul. 1 Peter 1: 7–9. Now it is taught that the soul of the believer being a conscious entity, and immortal in its essence, is saved when the believer dies, independent of a resurrection. Then it was taught that believers would get the victory over death when they rose from the dead; and now, it is taught that they get the victory when death triumphs over them, and lays them in the grave.

Then, it was believed that even christians perished, unless saved by being raised to life again; now, it is claimed that when they are in death then they are in life; and being safe and happy in celestial glory, it is impossible for them to perish, whether there be a resurrection or not. Then, it was held that death was not only an enemy, that had a poisonous sting, and constituted the wages for sin, shutting us up in a dark prison house, and was a burden that made us groan; but that it took away knowledge, destroyed all distinctions, and caused joy, love, hatred and envy to perish; now, death hath peans of praise sung in its behalf; garlands of never-dying flowers woven as a chaplet for its crown; wreaths of unfading green twined around its lintels; eulogies pronounced upon its glorious achievements; nay, it is caressed as a friend, that graciously condescends to play the servitor, and stand at the gates to open wide the portals of glory, and bids us "pass over the river," and enter upon untold delights; and is styled "the dulcet voice of the adorable Son of God," that "calls us to his arms;" "the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God."

JOY IN THE ADVENT.

TRANSLATED FROM LUTHER.

"And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke 21: 28.

But here you may ask: Who can lift up his head in the presence of such fearful wrath and the awful judgment? Does not all the world tremble at the contemplation of that day, and the more hang its head, and look down for very alarm and terror; how then shall we look up, and lift up our heads in peacefulness and longing for its coming? Answer: All this is said for christians alone, who are christians indeed, and not for heathens and Jews. But true christians are so surrounded with temptations and the pursuits of sin, and all descriptions of evil, that to them this life is insipid and loathsome. On this account they wait, and long, and pray to be delivered from sin and from evil, as is set forth in the Lord's Prayer: "Thy Kingdom come. Deliver us from evil." Are we true christians, so shall we also pray from the depths of our hearts. And if we do not pray that prayer from our souls, and with all earnestness, we are not yet proper christians.

And as our proper prayer is, so must certainly our feelings and practice be, contemplating these signs, however awful, with satisfaction and longing for what they foretell, as Christ exhorts: "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up." He does not say: "Tremble and be afraid; or cast down your heads;" for that which cometh is what we have so earnestly besought. Is it our soul-felt desire to be freed from sin, from death, from hell, then we must needs covet this coming above all things, and love it. Thus also says St. Paul (2 Tim. 4: 8): "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." But what will he give to them that hate and shun that appearing? Beyond question, he will consign them to perdition as his enemies. And in Titus 2: 13, we read: "We should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." So in Luke 12: 36, also: "Be ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord, when he will return from the wedding."

Those, however, who are frightened, and would not that Christ should come, what mean they when they pray, "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done; Deliver us from evil?" Do they not lie to God before his very face, to their own condemnation? Are they not striving against the will of God, who desires that day for the redemption of his people? There is, therefore, necessity for great carefulness, that there may be no hatred, dislike, or dread of that day found in us, for such trepidation is an unfavorable symptom, and appertains to the unrenewed and lost, whose hard heads and obdurate hearts need to be shaken and broken with such shocks and terrors, that they may reform. But to believers that day must be comforting and precious. To them it is to be the day of highest joy and security, just as it shall be to the unbelieving the day of their highest terror and curse. It is also ever so in this life, that gospel truth is to the good most precious, and to the evil most hateful. And why should believers fear, and not be exceeding glad, seeing that their trust is upon Christ, that the Judge is coming for their redemption, and that this is their portion?—Prophetic Times.

LIFE IN THE FUTURE.

There is life in the future for thee, brother;
There is life in the future for thee;
Though death's gloomy shadows encircle thee round,
There is life in the future for thee.

CHORUS.—A home in the kingdom we see,
And a life in the future for thee;
A home in the kingdom we see,
And a life in the future for thee.

Oh, 'twas matchless, ineffable love, brother,
That purchased on Calvary's tree,
With the blood of the just, this unspeakable gift—
This life in the future for thee.

Christ is the great fountain of life, brother,
And faith brings its waters to me;
Thou hast eaten the bread that from heaven came down,
There is life in the future for thee.

What matters earth's sadness and toil, brother,
If we but that future life see?
There'll be ample time for rejoicing and rest;
There is life in the future for thee.

Then cling with an unyielding grasp, brother,
By the strong hand of faith to life's tree;
Though death shall his own lawful captives retain,
There is life in the future for thee.

THOUGHTS UPON BAPTISM.

My attention has recently been called with renewed interest to an examination of this subject, as connected with God's own arrangement for salvation, as revealed in the Scriptures of truth; and as the testimony has come up in rather a new light, I take the liberty of writing it out for the Crisis, with the hope that some may be aided in their investigations of this deeply interesting subject.

I am free to admit there is no virtue in water, in and of itself, to cleanse the heart, but there is virtue in obedience; for we read that Christ has become "the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; and that the "willing and obedient" are to "eat of the fruit of the land." A willing heart is first necessary, which naturally leads to obedience, the same as faith leads to works. Both are essential to salvation.

When Christ was about leaving the world, he said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Belief first, and baptism second, and the result of belief. This order was observed by the apostles in all their ministrations; and thus an example is given to the church for all subsequent time, and is in exact harmony with the teachings of the Scriptures.

We will now introduce a familiar illustration. A couple are engaged to be married. First, their love is placed upon each other, which leads, secondly, to the making of the marriage contract, and thirdly, to its consummation. The second and third steps are the result of the first, and work no change in the hearts or affections of the parties, that being a prior work. But in taking the third step, a very great change takes place in the relation the parties sustain towards each other. By that last act they become husband and wife, in the sight of God and man; and the bride takes upon her legally the name of the bridegroom, and becomes an inheritor of his property, and they twain become one flesh. If they omit the last step, and assume the connubial relation at the second stage, all would hold them to be adulterers. Their plea of sincere love and good intentions would not screen them, neither would the plea of ignorance. Now if I have a right apprehension of the subject, this, in all its parts, is a correct parallel of the christian's life to his full union with Christ, as follows:

1st. Christ has manifested his love to us, and invites us by the gospel to become his upon the terms he himself has pointed out. 2d. We accept of those invitations, and reciprocate his love by giving our hearts to him, and resolve to become his for time and eternity, by a hearty submission to his will. At which point the Savior meets us, and lifts upon us the light of his countenance, and imparts some tokens of his gracious love to our hearts. We then, for the first time, begin to feel the blessed assurance, that we are indeed Christ's, and Christ is ours, and are blessed more, perhaps, than at any other point of our christian experience. This we call conversion.

Up to this point (thank God), nearly all christians are agreed; and from this epoch date the beginning of their christian experience. But, sad to say, multitudes who have reached this point there end their experience. A large proportion, however, begin to reason on this wise: "There is no virtue in water to cleanse the heart (which is already right in the sight of God), and I believe a few drops are just as good as an ocean; and besides this, I was sprinkled in infancy, and the church calls that baptism; and the Bible enjoins but one baptism. I will therefore confess Christ by joining myself with his body, the church, and thus consummate the good-begun work."

If this is God's revealed plan, then all who thus do are right. If it is not his plan, I can see no escape from the declaration of Christ, who says, "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." The sanction of all the ecclesiastics of the world, aside from the sure "word," can avail nothing with God. Let us see what God hath said concerning this matter.

Christ said (as before quoted), "He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved."

We read in Acts 15: 14, that Christ has visited "the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." In other portions, we learn that the apostles baptized believers (only) into Christ, into his name; that this people are his peculiar treasure, "members of his body," are "married to Christ." That they are to be "the Bride, the Lamb's wife;" and that ere long his weary bride will be gathered to "the marriage supper," and be presented by him, on the great coronation day of the King of kings and Lords of lords, before his Father and his holy angels.

O think, beloved in the Lord, will he present any on that august day who has failed to take upon him "his name," in the manner he himself has prescribed? His bride will then be clothed upon with linen clean and white, which is declared to be "the righteousness of saints." If any should perchance get there, not having on that wedding garment, they would, at the inquiry of the Master, become "speechless," and be cast out and condemned as adulterers, as surely as we should condemn the couple who went to living together as husband and wife without being lawfully married. If we will make the crown sure, all those holy resolutions made at our first espousal must be reduced to practice.

The reason why many are constantly referring back to their first experience as evidence that they are christians, is that they have failed to take the succeeding steps in the divine life, and hence have no increased evidence, either from the word or the Spirit, that they are walking in that straight and narrow road (marked out in the Bible) that leads to life. A correct baptism is essential to a right beginning, but that is not all; we must be constantly progressing, both by a correct faith and by well doing, and then we shall know that we are Christ's, and Christ is ours. Any thing short of this actual knowledge is unsatisfactory to the true christian.

In conclusion, I will say, if it was becoming in Christ to fulfill all righteousness and be baptized of John in Jordan, is it not becoming in us to imitate his example, and obey his most positive command? If we fail thus to do, we certainly shall always lack the evidence we so much need, that we are accepted of him. We want the living word as well as the Spirit to witness with our spirits that we are his. If recorded testimony, made by proper authority, is the best evidence to prove legitimacy in human courts, so also will the divine record be best testimony at the bar of God to prove that we have been legally married to Christ. Therefore let us all be sure we have it. Amen.

WHERE DO SOULS COME FROM?

It is a very easy matter to assert that the human soul is immortal, but a little harder one to give its origin. It is obvious, however, that if it is an intelligent entity, existing independent of the body, it must be either "pre-existent," "transmitted," or "created at birth." No other position can be taken, as all must admit. Which of the above will the advocates of "soul-entityism" choose? Either will involve them in difficulties from which it will be hard to extricate themselves. For if the soul is pre-existent—as a distinct entity, why do we not call to mind some things which transpired prior to being imprisoned in the body? Why, we might inquire, were we ever thus imprisoned in tenements of clay? Why were we not left to range the blissful fields of God's unbounded empire, instead of being encumbered with these old earthly clods? Would it not be unjust in Jehovah to thus confine an innocent soul? and then, if peradventure through the weakness of the flesh it occupies it blunders along "a few brief years in carelessness and security," doom it to eternal woe?

And not only this, but if the soul is pre-existent it favors the idea of transmigration! For if it pre-existed in any form, who knows but what it occupied another body? And if it did, how natural to suppose it might another still, after leaving this. Yes, dear reader, you, if this theory be true, may in a short time find yourself crawling around in the body of a woodchuck!

But if it is not pre-existent, it is either "created at birth," or "transmitted"; and if transmitted it is divisible, and if divisible it is destructible, hence not immortal. And if created at birth, then Jehovah must be daily creating souls, not only for legitimate children, but also for illegitimates. Thus is the blasphemous charge brought against God of sanctioning adultery. And not only this, but as it is estimated that "over eighty thousand children are born daily," and contended that "over half the human race will ultimately be damned," Jehovah must be daily employed in creating over forty thousand candidates for hell fire!! Who dare occupy such a position? Who dare thus slander the Supreme Ruler of the universe? And yet those who claim that the soul, as a distinct entity, is created at birth, do occupy just such a position, and do thus slander God, even though through ignorance.

The position I shall take is, that the soul is transmitted; not as a superadded entity, but as a soul—a Bible soul! In Ex. 1: 5, we read, "All the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls." This proves beyond all cavil that the soul is transmitted; and, as we have already remarked, if transmitted it is divisible, and if divisible it is destructible; and this is also easily proved by the same kind of evidence: "Save me from them that persecute me, and deliver me; lest they tear my soul (not body) like a lion, rending it in pieces."—Ps. 7: 2. If the soul were indestructible, it could not be torn to pieces. How would one look trying to tear in pieces an indivisible, indestructible ghost? Josh. 11: 11. "And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them; there were none left to breathe." Joshua must have understood the tactics of ghost fighting, if he smote indivisible ghosts with a sword. This not only proves the destructibility of the soul, but it also proves that it lives by breathing; and this is in accordance with Gen. 2: 7.—"And the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground, breathed into him (a ghost man?) the breath of life, and man became (what he was not before) a living soul." He was not a living soul until the breath of life entered his nostrils; and how natural then it is to suppose that he will not be a living soul after the breath of life leaves him.

Now, we again ask, which position shall we take—that the soul is pre-existent, created at birth, or transmitted? We feel that we are ready to answer: it is transmitted (Ex. 1: 4), therefore destructible (Ps. 7: 7: Joshua 6: 11). And if this evidence can be relied upon, the doctrine of immortal-soulism sinks forever into dark oblivion, where the first propagator of it will soon follow. It has no foundation in the Bible, reason, or philosophy, but is the corner stone of nearly every false system of religion that has ever contaminated the world. It is the fruit of Satan's lie; a bold issue against Jehovah's declaration—"The soul that sinneth it shall die." Death is a cessation of life in unspeakable agony, or any thing short of extinction of being; and the individual who tries to controvert it is replying against God.

Beware, therefore, how you try to ignore the plain declarations of the transcript of his holy will—"The wages of sin is death"; and John foresaw a time when "there will be no more death"; but if the wicked were to die the death that never dies, they would be dying eternally. John doubtless foresaw the time when the old mother of harlots would meet her final doom, and with her go the filthy rags so dearly cherished by her apostate daughters.—Prophetic Watchman.

COMMITTING SCRIPTURE TO MEMORY.

NUMBER THREE.

THE WRITER'S EXPERIENCE IN SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES BY COMMITTING PORTIONS OF THEM TO MEMORY.

"The Bible! 'tis a book divine,
Where heavenly truth and mercy shine,
And wisdom speaks in every line."

Soon after the Lord in mercy opened our eyes to behold spiritual things, we commenced committing to memory portions of the inspired volume, carefully, prayerfully, and exactly, word for word, without the slightest deviation from the written letter. First, we committed the Sermon on the Mount, the most practical part of the epistles of Paul, Peter, James and John; of the Psalms, Proverbs, and the holy prophets. We then committed the whole of Matthew's gospel, whole of Psalms, and whole chapters in the writings of Solomon, and of the prophets. Likewise, whole chapters in Romans, Corinthians, Galatians, James and John, 1st and 2d Peter, and the letters addressed to Timothy and Titus by Paul. This committing to memory portions of the blessed Bible, was made a daily business. On some days only one verse was committed, on others, two, three, four, six, eight, or ten. The passages committed in the morning were often repeated during the day, going out and rising up. While occupied in our usual avocations, or business transactions, these golden gems were turned over and over, again and again, meditated upon and brought home to our heart. The glorious results of this persevering in meditating and treasuring up these "apples of gold in pictures of silver," are inexpressible. We mention only a few of these blessings.

1. This hiding the word of God in our heart, by these daily committals, assisted us in prayer, not only in using scriptural language, in approaching the "GREAT I AM," but, as whole Psalms and other parts of the Bible, were made up of prayer entirely, we could, when in a state of spiritual aridity, and when the heavens were brass over us, and our words seemed to rise no higher than our head, then take the words of the Holy Spirit's dictation, and lift up holy hands without wrath or doubting, and soon feel our hearts kindle with true, spiritual devotion. Often, when clouds and darkness were thus around us, the healing beams of the sun of righteousness would dawn.

2. This method of examining the Bible by careful and prayerful committal of its pages, assisted us very much in ordering our conversation, at home and abroad, in the social circle and around the table. A verse or two, taken from this pure fountain, was often introduced on these occasions for elucidation and edifying conversation. Moreover, it aided us equally in giving a happy turn to social or family interviews, when, otherwise, precious, golden moments would have been occupied on things of a trifling nature, or commonplace, or on things of little or no profit. Furthermore, when conversation was likely to flag, a passage from this Lighthouse would be introduced for mutual edification and spiritual enlargement.

3. In our missionary trips from house to house, in cities and villages, this familiarity with holy inspiration was of special advantage; also around sick-beds, on occasions when the Bible could not easily be come at, we could then have recourse to this stock on hand, treasured in our memory, and repeat verbatim such passages as would comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, administer consolation to the sick and dying.

4. In teaching Sabbath schools, Bible classes, also in attending meetings for prayer, conference, testimony, and on more public ministrations, this fund of holy "writ" stored for future use, we found incalculably beneficial. Thy word,

"Where'er it enters in,
Is sharper than a two-edged sword
To slay the man of sin."

5. In writing for the press, or otherwise, the same blessed results were experienced as when imparting oral instruction.

6. In severe temptation we could apply this "sword of the Spirit" skillfully in warding off the fiery darts of the enemy; from the fact of our having so many of the great and precious promises before our mind's eye. Our blessed Lord set an example here, when tempted by Satan, after his long fasting of forty days. What did he say? "Get thee hence, Satan, for it is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve."—Matt. 4: 10. Mark well the purport, "It is written."

7. This hiding God's truth thus, effectually destroyed, and killed out forever, the least and last tendency to silly, nonsensical chit-chat, foolish talking and jesting, and things of little or no profit, so common with many church members. This attempt at witticisms to excite vain laughter, eats out the life and essence of true piety. Whenever you see persons given to light, trifling, or frivolous conversation, like the crackling of thorns under a pot, take it for granted such individuals are very superficial in Bible theology, and know but little, if any thing, of the marrow and fatness of the gospel.

8. Another exceedingly important item in thus bringing home the spirit of the Bible to our inmost soul, was, it killed, or destroyed, entirely and forever, all relish for insipid, frothy, and ephemeral publications—the popular periodicals of the day, the fashion-plate magazines and comicals, the multitudinous mixed up things of the bitter and the sweet, God and Mammon, Christ and Belial, so frequently advertised and puffed by religious editors! When once the truths of the Bible have taken firm root in the heart, and become more precious than gold, sweeter also than honey and the honey-comb, these sugar-coated poisons, snakes in the grass, satanic transformations, appear disgusting and heart-sickening, and are repudiated, as the froth and scum of the pit, fit neither for the land nor the dung-hill. Whenever you see persons poring over these "literary serpents" with evident delight, you know certainly that they have not yet learned the first principles of true discipleship.

"Fill first the bushel with the wheat,
With wisdom—food for souls to eat;
Then chaff, the fiction of the day,
Will find no place, and blow away."

9. This investigating the writings of holy men inspired, opened our eyes to see the vanity and sinfulness of worldly conformity in dress, equipage, church building, the pride of aristocracy, the uniting of Christ with Belial in matrimonial connections, religious festivals, and secret, oath-bound societies. When you see the professed disciples of Jesus following the wake of worldly popularity, receiving honor from one another, rest assured that God's word has not done its perfect work.

10. This method of searching the Scripture, with accompanying influences of the Holy Spirit, eradicated entirely and forever a sectarian spirit, and the spirit of caste. We were led, also, to hate oppression in every form, as God hates it, and as every holy being must hate it. Every slaveholder has an abolition lecturer within himself, in his own soul, that says to him in the language of Cowper:

"I would not have a slave to till my ground;
To carry me—to fan me while I sleep,
And tremble when I wake, for all the wealth
That sinews bought and sold have ever earned."

11. Again, this memorizing, treasuring up daily the word of life, led us into the secret of the higher christian walks—"Holiness to the Lord,"—to embrace the doctrine of perfect love, that casteth out all fear. We saw clearly from the many passages committed on the assurance of faith, that here was hope, well-grounded, immovable, for every one, on the altar Christ Jesus consecrated; that it was our privilege and duty to "rise and shine," put on the whole armor of God, be strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, to be filled with faith and the Holy Spirit, with all the fullness of God, able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, length, depth, and height of redeeming and sanctifying grace, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth all knowledge. "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord."

Beloved reader, are not the blessings here enumerated, resulting from treasuring up God's truth in the heart by committing portions of it daily, worthy of your immediate, prayerful consideration? Can you hesitate a moment from following on to know the Lord, in this way, till the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your heart? "Knowing this first, that no prophecy of the Scripture is of any private interpretation; for the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—2 Pet. 1: 20, 21.

THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

A letter has been received from Bro. Leslie, from which we make the following extract. It shows an encouraging state of things at the Mission, and gives hope of good resulting from our work there. Pray for the missionaries, brethren. They are in an enemy's land, working for Jesus; far from home and friends; in the midst of the sickly season, and, at the last accounts, suffering from the effects of their excessive and incessant labors. They need your prayers. God give them health, strength and blessing, and add many gems of Ethiopia to their crown of rejoicing. W. B. H.

Bro. Herron:—Your welcome letter reached me to-day. I wish it had come a week earlier. . . .

God is doing a work here which rejoices our hearts. Some will be saved by our coming here. We have begun right, and the fruits of our labors have already appeared. Some are turning from the world to Christ, and from the service of Satan to that of God. Here are found true mourners, who are to be comforted.

Since the close of our school, three additional meetings each week are held. A female prayer-meeting, in charge of Sr. Butler, on Wednesday afternoon, is well attended, and its results thus far have been blessed. On Tuesday and Friday evenings we have prayer and conference meetings; a part of the time, however, being occupied by us in exposition of the Scriptures.

Sabbath morning, at sunrise, there is held a prayer-meeting in the chapel. This continues about an hour and a half. During the forenoon, from nine until twelve, is held the Sabbath School. At three in the afternoon, preaching. In the evening is our great meeting. This is for the exposition of Scripture, and enforcing the great truths of the present day upon the people. The power of the Spirit is truly felt and seen in these meetings. Last Sabbath evening twelve arose to be especially remembered in the prayers of God's people, and one sorrowing heart cried aloud for mercy. It was an awakening time.

During the vacation we shall visit among the people, distribute clothing, and attend to the sick who are poor. Whatever God has for us to do or to receive from his hand as gifts of his grace, we shall do and accept with cheerful hearts. His glory shall be our aim. As he blesses our labors we shall rejoice.

I hope to be able to communicate more with you and the friends of the mission at large, than it has been possible for me to do during the last two months of entire devotion to the work demanded here. I trust to have another teacher and missionary before the summer shall close. The friends must send another true, devoted heart, who will assist Sr. Butler in her part of the great work here. She cannot do it all; no one can do it, and two will find more than they can perform. We must be assisted in every way, or we cannot long go on in the work. Brethren and sisters must not forget our necessities. Their supply is all we ask. We must have help of every sort. We are in an enemy's land, though God is our friend. They would take all from us, and give us nothing.

There are no friends here who can assist us in the least, but many whom it is our duty to help, and whom we must help. This cannot be avoided, if we would do them good. Giving and helping these poor ones, is the first step in winning them to us and to Christ. We show them that we love them by acts of help. Words do not prove our love for them. Simply pointing out to them the direction and the way to go, will not cause them to walk in it. We must take them by the hand, help them up, and lead them; often administering to their physical wants. Few of the friends of the mission have understood this part of the work here. Therefore we need means aside from our own support to carry on the great work among the poor people. Our own means must at times go in this way, to accomplish the end for which we are here. This embarrasses us; but giving cannot be avoided among this people. He that does not give, cannot gain the confidence of this people; and, if he does not secure this, he can accomplish nothing among them.

I have heretofore spoken of the wisdom required to deal successfully with this people. I am more and more impressed with the necessity of it. The command of Christ, "Be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves," was never more binding, or its observance more necessary on the part of his servants among any people than it is ours among this. Prejudice against us exists in the hearts of both blacks and whites here; and this must be destroyed or removed, especially from the minds of the former, or no good can be done them by us. This is a work to be done here which but few at the North understand. This has been one great part of our labor up to the present time, and still must continue to be. The hearts and ears of this people must be got, or they cannot be saved through our labors; and these can only be obtained by the most persevering efforts and judicious course. This is a very hard field in which to labor; none can be more so; but the soil, if faithfully cultivated, will bring forth a harvest sufficient to pay the hire of the laborers, with a surplus for the husbandman.

Let us be faithful in laboring and giving, and so in the harvest we shall want for nothing. Ever earnestly yours, I. I. Leslie.

For the World's Crisis.

"SPIRITUALISM UNVEILED," BY MILES GRANT.

This work, recently published by Bro. Grant, should have an extensive circulation. Works on Spiritualism have been multiplied within a few years; some in defense of the abominable system, and some in opposition to it. But few of those who have written against it understand its nature. Mr. Grimes thinks it is simply animal magnetism, the whole manifestation being produced through the nerves; and the facts communicated through the medium from those who know them, as mental phenomena; the medium being the "medium" simply of those present. This theory is unsatisfactory. It does not reach the vital points in the case. It is too superficial.

Bro. Grant has given a great amount of attention to the subject; having collected testimony as to the workings of the system, its doctrines, and moral influences, from those who know it best; and taking a truly gospel stand-point, has really "unveiled" this error, shown it to be the work of the demons, hideous in its ugliness, and strong with Satanic influence; the great power of the last days. It should have an extensive circulation. Buy it and scatter it among those who are in danger of its influence. For sale at the Crisis office. Price $1.00 per hundred; 15 cents single. L. C. McKinstry.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Aug. 1, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Good Fractional Currency.

In sending postal currency, be careful to see that it is good before sending it. Very much of this fractional currency now in circulation is counterfeit; and every week we are receiving worthless notes of this description, which we are obliged to return to the sender.

☞ BILLS! BILLS!!

We shall send out bills of indebtedness soon to those who are owing the office on book and Crisis accounts. We should be glad to be saved that trouble, by a prompt and immediate remittance from all who are in arrears. Shall we hear from such at once?

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

Late advices from Europe inform us that there is no hope of peace at present. Russia is calling in all her soldiers who have been on furlough, and every day sending troops to the frontier. The proposed armistice between Austria, Prussia and Italy has proved a failure. The Russians and Italians are urging forward their preparations for fighting the Austrians.

All accounts show that the war in Europe is to be one of gigantic magnitude, involving all the leading powers in Europe. Our impression is that it may be the last gathering of the nations before the second advent of Christ. At its close (should it close,) Napoleon may call a world's peace convention, and "when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them."—1 Thess 5: 3. He is aiming to bring the world into peace, and be crowned as the great peace-maker, having all nations under his control. He wishes to be able to say to all, you must not fight, and thus become the popular head of the people. We are looking for new developments in this direction. He expects a great harvest from the present conflict. Already the king of Italy has offered the island of Sardinia to Napoleon, if he will help liberate Italy.

A grand crisis is at hand, as all careful observers admit. If it were not for the prophetic light that now shines so brilliantly, we might be left to join the scoffer, and say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" As it is, we should have to turn infidel before we could doubt that the coming of Jesus is near at hand.

We have arrived where the church needs to be on a constant watch, lest she fall into some of the snares of Satan. The most cunning wiles are laid for us, to draw us back into the spirit of the world, and to persuade us to adopt its foolish customs and sinful practices. May the Lord help the reader to become dead to the world, to be "pure in heart," all ready for the coming of the Son of man.

THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

Monday morning, July 30th, we have just received the cheering intelligence that the Atlantic telegraph cable is successfully laid, and in good working order.

The first telegram is as follows:—"A treaty of peace has been signed between Austria and Prussia."

KIND WORDS.

How pleasant are kind words; indeed, we think no others do any good. He who speaks kindly, takes much more comfort himself, besides making those happy around him. Kind words, when compared with bitter, are as sunshine after a storm,—how cheering. We wish to thank the many who send us words of comfort and sympathy. If it were not for these, the burden would sometimes seem heavy to be borne; but with so many to give refreshing aid by prayer and kind words, what would otherwise be a toilsome task, now becomes a pleasant duty.

A preacher who sends an article says:—"Should you not see fit to give it a place in the Crisis, all shall be as pleasant between you and me as though you had published."

Although the following is from a private correspondence, we trust the writer will forgive us for giving it to our readers. We would say he is one of our excellent contributors.

"Dear Bro. Grant:—Many people fail to realize the magnitude of the labors and trials of an editor. And the editor of a religious paper has peculiar trials and perplexities, which those who edit secular papers escape. Contributors are often unreasonable, and sometimes ungrateful. An article is sent to the editor for publication which has some good in it, and some things which would be a disgrace to the writer, and no credit to the paper in which it is published. Here arises a perplexing problem for the editor to solve. The article will not do to publish in its present form, yet if the good can be separated from the bad, it might do very well. But perhaps the writer would be offended at seeing his article altered, even if the alteration was a decided improvement. And quite likely he would be displeased if the article was not published at all. So it is a thankless task for the editor to re-write the article, and make it fit to publish, yet he sometimes does this, and receives a storm of abuse for his pains. The position of an editor, especially of such a paper as the Crisis, is so different from that of people in general, that only those who know something about it by experience can even partially sympathize—that is, enter in to the case understandingly, and feel as he feels, or even guess how he feels.

It is often the case that an esteemed friend, or valued and beloved contributor, sends an article that contains an unguarded expression, or an apparent blunder, or possibly an unkind cut, or personal allusion, which the editor withholds; and in this case the writer owes a debt of gratitude to the editor for his kindness. But like the ten lepers, of whom but one gave thanks,) so those who are under such obligations to Bro. Grant for his kindness, either forget to thank him, or do worse, and actually abuse him for his doing the very best that, in such a case, could be done.

But if I go on to specify a tithe of an editor's trials, I shall make this letter too long. I wish to do as did the one who returned to give thanks. I have been an occasional writer for the press for more than twenty years, and have written quite often for the Crisis during the past two years. And in a number of instances I have noticed slight alterations in what I have written, and thankfully acknowledge the improvement. We who write for the Crisis, are like those who send rough timber to the master builder. If he hews, and saws, and planes, and fits the timber we send, we should not take offence, but should rather thank him, that he has taken such pains to render our materials both useful and ornamental."

POLICY OF NAPOLEON.

When Napoleon promised to withdraw his troops from Mexico, we were satisfied that his word could not be trusted. If we judge of his future course by his past, we may be assured that he will not give up Mexico; for wherever he gains power, he is sure to have some pretext for keeping it. He is free to make promises, and as free to break them.

The following shows Napoleon's true policy relative to Mexico:—

New York, July 24. Gen. Sheridan reports to the army headquarters that detachments of French troops are still landing at Vera Cruz. He says that his observations convince him that Napoleon is not sincere in the promise to evacuate Mexico.

Letters from the City of Mexico contain intelligence that Maximilian has signed a treaty with M. Dano, the French Minister, with the following provisions:

Seven thousand French troops will remain in Mexico under Maximilian's service; the Mexican flag is to support them for five years; France will furnish besides, to the Maximilian government, $50,000 every month for five years, to meet Maximilian's civil expenses; Maximilian is to give as security for the money thus advanced, and other claims, the railroad from Vera Cruz to Mexico; Maximilian's revenues are to be collected by French officers."

We apprehend the United States will soon be in a situation more critical than at any time during the last few years. Napoleon is evidently laying plans to bring America in the position of Austria, in relation to himself,—where he can be the dictator.

INQUIRY.

Bro. Grant:—As I am but a young pilgrim in the Advent faith, and do not understand all points of the faith as clearly as I could wish, I would like to have you tell me, through the columns of the Crisis, if you understand the Scriptures to teach that the righteous dead are to be raised, and reign with Christ on the earth a thousand years prior to the resurrection of the wicked dead?

Freedom, N. H. Chas. H. Hurd.

We see no chance to come to any other conclusion, if we follow the plain statement which Jesus caused "his angel" to make to John, in his last revelation to man, when he said:—

"I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

We do not see how the point could be made any plainer than it is in the foregoing scripture.

FROM BRO. A. J. TUTTLE.

Bro. Grant:—I am a member of the Baptist church in this place, but it has been over a year since I began to believe in the destruction of the wicked, the sleep of the dead, and the immediate coming of our blessed Savior. But this is hard doctrine to my Baptist brethren; and, of course, I have a great deal to contend with, as this is not popular doctrine here.

But there are a few passages of Scripture that trouble me. Will you explain them to me, so that I can give a reason of my hope?—2 Cor. 5: 1. Don't Paul speak as though he would occupy that building out of this earthly house? also in verses two and four does he not carry the idea there was something that was going to leave this tabernacle, and occupy the building of God?

6th verse. How is it that we, when at home in the body, are absent from the Lord? 8th verse. What is it that is absent from the body and present with the Lord? It seems that there was a preference to be absent from the body, and be present with the Lord.

Matt. 8: 29,—what is the time here spoken of? If it was the last day, how were they then to be tormented? I take the Crisis, and am well pleased with its doctrine, and I pray God to bless every effort made to bring men to the true light of the gospel.

Yours truly, Andrew I. Tuttle.

East Longmeadow, Mass.

The scripture referred to, with its context, reads as follows:—"While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven; if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the self same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord; (for we walk by faith, not by sight.) We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him."

It will be observed that Paul is contrasting "temporal" "things" with "eternal." We see nothing in the first five verses to favor the idea that troubles our inquirer.

Wakefield, an able translator, renders this as follows:—"For we know, that, if this tent, wherein we dwell, which is fixed on the ground, be taken to pieces, we have a divine building, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For, indeed, in this tent we sigh with an earnest desire of clothing ourselves with that heavenly habitation, if indeed, when we have stripped ourselves, we shall not be found naked. For, truly, we who are in this tent, groan with the weight thereof; not that we wish so much to put off this, as to put on another; that mortality may be swallowed up in life."

In Isa. 40: 22, we read as follows:—"It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in." Paul is contrasting the present temporary arrangement with the "eternal"; the mortal with the immortal. Jesus says:—"In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 2, 3. In Rev. 21: 1–3, John says:—And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

Now let us put these things together, and see if we cannot understand Paul in 2 Cor. 5: 1–4. He says, when writing to the Corinthians, "We know that, if our earthly house [not houses] of this tabernacle [not these tabernacles] were dissolved, we have a building [not buildings] of God, a house [not houses] not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this [not these] we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house [not houses] which is from heaven."

This shows that there is but one "house," "tabernacle," or "building," for the whole church; hence the "tabernacle" does not mean the physical body of Paul or any one else; but "a building of God," "a house not made with hands." This is evidently the one which the Savior calls my Father's house,"—the city that Abraham looked for, "whose builder and maker is God." Paul says, "For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come."—Heb. 13: 14. This is the one John saw in vision, when upon the isle of Patmos, which he calls "the tabernacle of God."

Paul's mind was directed to the time when this present "temporal" state of things, which is compared to a "tent," "tabernacle," or "house," shall be "dissolved," as declared by Peter (2 Pet. 3: 11–12); and in view of the dissolution of the present "temporal" state of things, he is directed to the "eternal" one, when "the tabernacle of God" shall come. At that time "mortality" will "be swallowed up of life."

It looks absurd to us that the "house," "tabernacle," or "building of God, . . . not made with hands," signifies a physical body for us to move into at death. If this were so, what should we do with that body when this one rises from the dead? Each person would then have two bodies.

In this present state, the Lord "stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in." But when "dissolved," then we are to have the "eternal" "building," "house," or "tabernacle." While here in "this tabernacle," "we groan," earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." In other words, we are waiting for the "New Jerusalem" to come down as the capitol of the coming kingdom.

We now pass to notice what Paul says about being absent from "the body":—"Whilst we are at home in the body [not our bodies], we are absent from the Lord." Here is only one body for the whole. Christ is called "the head of the body, the church."—Col. 1: 18. "The body, the church," is here on earth; and the Lord, or "the head," has gone away; and while we remain here, "we are absent from the Lord." His Spirit is with us, but he himself is absent; and will be till his second coming.

Paul certainly used figures in the preceding verses, when speaking about being "clothed" and "unclothed"; for he does not mean garments of cloth. We think he uses "body" as a figure to represent the church. We will let him explain himself. "So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another."—Rom. 12: 5. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."—1 Cor. 12: 27. "That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel."—Eph. 3: 6. "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Eph. 4: 11, 12. "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church," which is the body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all."—Eph. 1: 22, 23. "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence."—Col. 1: 18. "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my body's sake, which is the church."—Col. 1: 24.

Notwithstanding Paul's love for the church, "the body of Christ," he was "willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord," "the head of the body."

The passage referred to in Matt. 8: 29, with its context, reads as follows:—"And when he was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes, there met him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" The time to attend to the demons is not till after Christ comes the second time; but it seems they thought from some circumstances that the Lord was going to take them in hand then.

At the "last day," when the Lord comes in glory, the time will have arrived for their judgment; at which time there is to be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, in which these demons must evidently have a share, when they look forward to their coming destruction and death, which will be their punishment.

NAPOLEON.

When speaking of the state of things in Europe, as connected with the war and Napoleon, the Boston Journal says:—

"What will be the next stage of affairs no one can conjecture. . . . Louis Napoleon has not gone off augmenting his power in Europe till he has become the first ruler of modern times, to have his offers now slighted with impunity; nor will his prestige stand such a shock. He will probably betray no sign of annoyance for the present, but we may be sure that there is 'a rod in pickle' for somebody."

The London Saturday Review says:—"What will happen next is exceedingly doubtful, unless terms of peace can be at once arranged, and it is by no means easy to say what terms of peace can be possible at present. Italy might be quieted with Venetia, if the Emperor of the French is willing to let her have Venetia; but that is as yet by no means certain."

Says the London Times:—"Sooner or later, therefore, without sacrificing a single soldier or imposing the slightest burden on France, the French Emperor will probably find himself again the real arbiter of Europe. It is a position which a lofty ambition would disdain to abuse."

When speaking of the present condition of Europe, the Halifax Sun says:—"The extent and durance of the conflict is but a matter of conjecture to the ablest minds, for the dispute embraces so many ramifications and may reawaken so many memories which had better be forgotten, that the State or Kingdom will be happy which escapes, with even but partial shipwreck, from the dreadful vortex of the impending strife."

We may be sure that Napoleon will let no opportunity slip for adding as much to his power as possible. He is aiming to make all nations his allies or his subjects.

WHAT OTHERS THINK OF US.

It is often gratifying to human nature to know what our neighbors think of us. We clipped the following from the Banner of Light, the leading Spiritualist paper in the East, and published in Boston. The Investigator is known as "the Infidel paper" denying that there is any God.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

This Second Advent sheet, edited by Rev. Eld. Grant, is continually filled with low slang against Spiritualism. Its attacks are generally so puerile that we seldom notice them in these columns. But our talented neighbor, the Investigator, (a liberal and independent sheet,) does sometimes condescend to show up the miserable fanatic of the Crisis with a keen pen. Here is a specimen:

"The World's Crisis," a Second Advent paper, is fanatically furious and even frantic in denouncing the supposed monstrosities of Spiritualism. But what, pray, is the Rev. Elder of the "Crisis" doing, and what has he been doing for the last twenty odd years? Preaching and publishing that Jesus is to come immediately, right away, this afternoon, to burn up the world, in order that he may save a set of poor demented lunatics, who have got the foolish whim into their heads—which don't seem capable of holding anything else—that they are the especial favorites of Heaven, and every body else is to sizzle in a thundering great fire until there is not as much left of them as you can put in your eye. And the teachers of such miserable, wretched, crazy twaddle, has the impudence and the arrogance to charge and rebuke others for their supposed humbugs? How applicable to this Second Advent Elder are those sensible words of Jesus—"First cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull the mote out of thy brother's eye"!

For the World's Crisis.

A GLORIOUS ANTICIPATION.

There is much in the thought of the resurrection that fills the heart with emotions of joy. The other day, in a discussion with a Methodist minister on the state of the dead, he remarked that if he believed he was to remain unconscious between death and the resurrection, he should consider it a great punishment, inflicted by God, to deprive him of existence.

How different is the belief of the saints of God, who by continuance in well-doing are seeking for a glorious immortality. In their corruptible nature they are dependent upon God for existence. But on the contrary, immortal-soul theologists place dependence upon their natures for existence. The resurrection to them is not a real resurrection, but a reunion; to the children of God it is the gate to a glorious eternity.

For Paul "to live is Christ, to die is gain." So with every true child of God. To live is to live for the service of Christ; but to die is to escape the perils, woes, and tribulations of this devil-ruled world.

What is death to the elect of God? It is but to close the eyes to the world and sin, and open them in glory! What is time to the unconscious rest of the dead? In their quiet beds of dust they realize not the flight of time. An age is nothing to them; for in hades they "know not anything."

But, oh, how glorious is the anticipation! When the trumpet shall sound, we shall open our eyes in glorious immortality! The past, with all its suffering, sorrow, and pain and death, will not come into remembrance amid the immortal joys of the New Jerusalem. It would fill my heart with sadness if I thought at death I (as an immaterial being) was to take my flight and there be confined, in view of my reward, till the resurrection. This is taught by many who are unable to evade the word of God, that the saints do not receive their reward before the resurrection.

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,"

It fills my heart with inexpressible joy to anticipate the glories of our immortal home. How I long for the trumpet to sound that will usher us into the full realization of those anticipations! Beloved in the Lord, let us continue in patient well-doing, for our rest will come ere long. W. H. S.

Better than a New Bonnet.

A sister in Michigan writes:—"As our means are quite limited, my husband said we should have to give up the Crisis, as we were taking another paper; but I thought I could not do without the Crisis, so I saved enough to pay for it by not getting a new bonnet. O, how much more pleasure and profit I received in reading it, than I should have received from all the new things which I might desire, but which perish with the using. The Lord is good in giving me the means so that I can have the reading of the best paper in the world."

REPORT OF THE MAINE CENTRAL QUAR. CONFERENCE.

The Maine Central Quarterly Conference commenced, according to notice, at the Town House in Rome, Thursday, June 14th, at five o'clock P. M. We had a social meeting. Interest fair.

Friday, June 15th. Met at nine o'clock for social meeting, which continued through the forenoon. Interest not very good. At one o'clock P. M., preaching by L. L. Howard, from Jude 3,—"Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Bro. Howard spoke nearly an hour, showing who the saints were, what the faith was, and that it embraced the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, and the inheritance of the saints. It was heart-cheering indeed.

Met at 5 o'clock P. M. for prayer and social meeting. We listened to some good exhortations from the brethren and sisters. At the close of the meeting to-day, Bro. Howard stated that Bro. D. M. Hanscomb was very sick, and that it was best to take up a collection for him. Fifteen dollars were contributed, and sent to him. Bro. Hanscomb has since died.

Saturday, June 16th. Met at 8 o'clock for social meeting. Interest not very good. At half-past ten A. M., preaching by Bro. Wm. H. Blaisdell, from Matt. 24: 3. The brother had much liberty in presenting to us the signs of the coming of the Son of man. At 1 P. M. we met again and listened to a sermon from Bro. Charles Parsons, from 1 John 4: 16,—"God is love." The Bro. spoke from a full heart. May his admonition be long remembered. At 5 o'clock P. M., preaching by Bro. H. B. Sevey, from Eph. 4: 4. The brother spoke with much freedom, showing the unity that should exist between the followers of Christ. After the sermon, there were several exhortations, which were not very harmonious. The winds of discord seemed to be let loose. Christ was not much glorified.

Sunday 17th. Prayer meeting at 8 o'clock. Interest good. Twenty-five spoke of their hope, and meant to be better christians. The house not being large enough to hold the congregation, we repaired to the grove, and listened to a sermon by L. L. Howard, from Rev. 7: 1. The discourse was both instructive and encouraging. It was replete in historical facts and dates. In the afternoon, we listened to a very able discourse from Bro. H. B Sevey, from Rev. 6: 7,—"And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see."

After the sermon, the conference chose Bro. H. B. Sevey President, Bro. Wm. A. Knight Secretary. Voted, that a report of this conference be published in the World's Crisis and Herald and Review. Will the latter please copy?

REPORT OF PROGRESS

FROM MAINE TO MASS.

Tuesday, May 15th, we arrived in West Falmouth, Me., where we occupied every evening and one Sabbath preaching the word. We found here a good band of converts who had recently started on the pilgrimage as the fruit of the labors of Brn. York, Wellcome, Goud, and others. They had had the truth preached to them so plainly that they embraced the whole of it at the first; and they were active in all their meetings, talking out their faith in the Lord's coming. Heads of families and children were embraced in this work, in some instances parents and children.

While the work there was in progress, some preaching brethren felt it duty to call at one residence and talk with the family; and as it was Monday morning, found the industrious lady of the house at her wash-tub. They tried to talk with her, but she turned her back upon them. They however delivered their message, feeling that it would not be in vain that they had spoken. Evening came, and the meeting was held. The lady was present, and arose and confessed her sins and determination to serve God, and when the meeting closed went to the brethren and confessed, making thorough work,—that she had treated them shabbily when they came to see her. Some one asked her how she felt when they were talking with her, and she said, "As though I wanted to pound them with my wash-board." But it was the devil's last trial for the victory. She made a full consecration to God, and to-day, with her husband and daughter, is actively engaged in the work of the Lord, and deeply interested in the coming of Jesus.

There were before this work but few in the place who believed in "the advent at hand." They had no meeting-house, so by the leave of the F. W. Baptists the brethren occupied their house.

After spending the Sabbath and one week-evening more, we left for Portland and Westbrook. At the last mentioned place we had a pleasant interview with Bro. Gay at the Westbrook town farm. Bro. Gay is the overseer of the farm the present year, and is doing the poor people good. He labors through the week on the farm, and on the Lord's day goes out to preach in Portland and the surrounding country.

While there we had the opportunity of seeing a man who has been there twelve years, and yet has never spoken a word, although by no means a deaf man. He was found in a barn with both feet so frozen as to require amputation. Where he came from, and whether foreigner or American, is not known. He either cannot or will not speak.

We also had the privilege of holding an interesting "sign language" conversation with a deaf mute, an intelligent young man who lives there. We tried to tell him of the resurrection of the dead; that his friends who were dead were not in heaven, but in the ground; that the dead would be raised and the earth renewed, and the good who loved Jesus would live on it forever. His countenance assumed first a perplexed look, as though it was new doctrine, then he seemed pleased as the truth became more plain to him. Thank God, there will be no deaf mutes there, for "the lame man shall leap as an hart; and the tongue of the dumb shall sing." Glory to God forever, for the blessed state of the saints in the kingdom.

Saturday, May 26th, we were on board Nahum's chariots again, and in due time in Biddeford at our old pilgrim's home with Bro. J. C. Libby. We found the brethren since we left had been engaged in erecting a chapel, having been often obliged to vacate halls where they had been, and after some trouble find another, to leave soon, till at last they had not a convenient place to meet. The chapel is now completed and dedicated. It is just such a house for plainness and simplicity as God's people ought to have. The church is somewhat involved, some three or four hundred, perhaps, and if any of the Lord's stewards have funds to invest to the glory of God, even though but a small amount, they will do good and help one of the noblest, self-sacrificing, struggling churches I know. If any have such means to bestow, I will venture to say that if enclosed and sent to Bro. John C. Libby, Biddeford, Me., it will do good. The chapel is so situated as to get people to hear the truth who otherwise would not.

We spent a pleasant though rainy Sabbath in Biddeford, and proceeded to Dover, where we remained two evenings. Here we met Bro. and Sr. Latham, who are trying to present the truth as God opens the way. Bro. L., like ourself, has merged out of the thicket and fog of old theology, and is now preaching the plain truths of the Bible. He has started to labor in a western field, and is cheerfully recommended to the brethren, and commended to the grace of God. God bless you, Bro. Latham; we will labor on till Jesus comes.

We had a pleasant time in Dover. We met some good children, who feel like holding on to the truth. Among them Bro. Joseph Pinkham, the Lord's minister, who loves the work of preaching a plain, straight gospel. O, how good it is to find in these days men who are God's qualified ministers, who preach not as fearing or pleasing men, but God. We had the privilege while at Dover of hearing some lectures by Bro. Simpson. Not often having the opportunity of hearing preaching, we were pleased to be able to do so. Bro. Simpson is firm in the faith that Jesus will come in 1868, and we hope he will. We cannot see how the time can go beyond that period. How important to be prepared to meet Him when he comes.

Lord's day, June 10th, we preached once more in Haverhill. Found the church in a much better state than when we were last there. We enjoyed a glorious meeting in the evening. God bless the church in Haverhill, and make it "clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." A united church cannot fail to be blessed, and have power wherever it is, for, like a city set on a hill, "it cannot be hid."

After the Sabbath, we went to visit friends in our native town. There are no believers in the coming of Jesus; the only church in the place is a Congregationalist, and there is no sympathy with anything but popular religion and the war spirit. There are a few who love the Lord, though they have not all the light on the coming of the Lord, but they are trying to serve him, and will no doubt be saved when Jesus comes.

We visited Groveland, where some of our early boyhood days were spent. It is near our birthplace, only some three miles away.

THE MEMPHIS MISSION.

A letter has been received from Bro. Leslie, from which we make the following extract. It shows an encouraging state of things at the Mission, and gives hope of good resulting from our work there. Pray for the missionaries, brethren. They are in an enemy's land, working for Jesus; far from home and friends; in the midst of the sickly season, and, at the last accounts, suffering from the effects of their excessive and incessant labors. They need your prayers. God give them health, strength and blessing, and add many gems of Ethiopia to their crown of rejoicing. W. B. H.

Bro. Herron:—Your welcome letter reached me to-day. I wish it had come a week earlier. . . .

God is doing a work here which rejoices our hearts. Some will be saved by our coming here. We have begun right, and the fruits of our labors have already appeared. Some are turning from the world to Christ, and from the service of Satan to that of God. Here are found true mourners, who are to be comforted.

Since the close of our school, three additional meetings each week are held. A female prayer-meeting, in charge of Sr. Butler, on Wednesday afternoon, is well attended, and its results thus far have been blessed. On Tuesday and Friday evenings we have prayer and conference meetings; a part of the time, however, being occupied by us in exposition of the Scriptures.

Sabbath morning, at sunrise, there is held a prayer-meeting in the chapel. This continues about an hour and a half. During the forenoon, from nine until twelve, is held the Sabbath School. At three in the afternoon, preaching. In the evening is our great meeting. This is for the exposition of Scripture, and enforcing the great truths of the present day upon the people. The power of the Spirit is truly felt and seen in these meetings. Last Sabbath evening twelve arose to be especially remembered in the prayers of God's people, and one sorrowing heart cried aloud for mercy. It was an awakening time.

During the vacation we shall visit among the people, distribute clothing, and attend to the sick who are poor. Whatever God has for us to do or to receive from his hand as gifts of his grace, we shall do and accept with cheerful hearts. His glory shall be our aim. As he blesses our labors we shall rejoice.

I hope to be able to communicate more with you and the friends of the mission at large, than it has been possible for me to do during the last two months of entire devotion to the work demanded here. I trust to have another teacher and missionary before the summer shall close. The friends must send another true, devoted heart, who will assist Sr. Butler in her part of the great work here. She cannot do it all; no one can do it, and two will find more than they can perform. We must be assisted in every way, or we cannot long go on in the work. Brethren and sisters must not forget our necessities. Their supply is all we ask. We must have help of every sort. We are in an enemy's land, though God is our friend. They would take all from us, and give us nothing.

There are no friends here who can assist us in the least, but many whom it is our duty to help, and whom we must help. This cannot be avoided, if we would do them good. Giving and helping these poor ones, is the first step in winning them to us and to Christ. We show them that we love them by acts of help. Words do not prove our love for them. Simply pointing out to them the direction and the way to go, will not cause them to walk in it. We must take them by the hand, help them up, and lead them; often administering to their physical wants. Few of the friends of the mission have understood this part of the work here. Therefore we need means aside from our own support to carry on the great work among the poor people. Our own means must at times go in this way, to accomplish the end for which we are here. This embarrasses us; but giving cannot be avoided among this people. He that does not give, cannot gain the confidence of this people; and, if he does not secure this, he can accomplish nothing among them.

I have heretofore spoken of the wisdom required to deal successfully with this people. I am more and more impressed with the necessity of it. The command of Christ, "Be ye therefore wise as serpents and harmless as doves," was never more binding, or its observance more necessary on the part of his servants among any people than it is ours among this. Prejudice against us exists in the hearts of both blacks and whites here; and this must be destroyed or removed, especially from the minds of the former, or no good can be done them by us. This is a work to be done here which but few at the North understand. This has been one great part of our labor up to the present time, and still must continue to be. The hearts and ears of this people must be got, or they cannot be saved through our labors; and these can only be obtained by the most persevering efforts and judicious course. This is a very hard field in which to labor; none can be more so; but the soil, if faithfully cultivated, will bring forth a harvest sufficient to pay the hire of the laborers, with a surplus for the husbandman.

Let us be faithful in laboring and giving, and so in the harvest we shall want for nothing. Ever earnestly yours, I. I. Leslie.

"SPIRITUALISM UNVEILED," BY MILES GRANT.

This work, recently published by Bro. Grant, should have an extensive circulation. Works on Spiritualism have been multiplied within a few years; some in defense of the abominable system, and some in opposition to it. But few of those who have written against it understand its nature. Mr. Grimes thinks it is simply animal magnetism, the whole manifestation being produced through the nerves; and the facts communicated through the medium from those who know them, as mental phenomena; the medium being the "medium" simply of those present. This theory is unsatisfactory. It does not reach the vital points in the case. It is too superficial.

Bro. Grant has given a great amount of attention to the subject; having collected testimony as to the workings of the system, its doctrines, and moral influences, from those who know it best; and taking a truly gospel stand-point, has really "unveiled" this error, shown it to be the work of the demons, hideous in its ugliness, and strong with Satanic influence; the great power of the last days. It should have an extensive circulation. Buy it and scatter it among those who are in danger of its influence. For sale at the Crisis office. Price $1.00 per hundred; 15 cents single. L. C. The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston. Wednesday, Aug. 1, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the Business Agent, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Good Fractional Currency.

In sending postal currency, be careful to see that it is good before sending it. Very much of this fractional currency now in circulation is counterfeit; and every week we are receiving worthless notes of this description, which we are obliged to return to the sender.

☞ BILLS! BILLS!!

We shall send out bills of indebtedness soon to those who are owing the office on book and Crisis accounts. We should be glad to be saved that trouble, by a prompt and immediate remittance from all who are in arrears. Shall we hear from such at once?

THE WAR IN EUROPE.

Late advices from Europe inform us that there is no hope of peace at present. Russia is calling in all her soldiers who have been on furlough, and every day sending troops to the frontier. The proposed armistice between Austria, Prussia and Italy has proved a failure. The Russians and Italians are urging forward their preparations for fighting the Austrians.

All accounts show that the war in Europe is to be one of gigantic magnitude, involving all the leading powers in Europe. Our impression is that it may be the last gathering of the nations before the second advent of Christ. At its close (should it close,) Napoleon may call a world's peace convention, and "when they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them."—1 Thess 5: 3. He is aiming to bring the world into peace, and be crowned as the great peacemaker, having all nations under his control. He wishes to be able to say to all, you must not fight, and thus become the popular head of the people. We are looking for new developments in this direction. He expects a great harvest from the present conflict. Already the king of Italy has offered the island of Sardinia to Napoleon, if he will help liberate Italy.

A grand crisis is at hand, as all careful observers admit. If it were not for the prophetic light that now shines so brilliantly, we might be left to join the scoffer, and say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" As it is, we should have to turn infidel before we could doubt that the coming of Jesus is near at hand.

We have arrived where the church needs to be on a constant watch, lest she fall into some of the snares of Satan. The most cunning wiles are laid for us, to draw us back into the spirit of the world, and to persuade us to adopt its foolish customs and sinful practices. May the Lord help the reader to become dead to the world, to be "pure in heart," all ready for the coming of the Son of man.

THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

Monday morning, July 30th, we have just received the cheering intelligence that the Atlantic telegraph cable is successfully laid, and in good working order.

The first telegram is as follows:—"A treaty of peace has been signed between Austria and Prussia."

KIND WORDS.

How pleasant are kind words; indeed, we think no others do any good. He who speaks kindly, takes much more comfort himself, besides making those happy around him. Kind words, when compared with bitter, are as sunshine after a storm,—how cheering. We wish to thank the many who send us words of comfort and sympathy. If it were not for these, the burden would sometimes seem heavy to be borne; but with so many to give refreshing aid by prayer and kind words, what would otherwise be a toilsome task, now becomes a pleasant duty.

A preacher who sends an article says:—"Should you not see fit to give it a place in the Crisis, all shall be as pleasant between you and me as though you had published."

Although the following is from a private correspondence, we trust the writer will forgive us for giving it to our readers. We would say he is one of our excellent contributors.

"Dear Bro. Grant:—Many people fail to realize the magnitude of the labors and trials of an editor. And the editor of a religious paper has peculiar trials and perplexities, which those who edit secular papers escape. Contributors are often unreasonable, and sometimes ungrateful. An article is sent to the editor for publication which has some good in it, and some things which would be a disgrace to the writer, and no credit to the paper in which it is published. Here arises a perplexing problem for the editor to solve. The article will not do to publish in its present form, yet if the good can be separated from the bad, it might do very well. But perhaps the writer would be offended at seeing his article altered, even if the alteration was a decided improvement. And quite likely he would be displeased if the article was not published at all. So it is a thankless task for the editor to re-write the article, and make it fit to publish, yet he sometimes does this, and receives a storm of abuse for his pains. The position of an editor, especially of such a paper as the Crisis, is so different from that of people in general, that only those who know something about it by experience can even partially sympathize—that is, enter in to the case understandingly, and feel as he feels, or even guess how he feels.

It is often the case that an esteemed friend, or valued and beloved contributor, sends an article that contains an unguarded expression, or an apparent blunder, or possibly an unkind cut, or personal allusion, which the editor withholds; and in this case the writer owes a debt of gratitude to the editor for his kindness. But like the ten lepers, of whom but one gave thanks,) so those who are under many obligations to Bro. Grant for his kindness, either forget to thank him, or do worse, and actually abuse him for his doing the very best that, in such a case, could be done.

But if I go on to specify a tithe of an editor's trials, I shall make this letter too long. I wish to do as did the one who returned to give thanks. I have been an occasional writer for the press for more than twenty years, and have written quite often for the Crisis during the past two years. And in a number of instances I have noticed slight alterations in what I have written, and thankfully acknowledge the improvement. We who write for the Crisis, are like those who send rough timber to the master builder. If he hews, and saws, and planes, and fits the timber we send, we should not take offence, but should rather thank him, that he has taken such pains to render our materials both useful and ornamental."

POLICY OF NAPOLEON.

When Napoleon promised to withdraw his troops from Mexico, we were satisfied that his word could not be trusted. If we judge of his future course by his past, we may be assured that he will not give up Mexico; for wherever he gains power, he is sure to have some pretext for keeping it. He is free to make promises, and as free to break them.

The following shows Napoleon's true policy relative to Mexico:—

New York, July 24. Gen. Sheridan reports to the army headquarters that detachments of French troops are still landing at Vera Cruz. He says that his observations convince him that Napoleon is not sincere in the promise to evacuate Mexico.

Letters from the City of Mexico contain intelligence that Maximilian has signed a treaty with M. Dano, the French Minister, with the following provisions:

Seven thousand French troops will remain in Mexico under Maximilian's service; the Mexican flag is to support them for five years; France will furnish besides, to the Maximilian government, $30,000 every month for five years, to meet Maximilian's civil expenses; Maximilian is to give as security for the money thus advanced, and other claims, the railroad from Vera Cruz to Mexico; Maximilian's revenues are to be collected by French officers."

We apprehend the United States will soon be in a situation more critical than at any time during the last few years. Napoleon is evidently laying plans to bring America in the position of Austria, in relation to himself,—where he can be the dictator.

INQUIRY.

Bro. Grant:—As I am but a young pilgrim in the Advent faith, and do not understand all points of the faith as clearly as I could wish, I would like to have you tell me, through the columns of the Crisis, if you understand the Scriptures to teach that the righteous dead are to be raised, and reign with Christ on the earth a thousand years prior to the resurrection of the wicked dead?

Freedom, N. H. Chas. H. Hurd.

We see no chance to come to any other conclusion, if we follow the plain statement which Jesus caused "his angel" to make to John, in his last revelation to man, when he said:—

"I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

We do not see how the point could be made any plainer than it is in the foregoing scripture.

FROM BRO. A. J. TUTTLE.

Bro. Grant:—I am a member of the Baptist church in this place, but it has been over a year since I began to believe in the destruction of the wicked, the sleep of the dead, and the immediate coming of our blessed Savior. But this is hard doctrine to my Baptist brethren; and, of course, I have a great deal to contend with, as this is not popular doctrine here.

But there are a few passages of Scripture that trouble me. Will you explain them to me, so that I can give a reason of my hope?—2 Cor. 5: 1. Don't Paul speak as though he would occupy that building out of this earthly house? also in verses two and four does he not carry the idea there was something that was going to leave this tabernacle, and occupy the building of God?

6th verse. How is it that we, when at home in the body, are absent from the Lord? 8th verse. What is it that is absent from the body and present with the Lord? It seems that there was a preference to be absent from the body, and be present with the Lord.

Matt. 8: 29,—what is the time here spoken of? If it was the last day, how were they then to be tormented? I take the Crisis, and am well pleased with its doctrine, and I pray God to bless every effort made to bring men to the true light of the gospel.

Yours truly, Andrew I. Tuttle.

East Longmeadow, Mass.

The scripture referred to, with its context, reads as follows:—"While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven; if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that hath wrought us for the self same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord; (for we walk by faith, not by sight.) We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him."

It will be observed that Paul is contrasting "temporal" "things" with "eternal." We see nothing in the first five verses to favor the idea that troubles our inquirer.

Wakefield, an able translator, renders this as follows:—"For we know, that, if this tent, wherein we dwell, which is fixed on the ground, be taken to pieces, we have a divine building, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For, indeed, in this tent we sigh with an earnest desire of clothing ourselves with that heavenly habitation, if indeed, when we have stripped ourselves, we shall not be found naked. For, truly, we who are in this tent, groan with the weight thereof; not that we wish so much to put off this, as to put on another; that mortality may be swallowed up in life."

In Isa. 40: 22, we read as follows:—"It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in." Paul is contrasting the present temporary arrangement with the "eternal"; the mortal with the immortal. Jesus says:—"In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 2, 3. In Rev. 21: 1–3, John says:—And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

Now let us put these things together, and see if we cannot understand Paul in 2 Cor. 5: 1–4. He says, when writing to the Corinthians, "We know that, if our earthly house [not houses] of this tabernacle [not these tabernacles] were dissolved, we have a building [not buildings] of God, a house [not houses] not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this [not these] we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house [not houses] which is from heaven."

This shows that there is but one "house," "tabernacle," or "building," for the whole church; hence the "tabernacle" does not mean the physical body of Paul or any one else; but "a building of God," "a house not made with hands." This is evidently the one which the Savior calls my Father's house,"—the city that Abraham looked for, "whose builder and maker is God." Paul says, "For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come."—Heb. 13: 14. This is the one John saw in vision, when upon the isle of Patmos, which he calls "the tabernacle of God."

Paul's mind was directed to the time when this present "temporal" state of things, which is compared to a "tent," "tabernacle," or "house," shall be "dissolved," as declared by Peter (2 Pet. 3: 11–12); and in view of the dissolution of the present "temporal" state of things, he is directed to the "eternal" one, when "the tabernacle of God" shall come. At that time "mortality" will "be swallowed up of life."

It looks absurd to us that the "house," "tabernacle," or "building of God, . . . not made with hands," signifies a physical body for us to move into at death. If this were so, what should we do with that body when this one rises from the dead? Each person would then have two bodies.

In this present state, the Lord "stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in." But when "dissolved," then we are to have the "eternal" "building," "house," or "tabernacle." While here in "this tabernacle," "we groan," earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." In other words, we are waiting for the "New Jerusalem" to come down as the capitol of the coming kingdom.

We now pass to notice what Paul says about being absent from "the body":—"Whilst we are at home in the body [not our bodies], we are absent from the Lord." Here is only one body for the whole. Christ is called "the head of the body, the church."—Col. 1: 18. "The body, the church," is here on earth; and the Lord, or "the head," has gone away; and while we remain here, "we are absent from the Lord." His Spirit is with us, but he himself is absent; and will be till his second coming.

Paul certainly used figures in the preceding verses, when speaking about being "clothed" and "unclothed"; for he does not mean garments of cloth. We think he uses "body" as a figure to represent the church. We will let him explain himself. "So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another."—Rom. 12: 5. "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."—1 Cor. 12: 27. "That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel."—Eph. 3: 6. "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ."—Eph. 4: 11, 12. "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church," which is the body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all."—Eph. 1: 22, 23. "And he is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things he might have the preeminence."—Col. 1: 18. "Who now rejoice in my sufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my body's sake, which is the church."—Col. 1: 24.

Notwithstanding Paul's love for the church, "the body of Christ," he was "willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord," "the head of the body."

The passage referred to in Matt. 8: 29, with its context, reads as follows:—"And when he was come to the other side into the country of the Gergesenes, there met him two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, so that no man might pass by that way. And, behold, they cried out, saying, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time?" The time to attend to the demons is not till after Christ comes the second time; but it seems they thought from some circumstances that the Lord was going to take them in hand then.

At the "last day," when the Lord comes in glory, the time will have arrived for their judgment; at which time there is to be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, in which these demons must evidently have a share, when they look forward to their coming destruction and death, which will be their punishment.

NAPOLEON.

When speaking of the state of things in Europe, as connected with the war and Napoleon, the Boston Journal says:—

"What will be the next stage of affairs no one can conjecture. . . . Louis Napoleon has not gone off augmenting his power in Europe till he has become the first ruler of modern times, to have his offers now slighted with impunity; nor will his prestige stand such a shock. He will probably betray no sign of annoyance for the present, but we may be sure that there is 'a rod in pickle' for somebody."

The London Saturday Review says:—"What will happen next is exceedingly doubtful, unless terms of peace can be at once arranged, and it is by no means easy to say what terms of peace can be possible at present. Italy might be quieted with Venetia, if the Emperor of the French is willing to let her have Venetia; but that is as yet by no means certain."

Says the London Times:—"Sooner or later, therefore, without sacrificing a single soldier or imposing the slightest burden on France, the French Emperor will probably find himself again the real arbiter of Europe. It is a position which a lofty ambition would disdain to abuse."

When speaking of the present condition of Europe, the Halifax Sun says:—"The extent and durance of the conflict is but a matter of conjecture to the ablest minds, for the dispute embraces so many ramifications and may reawaken so many memories which had better be forgotten, that the State or Kingdom will be happy which escapes, with even but partial shipwreck, from the dreadful vortex of the impending strife."

We may be sure that Napoleon will let no opportunity slip for adding as much to his power as possible. He is aiming to make all nations his allies or his subjects.

WHAT OTHERS THINK OF US.

It is often gratifying to human nature to know what our neighbors think of us. We clipped the following from the Banner of Light, the leading Spiritualist paper in the East, and published in Boston. The Investigator is known as "the Infidel paper" denying that there is any God.

THE WORLD'S CRISIS.

This Second Advent sheet, edited by Rev. Eld. Grant, is continually filled with low slang against Spiritualism. Its attacks are generally so puerile that we seldom notice them in these columns. But our talented neighbor, the Investigator, (a liberal and independent sheet,) does sometimes condescend to show up the miserable fanatic of the Crisis with a keen pen. Here is a specimen:

"The World's Crisis," a Second Advent paper, is fanatically furious and even frantic in denouncing the supposed monstrosities of Spiritualism. But what, pray, is the Rev. Elder of the "Crisis" doing, and what has he been doing for the last twenty odd years? Preaching and publishing that Jesus is to come immediately, right away, this afternoon, to burn up the world, in order that he may save a set of poor demented lunatics, who have got the foolish whim into their heads—which don't seem capable of holding anything else—that they are the especial favorites of Heaven, and every body else is to sizzle in a thundering great fire until there is not as much left of them as you can put in your eye. And the teachers of such miserable, wretched, crazy twaddle, has the impudence and the arrogance to charge and rebuke others for their supposed humbugs? How applicable to this Second Advent Elder are those sensible words of Jesus—"First cast the beam out of thine own eye, and then shalt thou see clearly to pull the mote out of thy brother's eye"!

For the World's Crisis.

A GLORIOUS ANTICIPATION.

There is much in the thought of the resurrection that fills the heart with emotions of joy. The other day, in a discussion with a Methodist minister on the state of the dead, he remarked that if he believed he was to remain unconscious between death and the resurrection, he should consider it a great punishment, inflicted by God, to deprive him of existence.

How different is the belief of the saints of God, who by continuance in well-doing are seeking for a glorious immortality. In their corruptible nature they are dependent upon God for existence. But on the contrary, immortal-soul theologists place dependence upon their natures for existence. The resurrection to them is not a real resurrection, but a reunion; to the children of God it is the gate to a glorious eternity.

For Paul "to live is Christ, to die is gain." So with every true child of God. To live is to live for the service of Christ; but to die is to escape the perils, woes, and tribulations of this devil-ruled world.

What is death to the elect of God? It is but to close the eyes to the world and sin, and open them in glory! What is time to the unconscious rest of the dead? In their quiet beds of dust they realize not the flight of time. An age is nothing to them; for in hades they "know not anything."

But, oh, how glorious is the anticipation! When the trumpet shall sound, we shall open our eyes in glorious immortality! The past, with all its suffering, sorrow, and pain and death, will not come into remembrance amid the immortal joys of the New Jerusalem. It would fill my heart with sadness if I thought at death I (as an immaterial being) was to take my flight and there be confined, in view of my reward, till the resurrection. This is taught by many who are unable to evade the word of God, that the saints do not receive their reward before the resurrection.

It fills my heart with inexpressible joy to anticipate the glories of our immortal home. How I long for the trumpet to sound that will usher us into the full realization of those anticipations! Beloved in the Lord, let us continue in patient well-doing, for our rest will come ere long. W. H. E.

Better than a New Bonnet.

A sister in Michigan writes:—"As our means are quite limited, my husband said we should have to give up the Crisis, as we were taking another paper; but I thought I could not do without the Crisis, so I saved enough to pay for it by not getting a new bonnet. O, how much more pleasure and profit I received in reading it, than I should have received from all the new things which I might desire, but which perish with the using. The Lord is good in giving me the means so that I can have the reading of the best paper in the world."

REPORT OF THE MAINE CENTRAL QUAR. CONFERENCE.

The Maine Central Quarterly Conference commenced, according to notice, at the Town House in Rome, Thursday, June 14th, at five o'clock P. M. We had a social meeting. Interest fair.

Friday, June 15th. Met at nine o'clock for social meeting, which continued through the forenoon. Interest not very good. At one o'clock P. M., preaching by L. L. Howard, from Jude 3,—"Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." Bro. Howard spoke nearly an hour, showing who the saints were, what the faith was, and that it embraced the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead, and the inheritance of the saints. It was heart-cheering indeed.

Met at 5 o'clock P. M. for prayer and social meeting. We listened to some good exhortations from the brethren and sisters. At the close of the meeting to-day, Bro. Howard stated that Bro. D. M. Hanscomb was very sick, and that it was best to take up a collection for him. Fifteen dollars were contributed, and sent to him. Bro. Hanscomb has since died.

Saturday, June 16th. Met at 8 o'clock for social meeting. Interest not very good. At half-past ten A. M., preaching by Bro. Wm. H. Blaisdell, from Matt. 24: 3. The brother has much liberty in presenting to us the signs of the coming of the Son of man. At 1 P. M. we met again and listened to a sermon from Bro. Charles Parsons, from 1 John 4: 16,—"God is love." The Bro. spoke from a full heart. May his admonition be long remembered. At 5 o'clock P. M., preaching by Bro. H. B. Sevey, from Eph. 4: 4. The brother spoke with much freedom, showing the unity that should exist between the followers of Christ. After the sermon, there were several exhortations, which were not very harmonious. The winds of discord seemed to be let loose. Christ was not much glorified.

Sunday 17th. Prayer meeting at 8 o'clock. Interest good. Twenty-five spoke of their hope, and meant to be better christians. The house not being large enough to hold the congregation, we repaired to the grove, and listened to a sermon by L. L. Howard, from Rev. 7: 1. The discourse was both instructive and encouraging. It was replete in historical facts and dates. In the afternoon, we listened to a very able discourse from Bro. H. B Sevey, from Rev. 6: 7,—"And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see."

After the sermon, the conference chose Bro. H. B. Sevey President, Bro. Wm. A. Knight Secretary. Voted, that a report of this conference be published in the World's Crisis and Herald and Review. Will the latter please copy?

REPORT OF PROGRESS

FROM MAINE TO MASS.

Tuesday, May 15th, we arrived in West Falmouth, Me., where we occupied every evening and one Sabbath preaching the word. We found here a good band of converts who had recently started on the pilgrimage as the fruit of the labors of Bro. York, Wellcome, Goud, and others. They had had the truth preached to them so plainly that they embraced the whole of it at the first; and they were active in all their meetings, talking out their faith in the Lord's coming. Heads of families and children were embraced in this work, in some instances parents and children.

While the work there was in progress, some preaching brethren felt it duty to call at one residence and talk with the family; and as it was Monday morning, found the industrious lady of the house at her wash-tub. They tried to talk with her, but she turned her back upon them. They however delivered their message, feeling that it would not be in vain that they had spoken. Evening came, and the meeting was held. The lady was present, and arose and confessed her sins and determination to serve God, and when the meeting closed went to the brethren and confessed, making thorough work,—that she had treated them shabbily when they came to see her. Some one asked her how she felt when they were talking with her, and she said, "As though I wanted to pound them with my wash-board." But it was the devil's last trial for the victory. She made a full consecration to God, and to-day, with her husband and daughter, is actively engaged in the work of the Lord, and deeply interested in the coming of Jesus.

There were before this work but few in the place who believed in "the advent at hand." They had no meeting-house, so by the leave of the F. W. Baptists the brethren occupied their house.

After spending the Sabbath and one week-evening more, we left for Portland and Westbrook. At the last mentioned place we had a pleasant interview with Bro. Gay at the Westbrook town farm. Bro. Gay is the overseer of the farm the present year, and is doing the poor people good. He labors through the week on the farm, and on the Lord's day goes out to preach in Portland and the surrounding country.

While there we had the opportunity of seeing a man who has been there twelve years, and yet has never spoken a word, although by no means a deaf man. He was found in a barn with both feet so frozen as to require amputation. Where he came from, and whether foreigner or American, is not known. He either cannot or will not speak.

We also had the privilege of holding an interesting "sign language" conversation with a deaf mute, an intelligent young man who lives there. We tried to tell him of the resurrection of the dead; that his friends who were dead were not in heaven, but in the ground; that the dead would be raised and the earth renewed, and the good who loved Jesus would live on it forever. His countenance assumed first a perplexed look, as though it was new doctrine, then he seemed pleased as the truth became more plain to him. Thank God, there will be no deaf mutes there, for "the lame man shall leap as an hart; and the tongue of the dumb shall sing." Glory to God forever, for the blessed state of the saints in the kingdom.

Saturday, May 26th, we were on board Nahum's chariots again, and in due time in Biddeford at our old pilgrim's home with Bro. J. C. Libby. We found the brethren since we left had been engaged in erecting a chapel, having been often obliged to vacate halls where they had been, and after some trouble find another, to leave soon, till at last they had not a convenient place to meet. The chapel is now completed and dedicated. It is just such a house for plainness and simplicity as God's people ought to have. The church is somewhat involved, some three or four hundred, perhaps, and if any of the Lord's stewards have funds to invest to the glory of God, even though but a small amount, they will do good and help one of the noblest, self-sacrificing, struggling churches I know. If any have such means to bestow, I will venture to say that if enclosed and sent to Bro. John C. Libby, Biddeford, Me., it will do good. The chapel is so situated as to get people to hear the truth who otherwise would not.

We spent a pleasant though rainy Sabbath in Biddeford, and proceeded to Dover, where we remained two evenings. Here we met Bro. and Sr. Latham, who are trying to present the truth as God opens the way. Bro. L., like ourself, has merged out of the thicket and fog of old theology, and is now preaching the plain truths of the Bible. He has started to labor in a western field, and is cheerfully recommended to the brethren, and commended to the grace of God. God bless you, Bro. Latham; we will labor on till Jesus comes.

We had a pleasant time in Dover. We met some good children, who feel like holding on to the truth. Among them Bro. Joseph Pinkham, the Lord's minister, who loves the work of preaching a plain, straight gospel. O, how good it is to find in these days men who are God's qualified ministers, who preach not as fearing or pleasing men, but God. We had the privilege while at Dover of hearing some lectures by Bro. Simpson. Not often having the opportunity of hearing preaching, we were pleased to be able to do so. Bro. Simpson is firm in the faith that Jesus will come in 1868, and we hope he will. We cannot see how the time can go beyond that period. How important to be prepared to meet Him when he comes.

Lord's day, June 10th, we preached once more in Haverhill. Found the church in a much better state than when we were last there. We enjoyed a glorious meeting in the evening. God bless the church in Haverhill, and make it "clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and terrible as an army with banners." A united church cannot fail to be blessed, and have power wherever it is, for, like a city set on a hill, "it cannot be hid."

After the Sabbath, we went to visit friends in our native town. There are no believers in the coming of Jesus; the only church in the place is a Congregationalist, and there is no sympathy with anything but popular religion and the war spirit. There are a few who love the Lord, though they have not all the light on the coming of the Lord, but they are trying to serve him, and will no doubt be saved when Jesus comes.

We visited Groveland, where some of our early boyhood days were spent. It is near our birthplace, only some three miles away.

There are but two or three families here who love the Lord's appearing; the others love levees and the world, so that they may well be said to have the form of godliness, while they deny the power. God save us from this empty shell of formal godliness. Virgins, awake! the Lord is coming. Arise! trim your lamps, and keep them burning. God help us to be ready. L. C. McKinstry.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. M. Weaver.

Dear Bro. and Sis.:—Grace and peace be multiplied unto you. The way to glory is indeed a straight and narrow way, and oftentimes I fear lest my feet stray from the path of righteousness. I know of myself I can do nothing acceptably; but through the grace that Christ giveth I hope to be saved in the great harvest of souls.

I often think of the dear ones scattered abroad with whom the Spirit unites me, and long for the time when they shall come to the city of God to rest forever. Thank the Lord, the day will soon come. Ye mourning ones, cheer up! He cometh!! Away down to Nova Scotia let the tidings go, to cheer the lonely pilgrims there. Father Rice will be called for some bright morning; he'll awake to life immortal. "Glory!" will burst from his unsealed lips, as he looks about on the new creation and finds himself really on the other side of Jordan—beyond the grave—safe at home! And will he meet you there, Bro. and Sr.? God help you to be faithful.

The future is bright, the present troublous, but important. Character is fast being developed. Hypocrites and faint-hearted ones are making themselves manifest. The spiritual ones are united in love; all others are biting and devouring each other.

Who is not "ashamed of Jesus"? Now is the hour to prove your fearlessness. Now is the time to let your light shine. Spiritualism is ensnaring men and women by hundreds; preach the truth to them. No time now for milk and water dosing,—give "meat," for it is "due season." Truth never was popular, and never will be in this age. It is vain to think of being a favorite in any society that shuts out the coming of the Lord and kindred doctrines unless we half hide the light.

Present truth made a fool of old Noah, in the world's eye, also of Lot. Truth made Jesus Christ a pilgrim, and made the apostles very unpopular. "The servant is not above his Lord"; if they persecute one, they will the other. Popular religionists do not relish the truth. The sleep of the dead, destruction of the wicked, inheritance of the saints, speedy coming of the Lord, are not at all palatable to them, excepting now and then an individual member. Men may flatter themselves that the churches receive them well, but so far as receiving the truth is concerned, the edges are smoothed so as not to hurt much. I have listened lately to "present truth" in a Methodist pulpit, and sometimes it sounded like eternal torment, and sometimes "the wages of sin" appeared to be "death," but what kind of death was undiscoverable.

O for plain, fearless men, who will preach what they believe, money or no money, and preach it so plain that people can know what they do believe. Think you Martin Luther could smooth over his "present truth" so as to be a favorite in the old Romish church? No; they cast him and his heresy out, just as we have been cast out by all other sects; and they receive none of us back without a full recantation, or a cautiousness in regard to our expressing anything out of order with their creed. Talk about carrying truth into the churches,—it was sent to them first, and most of them rejected it. There is only one way for them to be enlightened, that is by hearing and receiving the truth in its fulness and simplicity, humiliating though it be.

A sister Matherson, somewhere in Mass., wrote me a letter, which has an answer ready to mail. Her letter unfortunately got lost when we moved into our new hired house. Will she give me her address again? God give us wisdom and patience. Amen. Your sister in the Lord,

Maria Mathews Weaver.
Westfield, Mass., Box 464.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

Bro. Grant:—I have just returned from the home of my childhood, Townsend, Mass. My last remaining sister, who lived on the old place, died June 7th, in the 67th year of her age. She died in hope. When looking fifty years in the past, to the time when my parents were alive, with a large family of happy children, all looked pleasant and cheerful, in doors and out. It was sweet home. But how changed! Death has been doing its work. My mother was permitted to live to be eighty-six, my father to ninety-four years.

The old place, around which so many reminiscences cluster, is left alone. None were there to tell the story of by-gone days. Of nine children, only myself and twin-brother remain. We were named significantly, Luther and Calvin. Thus the generations pass. But the "blessed hope" of a resurrection, amid these sad recollections, is my only comfort. The dead shall live again. L. Boutell.
Salem, July 16th, 1866.

From Sr. S. S. Chamberlain.

To the Editor and the readers of the Crisis: My dear friends, I want to address a few words to you, and tell you how I feel in view of the light and truth which comes to me from week to week through our paper. I love the Crisis, and so does nearly or quite every one of our acquaintance who has seen it. I can say as king Agrippa said to Paul, "almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." Why is it that I am not quite? Is it because I have not faith, or do I love this vain and wicked world too well?

How happy I should be, if I could enjoy the same faith and love that my dear companion does. I want to be good, and I want grace to help me to train my dear little ones for a home in the better land. O, why do I so cling to this present evil world, when we know it will soon be destroyed, with all those who choose it for their portion?

I am satisfied that the Advent people, are of all others the salt of the earth, and the light of the world, for "by their fruits ye ye shall know them." And behold how they "love one another." I would say with Ruth, "entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." I am not satisfied with my past experience. I want complete, present, full and free salvation. I have been blest, long years ago, but I want to be blest now. My way thus far has been through trials, sorrows and disappointments. Left an orphan in early youth, by the death of my father, I have since lost all my near relatives, and have felt that I was alone, with but few in the wide world to care for my soul.

Outside of my own little family, it is so now. Again I entreat you to pray that I may not only be almost but altogether a true and faithful christian.

Sutton, Mass. Susan S. Chamberlain.

From Bro. C. H. Hurd.

Bro. Grant:—On Saturday, June 30th, in company with several of the lovers of the blessed hope in Parsonsfield, Me., and vicinity, I had the blessed and not soon to be forgotten privilege of meeting in conference with the large and devoted band of brothers and sisters at Melvin Village, N. H., and truly it was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; I thought I could say of a truth, it is good to be here. There were some over a hundred of us present, and ninety-five warm-hearted and earnest exhortations were given in the spirit and power of the God of heaven.

In expectation sweet, this band of cross-bearers are hoping soon to hail the Just One, and seem to be patiently struggling on, in the good old way, amid all the trials and disappointments, the toiling and the weeping, incident to the pilgrim journey; knowing that their light afflictions will soon be ended, and the reward given to all the valiant soldiers, who are found seeking by patient continuance in well-doing for glory, honor and immortality; eternal life will be given, when the Life-giver comes.

On Sunday, Brothers Piper and Lang set forth the blessed truths of the gospel relative to time, in a clearer light than we had ever seen it before. Bless God for the true light which now shines in the pathway of the just; may it grow brighter and brighter until the perfect day.

The neat little chapel building by the brethren at Melvin is to be dedicated on Sunday, July 29th, the Lord will. Bro. Couch and other preaching brethren have been invited, and it is expected will be present on the occasion. Yours, in hope of eternal life soon.

Freedom, N. H. Chas. H. Hurd.

Obituaries.

Smith. Died at Canaan, N. H., July 13th, Sister Eliza A. Smith, wife of Bro. George W. Smith, formerly of Portsmouth, N. H., aged twenty-six years.

Sister Smith gave her heart to Christ about eight years since, and embraced the doctrine of the near coming of the Lord, and immortality through Christ only. She loved the place of prayer, and her exhortations were earnest and instructive. At her house the toilworn servant of Christ found a hearty welcome.

She was brought to Portsmouth, and buried from the chapel in which she heard and embraced those glorious truths which supported her through a long and distressing sickness, and sustained her in the hour of death. She sleeps in Jesus, and awaits the coming morn.

Prayer by Bro. Wm. H. Mitchell. Sermon by the writer, from Psalms 16:9.

Joseph W. White.

Burditt. Died in Southboro, Mass., July 20th, 1866, Sister Mary V. Burditt, wife of Bro. James Burditt, aged fifty years.

After a long and painful illness, caused by an internal tumor, she became a victim of the enemy. But she fell with the whole armor on. She leaves a husband and two daughters to mourn the loss of a faithful wife, and an affectionate mother.

A discourse was delivered by the writer, to a large gathering of relatives, friends and neighbors, from Ps. 39:4. C. C. Ramsay.

Vickery, Died in Dover, N. H., June 12th, 1866, of disease of the brain, Carrie M., daughter of Wm. H. and Ellen A. Vickery, aged two years, one month, and twenty-eight days.

Carrie was a lovely child. This is a heavy stroke to both parents and grandparents; but they expect she will live again in the resurrection. May they be prepared to meet her.

"So fades the lovely, blooming flower,
Frail, smiling solace of an hour;
So soon our transient comforts fly;
Earth's pleasures only bloom to die."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

London July 16. The Moscow Gazette of July 16th contains the following highly important announcement: Russia does not desire any change in the present state of things in Europe. If Austria and Prussia will render themselves tools of France, Russia can no longer depend on them as heretofore. Venetia without Rome would constitute no progress for Italy. The submission of Austria to France is not advantageous, but dangerous to European equilibrium. The supremacy of Prussia in Northern Germany narrows that of Russia in the Baltic. Russia's love of peace does not sanction efforts to attain supreme powers. England's interests may make her seek an alliance with France and Austria in the Eastern question, but the dictatorship of France in Italy and Germany cannot meet with her support.

A dispatch from Seinberg, July 13th, says the Gazette Naradowa of this town announces all the soldiers on furlough in Russia called in, and states that every day military trains start from Warsaw to the frontier of Silecia and Galicia. Russian troops are marching from Padolia to Bessarabia.

A Florence dispatch of July 13th says the Court of Berlin has declared to the Italian Cabinet that all armistice on the basis of cession of Venetia is inadmissible. The Italian Government in its reply is said to have announced its resolution to continue offensive operations against the Austrian Empire without relaxation, in conformity with engagements mutually entered into by Prussia and Italy, until both these powers shall have obtained from Austria satisfactory terms for the conclusion of peace.

The Nazione of Florence of July 12th publishes a statement of the conditions of an armistice stipulated by Prussia and Italy. The former power demanded the exclusion of Austria from the Germanic Confederation. The Nazione adds that this was admitted by France, who undertook to obtain the assent of the Vienna Cabinet to the evacuation by Austria of the Austrian provinces, occupied by Prussia during the armistice. On the part of Italy the conditions were the cession of Italian territories under the Austrian dominion, including the Italian portion of the Tyrol. Austria was to make the cession direct to Italy, without compensation, and not to raise the Roman question, during negotiations for peace.

It appears these conditions were found inadmissible at Vienna, and the Austrian Government has decided to try the fortunes of war.

The Prussians occupied Prague on the 8th, garrisoning the place with 8000 troops.

Vienna dispatches state that the Austrian forces in Venetia are being withdrawn from before the Italians, but the fortresses remain strongly garrisoned for defence without support from the army.

The La France of the 12th says the attack of the Italians upon Venetia renders Prince Napoleon's mission futile, and has been abandoned. France is rapidly arming her iron-clads to be sent to Venice.

The Emperor of Austria is making concessions to Hungary. He announces that the conscription is suspended, and calls upon Hungarians to volunteer.

Victor Emmanuel was at Ferrara. The formation of a Hungarian Legion was progressing, and Kossuth had gone to consult with Garibaldi upon the plan of operations.

Liverpool, July 16. The latest reports from the Great Eastern were quite favorable. Steady progress was being made. On Sunday afternoon she had paid out 283 miles; distance run 263.

Nothing has transpired concerning the peace negotiations.

The Spanish government has prohibited the sale of newspapers in the public streets.

Sanguinary conflicts took place on the 14th between the Prussians and Federals near Aschaffenburg. The former were entirely successful. The town was in flames and the Federals were retreating. The Prussians were marching on Frankfort, which town the Federal troops had evacuated, and the Diet removed to Augustsburg, where the Foreign Representatives were expected to assemble.

The headquarters of the Prussian army under the King had been advanced to Brunn. Iglau was reported to be in possession of the Prussians.

Cialdini had occupied Padua and Vicenza—towns on the line of the railroad to Vienna. The Austrians in Venetia, except those in Venice, had no railway communication with Vienna, so that unless Cialdini be dislodged the Austrians cannot render aid in the impending battle with the Prussians.

In the diplomatic circles of St. Petersburg it was declared that Russia had no present intention of abandoning its policy of neutrality, and that only in the case of the active intervention of a foreign power in the German conflict would she make declarations and take up an attitude corresponding with her interests.

Liverpool July 19th, Londonderry 20th.

The Paris Moniteur says Prussia has consented to abstain from hostilities for five days provided Austria agreed to do the same and give her decision on the basis proposed within that period.

The Prussians entered Darmstadt on the 18th. The Prussian General Falkenstein had established his headquarters at Frankfort and issued a proclamation announcing his assumption of the Governments of Nassau and Frankfort. The Prussians also occupied portions of Bavaria and Darmstadt. Several Frankfort journals have been suppressed provisionally. The Frankfort Senate had been dissolved.

The military correspondent of the London Times with the Prussian army says another Prussian reserve is about to be formed, which will raise the army to 300,000 men, exclusive of the reserves in garrisons and fortresses.

On the 17th the Italians in force attacked the Bergofort. The cannonade lasted several hours. During the night the Austrians withdrew, abandoning their guns, ammunition, and provisions.

The Austrian commander in the Tyrol claims to have driven the Italians across the Catarra river. Garibaldi is said to have been present at the affair. The Austrians took 200 prisoners.

The Times considers the chances of any grand operations in Italy at an end, and says there is only room left for sieges and petty warfare.

The Moniteur Du Soir says France intervened diplomatically, with an idea of bringing about peace. Threatening measures would have created fresh and more serious complications.

The Morning Post says France has decided to avoid any concentration of French troops on the frontiers towards the seat of war, so anxious is the Emperor to aviod the slightest indication of France being dragged into military activity.

A few cases of cholera have appeared in Liverpool.

The Times, in an article on the subject of monitors, urges a complete reconstruction of the British navy, and says the present ships are entirely useless against the monitors, of which the Miantonomah is the precursor.

DOMESTIC.

Savannah, Ga., July 24. There were 29 deaths from cholera and 34 new cases among the troops on Tybee from 9 o'clock Monday morning to six o'clock this afternoon.

Philadelphia, July 24. Four cases of cholera, three adults and one child, are reported by the Board of Health to-day. No deaths up to two o'clock are reported.

Savannah, July 25. Thirteen deaths from cholera occurred among the soldiers on Tybee Island today, and twenty-eight new cases are reported. There are no cases on board the San Salvador in this city.

New York, July 26. The cholera is again increasing with the return of warm weather. Sixteen new cases were reported yesterday, of which several were fatal. A very bad state of affairs prevails on Ward's Island. Several persons have died of cholera and there are now eleven hopeless cases. It is believed, however, that the epidemic will be controlled. Cholera has been discovered in the lower part of State street, and at No. 113 Mulberry street there were four cases in one room.

Seven cases of cholera in Brooklyn to-day are reported by the Health Board, and a number of others by the police, mostly in the Twelfth Ward. The cholera is reported to be raging at Blackwell's Island, Ward's Island and Bellevue Hospital, and many deaths have occurred. There were seven new cases in this city to-day.

Philadelphia, July 28. Five new cases of cholera and three deaths were reported by the Board of Health this afternoon. The total number of deaths for the week were 402, being a decrease of 272 from last week, and the same number as the week previous to the hot spell, including 18 from Asiatic cholera, 21 from cholera morbus and 101 from cholera infantum.

Philadelphia, July 30. The board of Health returns for two days, Sunday and Monday, show seventeen cases of cholera and five deaths.

New York, July 30. Fourteen cases and five deaths by cholera are reported to-day in this city. Three deaths on Blackwell's Island; fourteen cases and 8 deaths in Brooklyn were reported this morning.

New York, July 30. Havana dates of the 19th state that the Empress of Mexico arrived there on the 17th, on her way to Europe. She did not land, but proceeded next day.

News from Mexico represents the situation of the Empire as daily growing more critical. The fall of Matamoras had caused great dismay. The Imperialist newspapers are excited and petulant in their discussions of the situation.

A French steamer had arrived at Vera Cruz with 200 troops of the Foreign Legion.

The Diario Del Imperio, the official organ of the Empire, says the Empress has gone to Europe to treat upon the interests of Mexico and to arrange several international affairs.

The General Feeling.—The Washington correspondent of the Boston Commonwealth has the following reference to the adjournment of Congress:

The political atmosphere is heavy and dark with apprehension. The minds of loyal men are overcast, freighted with dread of the near future. During the last six months, I have never seen this manifestation so general. I have yet to find the first man who does not fear the revolutionary designs of the President. There are not many but believe he will attempt to put these designs into execution. Is it not terrible, that after all these years of struggle and sacrifice, loyal statesmen should thus be trembling in dread of the crisis that impinges? No one can tell how to meet it. Few realize in what form it will come. Yet every body feels the danger approaching. Gov. Hamilton, the brave and loyal Texan, almost alone seems to understand the crisis fully. He intimates a belief that if the Thirty ninth Congress adjourns now, we shall see an attempt made to inaugurate another Legislative body composed of the present supporters of "my policy" in Congress and their Southern allies, who, under a special call, will assemble here and be forced in and vi et armis, if necessary. A significant remark made by Secretary Seward, some few weeks since, to a New York congressman, comes to my memory. The Auburn Sage was talking oracularly to the impressible subject before him. He let slip this peculiar language: "If this Congress adjourns without letting in the Southern members, it will never meet again in this capital." Seeing the look of surprise on the face of his auditor, he explained by saying, "I mean its members will never be heard from again." But the listener did not fail to treasure and repeat the first remark as the one Seward really meant to utter.

Napoleon Growing Old.—A letter from Paris gives the following description of Louis Napoleon—the best view we have had of him for some years:—"The Emperor was out on Sunday last. He came in his carriage-and-four, with out-riders, and accompanied by Gen. Fleury and a couple of foreign embassadors. I was quite close to him and had a good look at him. He is of much lower stature than I had thought, and inclined to be fleshy; is quite gray, and wears no other beard than a moustache and imperial. He has a large and remarkably fine-shaped head and bright eye. He was very plainly clad in a pepper-and-salt citizen's dress, with silk hat, and white silk gloves. He returned, in a good-natured, graceful manner, the frequent unostentatious greetings of the passers-by." His age is 59.

Fearful Riot in New Orleans.—The President received a dispatch from New Orleans this evening, briefly stating that the State Convention convened in that city to-day was broken up by the interference of citizens of New Orleans, and that a riot ensued; that several persons were killed; that the police had got the control of the mob, and that military aid was asked of Gen. Baird, who cheerfully and promptly responded, and ordered the troops to aid in quelling the disturbance. One hundred and twenty-five men were killed.

☞ The first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress has passed into history. At four o'clock Saturday afternoon both Houses adjourned sine die.

The Fenian Cause.—A Cincinnati dispatch says that matters of great importance are now being brought before the Roberts and Sweeney wing of the Fenian organization, which will make the Brotherhood more powerful than ever in forwarding the liberation of Ireland from English rule. An important meeting has just been held in Cincinnati.

☞ It is said that, at the Fenian war council at the New York headquarters, it was determined to inaugurate a new movement of great magnitude immediately, but members are sworn to the strictest secrecy, and the public must therefore await developments.

☞ A swarm of locusts have invaded the province of Algeria, destroying the growing crops of the farmers. Contributions are being collected in France for the sufferers.

☞ A roof is in process of construction in Detroit, over the Michigan Central depot, which will cover three hundred thousand square feet, or over seven acres.

☞ It is said that in Manchester, Eng., and its suburbs, there are now over 50,000 children who receive no instruction whatever.

☞ There are now no saloons or hotels in Massachusetts, west of the Connecticut river, where drinks can be obtained.

☞ More than twenty thousand Jews have been converted during the past century.

At a conference held at Norwalk, Ohio, on the 2nd and 3rd of June, 1866, among other things it was unanimously voted, "That we recognize Bro. Jonas Wendall, of Edinboro, Pa., as an Evangelist for Ohio, and that we concur in the proposed arrangement for Brn. Wendall and Brown to hold a series of tent meetings in this part of the State the present season, and will co-operate with, and render them all the aid we consistently can in carrying out that object; and that we commend them to the favorable consideration of the brethren and the public generally, as worthy of support."

OVER THE RIVER.

On the bank beyond the stream,
Where the fields are always green,
There's no night, but endless day;
There is where the angels stay.
There's no sorrow, pain nor fear,
There's no parting farewell tear;
There's no cloud, no darkness there,
All is bright and clear and fair.

Flowers of fadeless beauty there,
Trees of life with foliage rare;
Fruits the most inviting grow;
There is where I want to go.
Hark, I hear the angels sing,
Heavenly harpers on the wing
Throng the air and bid me rise
To the music of the skies.

Soon from earth I'll soar away
To the realms of endless day;
Soon I'll join the ransomed throng,
Sing with them redemption's song;
Pearly gates shall open wide
Just beyond death's chilling tide.
There my mansion bright I see,
There the angels wait for me.

Earthly home, adieu, adieu;
Earthly friends, farewell to you;
Softly breathe your last good bye,
Jesus calls me, let me die.
Hallelujah, Christ will come;
Hallelujah, I'm most home;
Friends and loved ones weep no more,
Meet me on the other shore.

NUMBER TWENTY-EIGHT.

ELIJAH AT MOUNT CARMEL.

The unity of the kingdom of Israel no longer existed. The tribes no longer served under one king, as in the palmy days of David and Solomon. The last years of Solomon had been stained by the idolatrous fashions of the heathen nations. For this the kingdom had been divided. Ten tribes were given to Jeroboam. A new capitol had been built. Samaria divided with Jerusalem the honors of the rival courts of Israel and Judah. At the time of which we write, Ahab reigned in Samaria, and led on by that vile queen Jezebel, his wife, he seemed to glory only in wickedness. He filled all the pleasant groves of Israel with heathen idols, and reared altars on all the high places, to burn sacrifices to Baal. Amid this senseless worship, the Lord was forgotten. Then Elijah, the Tishbite, was sent to rebuke the wicked Ahab, and threatened him with drouth and famine.

After this, by divine direction, Elijah dwelt by the brook Cherith, which empties into the Jordan. There he dwelt secure from the persecution of the vile Jezebel, sheltered by the thick branches of the wild fig and the spreading oak. There each morn and even the ravens fed him, and he quenched his thirst from the cool waters of the brook. The dreary months passed slowly away, till at last the fountains of Cherith failed; then Elijah went to Zarephath, in Zidon, where he was cared for by a poor widow, whose little store of flour and oil failed not during the long year he sojourned with her.

Three years and more had passed, since the prophet had been an exile from his mountain home of Gilead. Three years of drouth and famine had oppressed the sinful Israelites. Meantime, Jezebel had slain all the prophets of the Lord in Israel. But Baal had not been propitiated; at least, he had not sent the rain so much prayed for; and the once fruitful fields of Canaan seemed a desert when Elijah returned to announce to Ahab that rain might be expected soon. Ahab and his servants were in the vicinity of Carmel, in search of grass, when Elijah made his appearance. The king had sought for him in all the surrounding lands, but failed to find any trace of him; and when Elijah did present himself at last, it was more in a spirit of anger than pleasure that Ahab received him. "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" was the salutation that met the ear of the fearless prophet. Undaunted, he replied, "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandment of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim."

Elijah desired the king to gather all the prophets of Baal and all Israel to Mount Carmel. All were there at the appointed time and place. None but Elijah knew the object of the strange meeting. Bodings of good or ill occupied the thoughts of those present, as the apparent object was differently construed. Yet that was a memorable meeting that day upon the high places of Carmel. Sorrow brooded upon the brows of the people. Three long years of rainless skies and dewless nights had greatly changed the beauty and excellence of Carmel, from the verdant slopes and flower-clad heights of other days, to a scorched and barren mountain, whose murmuring fountains had dried up. In the plain below, the roses of Sharon had faded; their sweet odors no more perfumed the breeze that swept up from the shores of the blue sea beyond.

To the north, the ancient Kishon rolled on to the sea as of old; but not with the depth of its olden tide, for its fountains had greatly failed. Nature was sad that day, and so were the hearts of the people. But Elijah had a task to perform, and he addressed himself to it with energy. He "came unto all the people and said, How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him." This appeal was received in silence. He said further, that he alone was left of the prophets of the Lord, while Baal had four hundred and fifty. Then he commanded that two bullocks should be brought, one for himself, and one for the prophets of Baal; and further, he said that each should prepare the offering, but put no fire under; and each in turn should call upon the God he worshiped, and the God that should answer by fire should be the Lord. To this all consented.

The prophets of Baal prepared the bullock assigned them, and placed it upon the altar, and called from morning till noon,—"O Baal, hear us." The sun rode high in heaven, but no voice answered; no sound arose save the frantic appeal of the false prophets. Then Elijah mocked them, and exhorted them to "cry aloud, for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked." Then they cried the louder, and wounded themselves, till the altar place was dyed with their blood; but there was no reply. When the noon was passed, and the sun stooped over the plain of Esdraelon, Elijah called the people around him, and repaired the long-discarded altar of the Lord, and placed the bullock in order upon it, and the wood, and surrounded it with a trench. Then twelve barrels of water were poured over it till the trench was filled; that all might see there was no deception in the solemn ceremony. Then, in the sight of all the people, the stern and undaunted Elijah called upon the Lord his God to vindicate his [illegible] to light the sacrificial fire upon the altar, and confound the worshipers of Baal. Ere the voice of Elijah had died away on the evening breeze of Carmel, the fire descended upon the altar and consumed the offering before all the people.

The false prophets were confounded, and the people were converted; and as the smoke of the sacrifice went to heaven, old Carmel shook with the voice of the people, "The Lord he is the God, the Lord he is the God." Elijah's triumph was glorious, but not complete. The prophets of Baal still lived. In that moment of victory anything was possible. Jealous for the long-discarded worship of Jehovah, the prophet determined to root out that pestilent priesthood of idolatry; and commanded the people to arrest the prophets of Baal and convey them to the banks of the river Kishon. His orders were obeyed. The entire number were slain, and Kishon swept on to the sea red with their blood, and burdened with their lifeless bodies. The people were dismissed to carry the news of that eventful day to all parts of the land; impressed anon with the majesty of the God of their fathers.

But Elijah had promised rain. He yet had a part to perform. Leaving the people, he retraced his steps to the heights of Carmel, with his servant. Then Elijah cast himself upon the earth and prayed for rain, and said to his servant, "Go up now, and look toward the sea." He went as directed, but saw nothing unusual. The distant Mediterranean broke softly on the shore, stirred only by the gentle breeze. The sky was like brass above, just as it had been for years; no signs of rain were there. Six times the servant went and returned with the same reply; but the seventh, he reported a cloud of the size of a man's hand rising out of the sea. Then Elijah knew that his prayer had been heard; that Carmel and Sharon would smile again with verdure, and all Israel would be refreshed with the blessed rain. Word was sent to Ahab to hasten his departure, lest the rain should stop him. Ere long the heavens were black with the coming tempest. Carmel was shrouded with clouds, and drenched with rain; nor could the hastening chariot of Ahab outdrive the storm. To show his respect for the king, Elijah girded up his loins and ran before the chariot of Ahab, as far as the streets of Jezreel, and shelter was found from the storm. Thus closed that memorable day, wherein Carmel was forever consecrated by the heaven-lighted sacrifice of Elijah.

There, as of old, Carmel, the solitary mountain by the sea, still rears its head two thousand feet above the wave-washed shore, and looks sadly down upon the plain of Sharon on the south; while Kishon washes its northern base, and Esdraelon stretches its plain towards the setting sun. The sea rolls its waves as blue as when Elijah's servant saw the cloud rise out of its waters; but, alas! since then the glory of Carmel has faded, and the beauty of Sharon has withered; for the curse of God rests upon all the scene. Yet the fame of its consecration still remains. The people that saw its altars reared are gone; but the Moslem guards the sacred places where Elijah vindicated the worship of Jehovah, undaunted and alone, before all Israel.

A FEW WORDS TO THE PILGRIMS.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ:—Grace, mercy and peace be multiplied to you, and to all that love our Lord in sincerity and and in truth. I can truly thank and praise my dear and blessed Lord and Master that I was ever willing to be a disciple of his. "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and that my feet are upon the sure rock; and let the tempest rage and the storms beat against me, I am not moved; for it is in the Lord that I have put my trust, and if Christ is for us, who can be against us? Glory to God for the sweet and blessed assurance that our ways please the Lord. I do praise God for the "blessed hope." It is surely an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast. O how cheering, how consoling, how sweet and precious to know from day to day that we are the Lord's. Yes, it is worth more than gold and silver. Nothing can compare with it. I can say in the language of the poet,—

"O who's like my Savior,
He's Salem's bright king;
He smiles and he loves me,
And learns me to sing.

How sweet are these words to my soul. None but those who love Jesus; and feel his approving smile daily, can tell the blessedness there is in serving God, and giving up all for him and his blessed cause. Then how sweet to go to him in prayer, and feel that full assurance that he will hear and answer our prayers. Never before, in all my pilgrimage, have I ever felt that the Lord heard and answered my prayers so signally, as he has for the past few months; and it has given me new life and courage to fight more valiantly the battles of the Lord.

"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want." How sweet the words of the Psalmist; how much good they have done me when passing through the trials and sorrows of the way. I have felt the sweet and heavenly peace of God in my heart for the past few months more than ever, and as I have sat by the bedside of my invalid sister, and seen her in an agony of pain and distress, sometimes lying in fits and spasms for hours, and never hear one murmuring word or complaint pass from her lips, I could but say to my dear companion, is there any thing so hard or so severe but that the Lord can help us bear it all patiently, and give us sustaining grace? And then the sweet promise would come to me, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." If it were not for these exceeding great and precious promises, what should we do in the hour of adversity and affliction? But the blessed Savior knew just what he should need, in order to bear up under the trials and temptations of our pilgrimage journey.

How glad I am that these are recorded for us. Glory to God, dear ones in Christ; be faithful a little while longer, and the victory shall be won. Be watchful, prayerful, hopeful, trusting all in the hands of Jesus.

My sick sister wishes me to say to the dear ones in Christ, who have cheered her so much by their comforting words of hope and consolation, that they never can know how much good they have done her, until they meet at the bar of God, and there have their reward for the good their letters have done her in her sick and helpless condition; and she says, do not stop writing because she has not answered them; for she is not able to write but a very few lines at a time, and that causes her great distress. Could you see the tears of joy that [illegible] and re-read to her, you would surely know you were amply paid for the time you spend in writing to her. Think of her, you who can have the sweet privilege of walking out into the fields to breath the beautiful air of heaven, and can meet with those of like precious faith, to talk, sing, and pray together. I say just give one passing thought to her, who lies upon her bed in so much pain and distress that she can get but very little rest night or day; and to be moved only a very little causes her to faint. Think of this, you who have so many precious privileges, and see if you prize them as you ought. Pray for her. Comfort her by your letters of hope and trust, and see if the Lord will not bless you for doing so.

Your sister striving for victory,

DR. AND MRS. PALMER IN ENGLAND AND IRELAND.

The travels of Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, both in this country and the Old World, remind one of the days when the early christians walked on earth gifted with the Holy Spirit. For wherever they went, hundreds upon hundreds were prostrated, as if by miracle, and convicted of their sins. They held meetings in the open air, and the fields were strewn over with men and women who had fallen under conviction. Almost every house was made a hospital for those who were stricken down with the "revival or happy sickness" as it was called. There they lay totally helpless, groaning in their agony, till suddenly their countenances would gleam with unusual joy, and they were the happiest of creatures. All denominations of christians united in daily prayer-meetings, at which it was not unusual to see four or five thousand persons present. Extra trains were run on the railroads. Wherever Dr. and Mrs. Palmer came, there was an immediate decrease in crime and wickedness. Theatres became empty, and drinking shops lost more than one half of their customers. Proprietors of places of amusement were threatened with ruin by the concourse of people to the religious performances. A tract entitled "A Night at Brunswick Chapel," being an account of a religious meeting, in one week passed through four editions, and was read more eagerly than the best novel of the day. The meetings sometimes began at three in the afternoon, and lasted till the evening prayer meeting at seven o'clock, which continued till one, two, or three, and sometimes even six o'clock the next morning. For a whole week Dr. Palmer frequently never slept in a bed once. He is not a man of extraordinary physical strength or vigor, but was sometimes exhausted to such an extent that he went to the meeting with tottering limbs and confused brain. But as soon as he entered he says he felt his heart swell and his arms grow strong, so that he went on with more then wonted power.

In a large fine volume, entitled Four Years in the Old World, the travels, incidents and evangelistic labors of Dr. and Mrs. Palmer are related, and can not be read without intense interest. They are told by Dr. Palmer and his wife, and constitute a wonderful collection of miracles. Their visit to the Old World lasted some four years, from June, 1859, till October, 1863, and their travels were confined to England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales. They saw all the places famed in early Methodism, visited Wesley's birthplace and tomb, and other scenes of historic interest. But the account of their religious work is the great interesting feature of the book.

WONDERFUL EFFECTS OF THEIR PREACHING.

At Coleraine, Ireland, an account is given of an open-air meeting, at which on all sides the people began to fall to the ground till the whole field was strewn over with men and women, and the moans and cries were such as to remind one forcibly of a description of a battle-field. At the same place, a whole school was similarly affected. On their knees there were prostrated one hundred children, and besides these, ladies and gentlemen of position, who were too genteel to attend the extraordinary meetings. They were all joined together crying out for pardon.

Dr. Palmer says:—"Our meetings sometimes present a scene of great confusion; so people think who know nothing about the movement. You can easily imagine what a noise it makes when fifty or a hundred men, women and children begin to cry out in the most heart-rending accents for mercy. The physical phenomena are very startling. They lose all bodily strength, fall down, and require much kind attention. Some of them waste away to a shadow; some of them are speechless for as long as twelve hours; some of them are fearfully wrought in their bodies, not convulsively, however. I find, as a general rule, that those who never read the Bible, or had any religious instruction, suffer most dreadfully. Those who have read the word of God generally don't suffer so much. I know those who have been under conviction, when I meet them. I would not know them after they had found peace. I can assure you, the countenance of every convicted sinner undergoes a change, and so marked as not to be mistaken."

A PARTICULAR CASE.

We give the following remarkable instance of a young lady under conviction:—"She had attended the service by the solicitation of her pious parents, though rather unwillingly, as she afterward confessed, fearful that she might be prostrated; and she was not yet willing to give up worldly pleasures, particularly dancing. Just about the moment that the man referred to in front of the gallery was carried out, she also felt the arrow of conviction. We had been telling just how a hard heart might be given to Jesus, and the Holy Spirit sent the arrow to her soul. She struggled against her feelings, and did not yield. The next evening she was afraid to attend the service, though her anxious parents thought she had yielded to their wishes, and was present.

"The following afternoon she took her sister, about nine years old, to the pleasure-ground around the water-works, some distance from the town. She had stopped at the post-office and received a letter, and now sat down on the beautiful green to read it, while her sister strolled away to enjoy the scenery alone. Presently she heard a shriek; and her sister came running toward her crying for mercy. At the same moment, the arrow of conviction so powerfully penetrated her own heart as to prostrate her utterly. This was the helpless condition of the sisters when a humane person found them. A car was procured, and, by the address of the letter she had received by post, her residence was ascertained, she being unable to speak. She remained in a condition scarcely able to lift her head from the pillow three or four days. We called and found her fill with what is called 'the revival or happy sickness'; but the struggle was well nigh over, and, ere we left, her rebellious heart yielded to be saved on God's own terms, and she rejoiced with joy unspeakable.

"She told us that the pressure on her heart was so crushing, it seemed as though she must die. In the meantime the Holy Spirit demanded, 'Will you give up the world? will you give up dancing?' this being the folly to which she most fondly clung. It was the last point where her will resisted the will of God. To just the degree she yielded the pressure was lightened, till at last she gave up to be saved on God's terms, and took Jesus as her Savior. He revealed himself as the fairest among ten thousand."

At New-Brunswick they had four meetings a day. Here is one of the bills that was posted throughout the town: "'Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call upon him while he is near.' Revival services will be held every day during the present week in the Brunswick-place chapel. Meetings will be held every day from twelve to one o'clock. Afternoon services in the chapel will commence at three o'clock. Meetings of a more social character, for serious-minded persons, who may desire to inquire, 'What must I do to be saved?' will be held from six to seven o'clock. Public evening service in the chapel will commence at seven o'clock. Persons of all denominations are invited to attend. Dr. and Mrs. P——, from America, will be present, and assist in the services. 'And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also' (Zechariah). 'The Spirit and the Bride say, Come; and let him that heareth say, Come' (St. John)."

UNIVERSALITY OF THE WORK.

Their work extended to all classes of christians. The Roman Catholics that were converted were most enthusiastic in their demonstrations of joy. Says Dr. Palmer: "We have persons of all denominations in the neighborhood, Prelatists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, and Romanists—yes, Romanists. O sir! if you could hear what I have heard, and see what I have witnessed!—poor, deluded Romanists casting their blessed beads, their manuals, their amulets, from them as polluting things, and crying, 'No priest but Jesus, no mediator but Jesus; no purgatory but the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness.' They never go back to the priest for confession or absolution. They never go to mass again."

"The priests of Rome are utterly confounded. First they scoffed, next they blustered, then they lost their temper. Now they are afraid, and at their wits' end."

These sudden and remarkable awakenings and convictions were not confined to any particular church, people, or place. Wherever Dr. Palmer and his companion went, there strange manifestation of divine power was visible. Strong men as well as females were suddenly struck down in the street, the public road, the church, or in their own houses. Thousands upon thousands were converted by the labors of these servants of God.

The inhabitants of the towns which they visited would refuse to let them depart by main force. They were honored every where they went, and their invitations to visit other places were so numerous that they were utterly at loss how to divide their time.

The book will be read with much interest by all classes of persons.—The Methodist.

THE SANCTUARY TO BE CLEANSED.

The most foolish speculation I have ever met with on this subject, is the claim that the church is the sanctuary to be cleansed, and that the cleansing is the changing of the saints to immortality. With this view, who are the "host" meant in the expression, "The sanctuary and the host?" If the "sanctuary" signifies the church, and the "host," also, means the church, the question would read, "How long shall be the vision . . . to give BOTH the church AND the church to be trodden under foot?" Who will assume the responsibility of throwing such an absurd question into the mouth of an angel? "Both the sanctuary and the host" cannot be made to mean one and the same thing. If the Jewish host is meant, the fact will still meet us that they constituted the church under the former dispensation, and, therefore, with this new view, they were then the sanctury; and right here the question comes up, When, then, was "both the sanctuary and the host?" The only church then in existence was the Jewish church, and if that was then the host, what was the sanctuary? It is better to seek for truth than to try to manufacture it. Let the "sanctuary" spoken of in this prophecy be what it may, it is certainly something distinct and different from the "host."

WM. SHELDON.—Voice.

THE THIEF ON THE CROSS HAS NO PROMISE OF PARADISE.

Proverbs 1: 23–25,—"Turn you at my reproof; . . . Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have set at nought all my counsels, and would none of my reproof." This the thief had done, or he would not have been condemned justly among thieves and robbers to die. And in view of this God says, ver. 26, "I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh";—his calamity had overtaken him, and God will laugh at such repentance; his fears had come, and the wise man says, God will mock him. "When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you."

This had all come upon the thief upon the cross. "Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me." This fits the case of the thief exactly. But what does the Holy Ghost say? "THEY SHALL NOT FIND ME." Question: Is the Holy Spirit, which inspired the apostles and prophets, going to belie itself? Nay, verily. Are the last flickering moments of an ill-spent life to be offered up to God with acceptance? The Holy Spirit says not. "THEY SHALL NOT FIND ME." Again, Paul says in reply, Gal. 5: 19–21,—"Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulation, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murder, drunkenness, revilings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." See 1 Cor. 6: 10,—"Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, nor revilers, nor extortioners, shall inherit the kingdom of God." See Luke 23: 42, 43,—"And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee to-day, shalt thou be with me in paradise?" This is evidently a question asked. "Shalt thou be with me in paradise?" In view of what the Holy Spirit has said by the mouth of the prophets, shalt thou be with me in Paradise? Nay, verily.—Prophetic Watchman.

I'M SO WEARY.

I'm so weary of this earth-life,
Where the billows rage and foam,
That my spirit sigheth, sigheth,—
I'm so weary, take me home.

I'm so weary of earth's false ones,
Everywhere my footsteps roam,
Those that turn my joy to sorrow,—
I'm so weary, take me home.

I'm so weary of life's shadows,
Of its coldness and its gloom,
Of its hopes, all blighted, faded,—
I'm so weary, take me home.

I'm so weary of time's death-sounds,
Of the low night-winds that moan
Over earth, and 'neath the star-gems,—
I'm so weary, take me home.

I'm so weary [illegible] broad path
Where my feet are prone to roam,
Oft I kneel and pray to Jesus,—
I'm so weary, take me home.

I'm so weary as I journey
Through this cold, false land alone;
Jesus, there's not one to love me,—
I'm so weary, take me home.

GROWING IN GRACE.

As I review the past year, and recount the blessings both temporal and spiritual which have been showered upon me, I can truly say I feel thankful to the great Giver of every good and perfect gift. And for what ought I to be more thankful than for the comforting evidence of growth in grace which I feel? Comparing the past year (since campmeeting) with all other past years, I see no one in which the light has been so steady and constant, and so constantly increasing, as during this last. Truly this is encouraging, and I feel to "thank God, and take courage." But I have not yet attained to all that I desire. I still "hunger and thirst after righteousness."

Pray that I may be filled with "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." I want to be filled with all the fruits of the Spirit—love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, truth, patience, brotherly-kindness, charity. I want to get entirely away from the breakers, shoals, rocks, and quicksands of doubt and fear, and find plenty of "sea-room" in the boundless ocean of infinite love. With that "hope which is an anchor of the soul," and the eye of faith fixed on Jesus, our course directed by the Bible as our chart and compass, we shall soon reach the blest haven of immortal glory.

SCOFFERS.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming?"—2 Pet. 3: 3–4.

These are what our Lord said should come "in the last days"; and is it not true? Does not the believer in the soon coming of our blessed Lord meet with scoffs and jeers on every hand? And it must be the end is near at hand; for he said "in the last days" these should arise; and, behold, they are already come. How many times we have it thrown at us, "You know not the time; you have set the time before and been disappointed. Where is the promise of his coming?" We know we are right, for these same scoffers could not have come before their time,—before "the last days." We are near, and very near the judgment. We are willing to be scoffed at a little. We shall soon be rid of it and all other earthly ills. Jesus is coming to destroy all sin, and gather home his saints. O what a happy day it will be, and how it makes our hearts rejoice when we think of it. Truly we can say, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Your Bro., looking for redemption,

ARE THE SCRIPTURES GIVEN BY INSPIRATION OF GOD?

What is implied by the expression, "given by inspiration of God?" What is inspiration? We shall give our definition, which our readers can accept or not, just as they see fit.

"Inspiration" is that divine illumination by which a writer is infallibly guided in the narration of events and statement of truths previously unknown, and which could not otherwise be known.

It is, in brief, such a divine guidance as secures its subjects from error in the communication of religious truth, and in the setting forth of other allied truth apart from which this "communication" could not be properly and fully made. The inspired penman writes at the suggestion, with the aid, and under the especial supervision of the Almighty. Inspired language is God's metal cast in human moulds. It is God's thoughts clothed in human idioms and forms of speech. Hence, the idiosyncrasies of the several writers stand out in bold relief. In the words of another, "the sacred writers were God's penmen, not his pens."

Inspiration leaves the natural power of the writer free to act within the sphere of truth.

Suppose now we assume two kinds of inspiration. For want of better terms, let us name them historic and Apocalyptical inspiration; or the inspiration of narration and the inspiration of revelation. The two kinds will differ in this, that the former deals with known and revealed truth, the latter with unknown and unrevealed. They agree in this, that both infuse into the communication the element of infallibility, in the line of the end which the divine mind proposes to itself.

Let us see the workings of historic inspiration. The inspired historian is unerringly guided in his researches, in his selection of facts. As the prompter carefully watches the actor upon the stage, corrects him when he goes wrong, suggests the right word when he hesitates, but allows him to proceed undisturbed when he goes right, so, we think, in a somewhat similar way God operates upon the mind of the sacred writer. He leaves it free to work rightly, but prevents its working wrongly. He, however, exercises a constant and careful supervision over the work.

There is no reason to suppose that any uninspired historian is perfectly accurate and reliable. To suppose this, is to assume that man has attained a perfection in the department of history, which he has reached nowhere else. It is safe to affirm that all profane historians have, in some respect, been unduly swayed by personal motives, by partizan prejudice, by following old authorities too implicitly, or by a desire to magnify their own country. They all have blundered more or less, and, in most cases, these blunders have been pointed out by succeeding writers.

Now we maintain that the sacred historians were supernaturally preserved from these blunders, inaccuracies and biases, that they were guided by the Spirit of truth, that they wrote that which seemed to the divine mind best adapted to the great end in view. In a word, they produced an impartial, faithful and true history, though designedly, and for wise reasons, the events are not always related in the precise order of their occurrence.

Nor does inspiration of this kind preclude in the least, the fact or the necessity of the historians's making all practicable effort to ascertain the truth for himself. God never does that for man which man himself can do. Thus, in writing Genesis, Moses may have made, and probably did make, use of ancient documents and oral traditions. But then he was divinely guided in making a selection from existing materials, in discriminating between the reliable and the unreliable, the true and the false.

So the fact, that Luke, before commencing to write his gospel, "accurately traced out all from the very first," affords no presumption whatever that he was not unerringly guided in this investigation and in his subsequent writing.

Does the fact, that Luke says, "it seemed good to me," prove that it did not ALSO "seem good to the HOLY GHOST" (see Acts xv. 28) that Luke should write his gospel? We think not? Is the expression at all inconsistent with the idea that God moved Luke to make careful and thorough research to commit to writing the results of his investigation, and that he guided him and preserved him from error in the execution of his self-imposed yet divinely allotted task? We fail to see that it is. . . .

"Apocalyptic inspiration" discloses to man all that truth which he needs to know and which he could not discover by his own unaided efforts. We suppose the inspiration which guided the apostles and prophets to have been largely apocalyptic.

Such in brief is our view of the subject. Inspiration stamps the Bible with Heaven's broad seal of truth. It gives weight and meaning and authority to the teachings and statements of the Bible, such as no other book possesses. It makes the Bible God's own book.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

WINE DRINKING.

We regard the question of wine drinking by Americans as one of great concern at the present time, when grape-growing and the manufacture of wine are making such rapid strides in our western states—when the German element, with their wine-drinking habits, is becoming so large, and when even our temperance men are looking with favor upon the use of wine as advantageous to the temperance cause. Unquestionably, it is less pernicious than the coarser varieties of alcohol, as brandy, rum, Bourbon; and if all who use these beverages would substitute wine they would be gainers. But while the good effects of its use stop here, the evil only begins. All over the country, since it has been purposed to substitute this drink for brandy and rum, a multitude of temperance families—those who signed the pledge years and years ago, and fought for total abstinence—have manufactured it in their families from grapes, if they had them, and if not, from other fruits, and commenced its use. It is this class who will take to this beverage, and not those whom we wish might substitute it for worse drink. Now, let us look at what science says regarding this subject. Wine contains from fifteen to thirty per cent. of alcohol. Port wine may be taken as a standard, and contains twenty-three per cent. Now, what is alcohol? A poison. Every writer on toxicology thus classifies it. This fact alone would lead us, if not to condemn, at least to think it in all probability objectionable. A very small quantity of alcohol injected into the veins of a man or animal produces immediate death. It changes and vitiates the character of the secretions. Healthy saliva reddens litmus paper, but after a small quantity of alcohol has been taken, this paper when touched to the tongue becomes green, showing that it has been deteriorated. Mixed with the food during the process of digestion these vital processes are delayed. "It is a remarkable fact," says Dr. Dundas Thompson, "that alcohol, mixed with the gastric juice produces a precipitate, so that the fluid is no longer capable of digesting animal or vegetable matter. Drs. Todd and Bowman say that the use of alcoholic stimulants "retard digestion by causing coagulation of the pepsin, an essential element of the gastric juice." It irritates and inflames the coats of the stomach—in time produces loss of its tone.

Passing to the blood, we find the pathological effects upon this important fluid to be an alteration of the shape of the blood globules, and often almost or entirely destroys them prematurely. It also arrests, according to the experiments of Virchow, the celebrated pathologist, the developments of the blood-globules, even before the health is apparently affected. This injury to the globules prevents complete aeration of the blood, and thus diminishes the manifestations of life; for it is a pretty regular rule in physiology, both animal and human, that the more perfect the areation of the blood the more life is manifested. This deterioration of the blood can not fail to result in imperfect nutrition of the tissues of the body.

Its effects upon the heart are very much the same as that of a half-dozen hornets upon as many mischievous boys, causing great action on their part to get out of the way or to get the hornets out of the way. The heart, under the excitement of wine, pumps away rapidly to get rid of the enemy. A glass of wine or brandy will increase the pulses from five to fifteen beats in a few minutes. Diseases of the heart are much more frequent among drinkers than the temperate. And so we might go on till we have shown that there is not an organ of the body but is unfavorably affected by alcoholic stimulants. Science exclaims it is a poison and produces a poisonous effect, and too many dying persons have echoed back the same words in tones deep and sorrowful. . . .

An American divine recently writing from Italy says:—"We have heard Americans earnestly declare 'that nobody gets drunk in Italy, or in any country where wine takes the place of stronger liquors.' Now, the Italian laborer rarely begins his potations until his day's work is done; consequently, travelers see and know very little of the extent of them. They carouse from about sundown to ten, eleven, and often twelve o'clock at night. Their money spent, they reel to their wretched homes, and the cries of their children and the groans of their wives soon tell of the fury and brutality which mark the drunkard the world over, whether he wear homespun or broadcloth. During a few years of residence in Italy our household was served at different times by some eleven men and women servants, most of them useless through wine-drinking.

A Swiss physician told us that, throughout that region, with the culture of the vine had come the curse of drunkenness. Two most excellent pastors of the Vaudois church gave a similar testimony, and stated that very few of the working men could now be induced to attend churches on Sundays, or to give any heed to religious teaching.—Herald of Health.

DON'T KNOW THE INJURY.

The victims of the weed don't know the extent of the injury they sustain. We know a most able and eloquent minister who stood up boldly in conference to defend his use of tobacco as necessary to his health. Others could see that he was under a delusion. His countenance had that leaden hue so characteristic of the half-death of excessive tobacco users. His heart disease was the derangement of the circulation by poison. Besides the effect upon health, the habit injures his influence. A lady, whose house bore the marks of his vile habit, could not believe him pure-minded; her association when she heard him, forbade the full benefit of his ministrations. People do not often speak of such things, but they observe and reflect. Happy they who avoid the appearance of evil. Unfortunately this minister has not reformed.

A classmate in college would not allow that tobacco injured him, but at length when in Newton theological seminary, he grew weak and sickly, till his physicians plainly told him that he must give up tobacco or die. He gave it up, and soon began to improve in health, and became in a few months a new man—physically renovated. He could do twice the mental work that he had done before, and began to enjoy life in reality.

Another classmate at East Windsor encountered good Dea. Ellsworth, who had charge of the seminary buildings. Dea. Ellsworth would not endure the nuisance, and reproved with such a power of moral indignation, that the student was thoroughly convicted of his sin, and abandoned the habit of smoking, chewing and snuffing. After he got clear of his enemy he had many confessions to make of the injury, especially to his temper. After narrating how peevish and passionate tobacco made him, till he needed something intense to cap the climax, he added, "It made a devil of me."—Ch. Sec.

CITRIC ACID IN CAMPHOR.

The cooling and tonic effects of lemon juice are well known. Citric acid is, to all intents and purposes, crystalized lemon juice, and is often used as a substitute for lemons in making lemonade, etc. An Italian physician, Dr. Brandini, finding that a patient, with a cancer of the tongue, received great relief in eating lemons, was induced to try the effect of citric acid on other cancer patients, which he did much to their relief. In a case of hopelessly incurable cancer, under our own observation it has been used with the happiest results, and afforded a greater relief from pain than any other application that has been tried. We found that this use of citric acid was not known to the physicians of our acquaintance, and we give it for the benefit of our medical readers. The crystalized acid is used, one part by weight, to ninety parts of soft water. The weight of a common nickel cent to a pint of water, comes sufficiently near. The solution is applied by moistening a piece of lint, and renewed when the pain returns.—Agriculturist.

CURE OF CHOLERA.

Dr. Robini, of Naples, treated 377 cases of cholera in almshouses, and among soldiers in all the various stages of the disease, without losing a patient. How did he treat them so successfully? Simply by giving a strong solution of camphor at the rate of one pound gum camphor to a pint of alcohol. As a preventive he gives five drops on sugar, full strength, three times a day. No water must be given with it, as it will liberate the camphor. As a remedy for the disease he gave four drops on sugar every five minutes. In very severe cases, from five to twenty drops every five minutes. For aged persons where the remedy did not readily act, he gave a small teaspoonful every five minutes. Reaction soon occurs, and in two, three or four hours abundant perspiration comes on, and then a cure will follow. From our own observation of its effects, we have great confidence in camphor for cholera. The strongest alcohol is necessary to take up so great a portion of camphor.

WHAT IS SALERATUS?—Wood is burnt to ashes; these are lixivated, and lye is the result. Lye is evaporated by boiling, black salt is the residuum. The salt undergoes purification by fire, and the potash of commerce is obtained. By another process we change potash into pearlash. Now put these in sacks, and place them over a distillery mash tub, where the fermentation evolves carbonic acid gas, and the pearlash absorbs it and is rendered solid; the product being heavier, whiter, and drier than the pearlash. It is now saleratus. How much such salts of lye and carbonic acid gas one can bear and remain healthy, is a question for a saleratus eater.

CURE FOR A BURN.—By laying a piece of charcoal on a burn, the pain subsides immediately. By leaving the charcoal on one hour, the wound is healed, as has been demonstrated on several occasions. The remedy is cheap and simple, and certainly deserves a trial.

THE FAR-OFF LAND.

In the far-off land, where the ransomed meet,
To cast their crowns at the Savior's feet;
'Mid the joyful hosts, that by faith I see,
O say, is there room in that throng for me?

I have heard of the health of that sunny clime,
Of the breezes that blow o'er those hills sublime;
And, while strangling here in this deadened air,
I have panted and prayed for the pure breeze there.

They say, in that land, all the weary may rest,
With no foe to intrude and no fear to molest;
That the loved ones we laid in the cold damp tomb,
Shall, living again, to that bright world come.

There Jesus reigns, and he sheds his light
All thro' the city, where is known no night;
And the music of angels and ransomed men
Shall fill all the earth with melody then.

O the far-off land is now specially nigh,
Its shores can be seen by faith's keen eye;
And, through Jesus' blood, 'mid that throng, I see
A place and a palm and a crown for me.

"A MARKED YEAR.—1866."

Under the above heading, we find the following in the June No. of the Guide to Holiness. We are glad to learn that our Methodist brethren are becoming interested in "the signs of the times," which so plainly declare that Jesus is soon coming.—ED.

Thus far, the year 1866 has been remarkably signalized for the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of believers. The editor of the "North-Western Christian Advocate" says, "We have made a hasty inspection of our revival reports, and find that, amid them them all, about seventy-five pastors only have stated distinctly the number of probationers received. Disregarding all others, we have fully authenticated material to estimate the addition to the church within the bounds of our circulation, since January 1st, at about 9,569. By States, they are distributed thus: Michigan, 1,488; Wisconsin. 651; Iowa, 999; Indiana, 2,110; Illinois, 3,399; Minnesota, 92; Nebraska, 78; undesignated states 752.

These reports are defective to a great extent. For instance: Wisconsin gives an addition of but 651, whereas our reports show that the conversions in that State number nearly two thousand.

The distinct reports to which we restrict our estimate are about seventy-five. Now, there are at least twelve conferences within our regular circulation, averaging one hundred charges each; hence but about one-sixteenth of the whole number have sent reports. Assuming that all could send corresponding returns, we should have an aggregate of over one hundred and fifty thousand additions to the church in our North-western field. Of course, we may not expect this; but the statement illustrates the magnitude of the divine marvel which accurate returns would announce.

We fully believe that the church will receive an addition of at least twenty-five per cent during the Centenary year; and we hope our ministers will promptly, conscientiously, and accurately forward their reports. Even the additions we have named are based upon figures given, in many instances, while the revival was in progress. We hope to receive amended muster-rolls at the close of the campaign, and in the mean time have the privilege of reporting progress to encourage the armies now confronting the enemy."

The editor of the "Western Advocate" observes, "Since the commencement of the present year, the 'Western Advocate,' it is stated, has reported no less than ten thousand who have been brought into the church within this short period! This is a grand opening for the Centenary year. It is said, believers in revelation have, for more than a thousand years, looked forward to the year 1866 as one in which the Son of God would manifest himself to the christian world as he never did before. It is a coincidence of no small moment that the Centenary of American Methodism should fall on this same year."

Other of our contemporaries might make a similar report. From notices of revivals which have come under our own observation since our last month's issue, we see, as hopefully added to the ranks of the saved, nearly thirty thousand. These, added to those given in our two preceding numbers, make an aggregate of about one hundred thousand.

And yet we know that this is far from setting forth the full magnitude of the work; these numbers being mainly taken from religious exchanges as they met our eye, and which we have reason to know would have been considerably augmented had all our exchange papers come to hand. It is also proper to add, that, of the number of those newly enlisted in the service of Jesus, nearly all hail under the banner of Methodism.

Rev. S. Irwin, pastor of the Emory M. E. Church, Philadelphia, says, "The revival which commenced about five months since is unabated. Persons are found nightly at the altar of prayer. The converts average at least one hundred per month since the meeting began, amounting in all up to this time to five hundred and thirty-five who have professed to find the Savior." What a work is this! And yet this is but one out of over a score of items assuring us that the Holy Spirit is mightily at work among the people.

Eighteen hundred and sixty-six is a year that has been looked forward to with great interest by the many who have identified themselves with that form of christianity denominated Methodism. Just one hundred years ago, the first Methodist society was formed in America. When it took its rise in England, a little over a century ago, it was regarded by many as a revival of primitive christianity; others have spoken of it as christianity in earnest. This certainly is just what it should be in view of the stringency of its doctrines and self-sacrificing principles. It is well known that HOLINESS is the distinguishing doctrine of Methodism. Of this, the crowning doctrine of the crowning dispensation, Mr. Wesley says, "This is the peculiar doctrine committed to our trust." Where this is enforced as a blessing to be received now, and to be received by faith, there Methodism prospers; but, where it is not, there is little grace either in the members or hearers. It is not only worthy of note, but of special thanksgiving to God, that, since the Centenary year commenced, a new era of almost unparalleled revivals have opened upon us. Glory be to God in the highest!

The year 1866 has also been signalized in the minds of many devoted students of prophecy. Says one, "The calculations of most of those who have tried to penetrate the prophetic periods terminate between 1830 and 1880." David Chytræus, D. D., in 1571 writes' "The end may be expected in 1866." Avetius, who died in 1574, advanced the same idea. Rev. William Whitson, in 1706, advocated the same; also Archbishop Laud. Rev. Thomas Scott, D. D., the commentator, born in England in 1747, says the beginning of the 1260 years cannot be well fixed sooner than A. D. 606, or later than A. D. 756, 1260 years from the first date end in 1866. Rev. William Cogswell, D. D., Secretary of the American Education Society, in a manual published in 1836, makes 1866 the probable time for the latter-day glory of the church, and says it is agreeable to the most learned and modern writers on the prophecies. Rev. A. Bryant says, one of the most prominent periods fixed for the termination of the 1260 years is 1866. Rev. John Wesley, Rev. John Fletcher, and Dr. Benson, also have left on record their belief that a little prior to or about the present time, 1866, the prophetic periods culminate.

The devoted Bickersteth and Mr. Birks mark the limit of our world's age to 1877 or 1882. Rev. E. B. Elliot says the 1260 years of Antichrist's dominion end in 1866. Thus we see many of the devoted and learned christians bring the time of the end as near at hand. We have never been of those who would set the day or hour of Christ's coming; but we do know that he who ascended from Mount Olivet near two thousand years ago said he would come again. The angels told the disciples, as they were gazing upward as the cloud received him out of their sight, that he would in like manner descend.

When he made his revelation to St. John, he said, "Behold, I come quickly!" The early disciples were in earnest expectancy of his coming. We certainly live in the "last days" as foretold by the prophet Joel; because Peter said, on that wonderful day which ushered in the Spirit's dispensation, "This is that which was spoken by Joel: it shall come to pass in the last days," etc. Again he says, in his epistle to the saints, "We upon whom the ends of the world have come," etc. If Peter, by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, could say thus nearly two thousand years ago, in what period of the world may we imagine that we are now living? We judge also from analogy. The patriarchchal age was about 2,000 years; then came the Mosaic dispensation, which also continued about 2,000 years; then was ushered in the Spirit's dispensation, as foretold by Joel; and now we are being brought toward the completion of the six thousand years which we have reason to believe will usher in the grand Sabbatic year, when he who said, "Behold, I come quickly," will come, and claim the kingdoms of this world. And where is the christian heart but will, from its inmost depths, exclaim, "Come, Lord Jesus: come quickly."

"Watch, ye saints, with eyelids waking;
Lo! the powers of heaven are shaking;
Keep your lamps all trimmed and burning,
Ready for your Lord's returning.
Jesus comes!

Lo! the promise of your Savior;
Pardoned sins and purchased favor,
Blood-washed robes and crowns of glory,
Haste to tell redemption's story.
Jesus comes!"

THE POWER OF KNOWLEDGE.

It has been said, and not without some reason, that "knowledge is power." If this be true, then he who neglects to provide himself with this element of moral strength, should not complain if he be compelled to eat the fruits of his own imbecility. The knowledge of true and undefiled religion should be the first object for us to pursue; for it enlightens the mind, softens the heart, and fits us for every emergency. He that would deprive us of this christian hope is our inveterate enemy. He snatches from us the last cup of consolation, and returns it impregnated with horrid forebodings as to the future. As we value our peace and safety, let us avoid those cold and cheerless sayings, which teach us that the grave is our eternal home; or, what is worse, "that death is a passport to eternal fires."

Lay hold, dear readers, on the hope set before you, with the firm assurance that God will open his hand and satisfy the desires of every christian believer. This hope of happiness beyond the dark Jordan of death, was implanted in our bosom by the God who made us; and we doubt not but he that feeds our bodies daily with food, will also give us to drink of that river of immortal love which flows from the throne of the Eternal. May all those who are engaged in this heaven-born cause feel and realize the responsibilities that rest upon them. May they assiduously guard against the debasing influence of false doctrine, which destroys the happiness of the true believer. Let christianity be regarded as being before all other, and above all other enterprises. Thus shall we go on from conquering unto conquest, cheered by the smiles of heaven, and blessed by the approbation of God.

Now, as knowledge and religion have been set before us to treasure up for our happiness and best good, by an All-wise Being, let not those gifts appear in a low degree. But let us show by improving them that we are christians indeed; and that we mean, through the grace of God, to secure to ourselves the great reward.

Dearly beloved, it appears to me, by what I can learn from the Scriptures of truth, and what is now transpiring, that Christ is soon coming to cleanse and judge the earth. If this be the case, let us strive with all the power and wisdom we have to meet him in peace, that we may be accepted of him, when he shall come to gather up his precious jewels.

Now, before I dismiss this weighty subject, let me say, we must have this christian knowledge within ourselves, before it will bear to us any important effect. We must not look to the arm of flesh for it, but unto God, with prayer and supplication, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not. It would be well for us to remember that we are placed here in this transitory world to learn what we can, and to prepare ourselves for a better one, beyond the grave. Blessed is the man who lives up to the light he has, and thrice blessed is the man that hath attained the knowledge and light that the Scriptures afford. J. ELKINS.

REFLECTIONS ON THE PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

For the past five weeks, being sick and not able to do anything, but a few chores round the house, I have had more than usual reflections on the past nineteen years, since I first heard the glorious news of our soon coming Lord. Then this life-giving message found me living without hope or God in the world, and fast traveling towards the infidel's road; all caused by the teaching, as well as the practice of professed Christians; but after a careful and deep searching of the word of God, I soon found a different doctrine taught by prophets, Jesus, and his apostles; also a different life for the Christian to live; and my greatest sorrow is that I have not during all those years past adorned that christian life, which the ever-blessed truth has demanded of me; and it is only through the unfailing love and rich grace of God that I have been kept to this day, still loving the christian's only "blessed hope."

When I reflect on those years past, and know what sad work the adversary has done, not only in laying many of the most faithful soldiers under his power in death, but being more busily engaged in sowing tares. Where love and union once reigned, now there is discord, strife, and hatred. Where once there were loving churches of believers, who loved to pray with one another; now, scarcely one can be found who returns praise and glory to God. O the unholy war and strife, breaking up and dividing into parties, seeking for honor one of another, without paying regard to the new commandment which our blessed Lord gave to his disciples, that the world might know that they were the disciples of Christ. Their faith enabled them to step out on the promises of God, cut loose from the world, and all its pride and vanity, and adorn themselves like holy ones of old (1 Tim. 2: 9; 2 Pet. 3: 3); and a few do so now. But look at the majority (I wish I could be convinced my calculation was too large); see the conformity to the world in fashion, and pride. Mothers, who say they are looking for the Lord, indulging their daughters in all the foolish pride and vanity that their vain hearts covet; and at the same time will complain of their leanness, and that they do not enjoy themselves as they once did. To such the apostle gives some very wholesome advice in Heb. 3: 6, 12–14. Here, the conditions of our being of the "house" of Christ are, "if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the HOPE firm unto the end." And that "we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." How many there are who have lost the steadfast confidence they once had in Christ, by being conformed to this vain world; and yet they will hold on to the truth in theory, like holding on to the boat drifting on to the rapids, when they have left off using the oars, the only available means for their safety. What necessity of returning to the "first love"; more conforming to Christ, and less to the world; more letting the light shine, and less talking about the light.

THE PRESENT.

Without the sure word of prophecy, the present would be a dark picture to look at in all its surroundings, political, moral, and religious. The political world is now about to fill out their last move, as foretold by prophets, Joel 3: 9–12; Jer. 25: 32, 33; Dan. 12: 1; Rev. 16: 13, 14.

The moral and religious state of society is such that we need not the light of prophecy to tell us where we are. But yet we are not left in darkness. We have line upon line, and precept upon precept. I want to hasten by this dark, DARK picture. When we know that many, who ought to be the light of the world, the salt of the earth, are only stumbling-blocks in the way, increasing the perils of these last days.

THE FUTURE.

Who would know anything about it without the light of prophecy? And how little does the professed christian world know about the future, as God has been pleased to make it known by the Holy Spirit through his servants. Their ignorance is about as great as the heathen portion of the world. But with a knowledge of the sure word of prophecy, the future looks bright and glorious. The apostle says, "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of LIGHT." I am glad I have ever been made to see the light of prophecy. It has lit up my pathway for these nineteen years in the past, and now, when we know we are near the perfect day, it shines more glorious than ever before. But those who once walked in the light, but now the God of this world hath blinded their eyes, so they cannot see what is shortly coming to pass; such are in a sad state, and are to be pitied. May their eyes be opened before it will be too late. I wish these slaves of pride and fashion would give heed to what the apostle says in 2 Cor. 11: 3,—"But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." Take heed! beware of his devices!

The glorious future shines brightly and clearly. Soon sorrow's tear will all be wiped out. For

"There'll be no more sorrow there."

Hasten, O Lord, the welcome day.

For the World's Crisis.

GIVE US YOUR NAME,

Is the request Bro. Grant has repeatedly made. Perhaps he is right; but I, for one, have been rather unwilling to comply with that request. There may be some (especially among my acquaintance), who have wondered why I wrote for the Crisis. I will tell you. I felt so glad that I had been enabled to get the scales from my eyes, and see the beauty and harmony of the word of God, and plan of redemption, and to believe the blessed truths of the Bible, that I wanted to express my gratitude; and the way we travel is so emphatically a pilgrim's and a stranger's path, I was anxious to do something to help some poor fainting traveler on the way. And as my "bodily presence was weak," and my "speech contemptible," I thought perhaps I might write something which might benefit somebody a little. I wanted to remain hidden, but Bro. Grant seems to be firm in his decision that all writers for "our paper" must be introduced to its readers by name; so I had about concluded I would write no more.

But a good Bro. has given me a lesson. He spoke of something I had written. I told him he would probably see no more from my pen, for Bro. Grant was very particular to have the name given, and I did not want my name to appear again; and I did not like the idea of writing for the great preachers to read. He said if I wrote for the great preachers, I might well feel delicate; but if it was to comfort and strengthen God's little ones, I ought to be willing to let them know who was talking to them. Well, they are the ones I write for, certainly; so if any great folks, who stand head and shoulders above the army, with great minds, giant intellects, and thrilling eloquence, should happen to see anything from my pen, they need not read it. I do not write for them; they do not need my small talk. It is my companions—the weak ones of the flock, God's little children, that I address. Surely we ought to try and help each other. And if we are united in the bonds of sympathy and love, we may be stronger than the giants who stand independent and alone. A number of small sticks bound together, and helping each other, may be stronger than one large stick alone.

We will not grieve because we are small; the little ones of the household are always loved the best; and the weak and sickly ones receive more of the parents' care and sympathy than the strong and robust. Are you one of Christ's little ones? "He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom." Nestle close to his breast, for he loves you. Do you feel weak and faint and weary? Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth his weak, trembling little ones. Lean upon him, trust in him, and he will be your strength. Do you in deep abasement feel utterly unworthy to be numbered among the children of God? Ah! I know how to pity you. But Christ is worthy; in his name we'll come, and pleading his righteousness we'll claim the promise of the Father, the forgiveness of sin, the witness of the Spirit, and eternal life.

Do you hide "among the stuff" and say, "I am so small, I can do nothing for the cause of God, nothing to strengthen his children, nothing to induce sinners to forsake the path which leads to death?" How do you know? Have you tried? Have you done what you could? If you have, you have done as much as the mightiest man can do. Don't refuse to let your candle burn and shine, because somebody carries a great blazing torch. The moon fills her place in the sky as well as the dazzling sun. Let us each fulfill our mission, do what we can in trying to strengthen the weak, comfort the sorrowful, and raise up the bowed down; not forgetting the poor sinner. And if we trust in God and lean on his strong arm, he will assist us in our endeavors to work for him.

In trying to strengthen the weak, we gain strength. In comforting the sorrowful, we get joy; and in forgetting self and working for others, we are ourselves built up and established in the faith. We will not seek for earthly honor, or a great name; but we will try to keep the name we have untarnished by dishonor, and the immoralities of this wicked generation. We will try to keep ourselves free from the influence of evil spirits, which is being thrown around the people to draw them down to perdition. Then, as we pass along on our journey, trying to do a little good, and leave a mark for God, if those we try to help look up and ask us who we are, we will look them honestly in the face, and frankly give them our names.

TRUTH.

What is truth concerning us and the Bible? and how may we know the truth? None doubt our being and existence, hence this is a reality. Now is what the Bible relates concerning the report of this reality, truth? We read, "The word of the Lord . . . . is truth." "Every word of God is pure." "My word shall come to pass." "The word of our God shall stand forever." By what may we know that these are the words of God? By their own language, as you would understand your child by its voice. What man among us, since this world was made, hath said, "Let there be light, and there was light"?—let the earth bring forth fruit, flowers, and grass, and it was so?—and let us form man of the dust of the earth, and breathe into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul; and it was so? Where is the infidel who could prove himself a man from a horse, were it not for the word of God? Where is the man that hath said, I have declared the end of this world from the beginning, and had an idiot to believe him, much more a wise man? Hath ever man, from the highest throne to the lowest footstool, made laws and judgments for the entire world, and they abide today as firm as they did six thousand years ago?

The word of God is truth. Job believed the word of God, for he esteemed his words more than necessary food, and told the Lord that when he died he would wait his appointed time, and when called would answer. Job here refers to the day when Christ says all in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth. Is this truth? Has Christ ever called man from the grave after be wasburied? Then where is the man, in this age of wisdom and progress, who could step to the grave of his friend or foe and say, Come forth, and they should hear his voice and come?

"Every word of God is pure." When the infidel reads about Noah, the ark, and the flood, he says it is all a hoax; and when asked, How came the sea-shells and beach-stones on the tops of the highest mountains? his skill is completely baffled, and like the old lady, when she could not account for the Indians, came to the conclusion that they rained down, or made themselves.

The word of God is truth, not one of doubt, uncertainty, and variation, made up of mere human opinions; and should be one of undoubted certainty, infallible, consisting of positive truths and facts; and will stand, whether we believe it or not.

Summer with all its splendor cometh, the flowers bloom and all pass away; but the word of God remaineth the same. Man cometh forth to honor, is laid low, passeth away, and is forgotten. God's word must stand. Who then dare doubt the infallible word of God? and who really believes it in these latter days?

Why were the Jews (the chosen people of God) rejected? not for neglecting to pray, for they made long prayers; not for neglecting to keep the Sabbath, for in that none were more strict than they; not for neglecting to meet at the place of worship, for all were punctual. For what, then, were the Jews rejected? For not believing the word of God. How then could they, or will any one else be saved, who believe not the words of Christ, since God hath said he that believeth shall have everlasting life, and he that believeth not shall be damned? How important that we live, not in unbelief, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God.

CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

"Be pitiful, be courteous," said an apostle of Christ. Christianity gives directions touching the manners of men as well as their morals. Indeed, the manners of men decide much for the man.

An individual may be as positive in morals as John the Baptist, and as unbending in religious devotions as Elijah the prophet, but without an exhibition of courteousness in his manners, he will fail to exert an influence by social contact. The character of the Savior could not be discovered, fully, without intimacy. It was when the poor blind beggar cried to him in anguish, that he showed that peculiar manner of treating men, which ornaments the historic page. He turned not in disdainful scorn away from blind Bartimeus, but left the highway to honor the beggar by his presence. He waited not for a king's call. A petition from a prince would have had no more power upon him than the trembling appeal of the poorest of earth's oppressed millions. He acknowledged no power in the sceptre of kings, except by the gift from above.

A rude or rough manner never constituted any part of the attraction of his life. There was boldness of deep religious faith and feeling, not that of an uncourteous eccentric.

In a religion of which bigotry and dogmatism constitute important elements, courteousness is not manifest, except when it is mingled with hypocrisy. The proud sectary may be affable and winning in his manner, with those who are of the same stripe with himself, or with those whose wealth stirs up a hope in hypocrisy; but to those who do not say the "amen" to his theory, he disdains to stoop in courtesy.

The flatterer and deceiver is more than courteous. He overdoes the truth, and deceives the simple. He is winning, but he baits with the poison which must ultimately destroy. The man of true christian courtesy deceives none, because he is true in his pretensions of friend.

The sycophant will fawn and flatter. But flattery was never a part of friendship. The man who may study to learn the bias of our inclinations, only that he may keep on the right side of our pleasure, and profit himself thereby, is not the man of christian courtesy; but he is like the tempting bait which helps the trap to catch the simple hare.

To very many, the volume of human nature is not an open and readable book. They are not warned by the deceptive baits of the flatterers, but in sipping the sugar, they swallow the poison.

The language of actions is emphatic. It is an old maxim that "Actions speak louder than words." An act of christian courtesy expresses the idea, "I would be glad to please you," or, "I am happy to render you beneficial service." This language is not that of speech. It is the language of actions. The genuine christian talks through deeds. The sycophant—the flatterer—the hypocrite is full of wordy love. With polite bow, and a graceful touch of his hat, he may deal out his soft words of false friendship; but he practises no christian courtesy. He may pour a thousand warm wishes upon the child of need and suffering; but it is not in his heart to show true benevolence.

No man should occupy a doubtful position in that which relates to the most important matters of human life. No man should be satisfied to occupy a religious position to which he attaches so little importance that he would not eagerly invite others to join him, saying, "Come, go with us, and we will do you good."

There are in the church persons of very diversified talents, and among all men an unmeasured variety of conditional circumstances. Each knows and feels his own trials, and imagines others to be less tried than himself. Cold indifference or personal scorn is never becoming in a professed follower of Jesus, towards any person.

It is not the pinching grip of the hand, it is not the superabundance of smiles, it is not love in language, which proves the true christian. But it is he who does good as he has opportunity, respects the image of God everywhere, is just to an enemy, faithful to a friend, pitiful to the unfortunate, patient with the erring, and courteous to all.—Christian Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE SCATTERED ONES.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—It is with feelings of thankfulness that I write a few lines to the dear, scattered, tried, and tempted ones. I wish to glorify my heavenly Father by offering praise to him, who hath bought me with his own precious blood. Glory be to his blessed name, he hath abundantly blessed me of late, for which I do praise him. I have long felt that there were great blessings in reserve for me: and although I have often felt a measure of the Spirit, and have often been blessed in prayer, and in giving my feeble testimony for Christ; yet I have as often felt a hungering and thirsting after righteousness. I wanted the fulness I had years ago when I first embraced the Advent doctrine, and with it the doctrine of holiness. I then drank from the fountain. I knew there was living water there. I wanted to drink and never thirst; for says Jesus, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life."

I tried hard a few years ago to work out a righteousness. It was truly hard work. I made no progress, and when I came to myself I found it was as filthy rags; it would not cover me. I would exhort those who are trying to become righteous by doing righteousness, to cease at once. You can never accomplish it; but go immediately to Christ, and obtain that righteousness which is of God by faith. It is a whole garment, a beautiful garment; one which will cover completely. I I found it so, and I could say that, "being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." But thank the good Lord, I have found of late a fulness in Christ that I have not experienced since 1843, when my mind was enlightened upon the doctrine of entire consecration. How true that if we give all, we shall receive all; not for giving as a reward, but in giving according to the plan. God is true. He will not deny himself. If we get down where blessings flow, we become a sharer. O how precious, how blessed, peace like "a river and . . . righteousness as the waves of the sea,"—a continual flow. Man cannot stop it. Day and night, streams of salvation roll on, while divine rays of heavenly light illuminate the soul. No wonder angels shouted "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men," at the birth of our Saviour. What a complete Saviour, and we are so complete in him.

Language fails to describe it; pen cannot write it; but bless the Lord, our hearts feel it. O methinks I see (in imagination) many a dear countenance brighten, and hear the response from many a loving heart that is a sharer in this blessed work. Let us be bold witnesses for God and not shun to declare what the Lord has done for us, and not for —"Fear of feeble man,

The Spirit's course in us restrain;
But undismayed in deed and word,
Be true witnesses of our Lord."

We know the children of the bond-woman persecute the children of the free, as Paul says; but as then he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the Spirit; even so it is now; but we'll "never mind the scoffs nor the frowns of the world," but keep our hearts full of love to all. Blessed be God, if our hearts are full of love, there will be no room for any hard feeling, or any ill will toward any.

O Brethren and sisters,

"Ye who know your sins forgiven,
And are happy in the Lord,
Have you read that gracious promise
Which is left upon record?
I will sprinkle you with water,
I will cleanse you from all sin
Sanctify and make you holy,
I will dwell and reign within?
Though you have much peace and comfort,
Greater things you yet may find;
Freedom from unholy tempers,
Freedom from the carnal mind.
To procure your perfect freedom,
Jesus suffered groaned and died;
On the cross, the healing fountain
Gushed from his wounded side.
Wake up, brother, wake up, sister,
Seek, O seek the holy state;
None but holy ones can enter
Through the pure celestial gate."

The Lord promised that in the last days he would pour out of his Spirit upon all flesh. It began to be fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. The promise of the Father holds good to-day. Says Peter, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The baptism of the Spirit is ours to-day by faith; and as our motto, or pass-word is, or should be, (as Bro. Fassett says) "Our Lord is coming," how important we prepare to meet our Judge. And then again how solemn to live, even if we did not expect Jesus in our day. Truth remains the same. Death is on our track. We may be suddenly cut down.

O Sinner, while it is called to-day, repent and harden not your heart. O dear brethren and sisters, seek an entire conformity to the will of God. Come out from the world and be separate. Be not conformed to its maxims and fashions. My dear sisters, let us heed Peter's advice,—"whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and the wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price;" and as Paul says, "adorn" ourselves "in modest apparel, . . . not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works."

I would refer you to that most excellent letter of Dr. A. Judson (late missionary to Burmah) to the female members of christian churches in America; also Mrs. Wade's letter, who was another very useful member of the mission. I'm thinking, if they could write as they did thirty-five years ago, how much more ought we to lift our warning voice in these days of pride and vanity. Surely we have fallen upon the perils of the last days, and our only safety is in denying ourselves daily and taking up our cross and following Christ.

May God endow his servants, whom he has called to stand in defense of the gospel, with power from on high, that they may not speak "in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance," and your labor will not be in vain in the Lord.

In the language of Dr. Judson, I would say, Let us all do now as we shall then wish we had done when we stand before that awful bar, in the presence of God.

Your Sister, willing to become of no reputation for Christ's sake.

DEPARTURE FROM THE FAITH.

BRO. GRANT:—It is indeed painful to every true christian to witness the present departure on the part of numerous professors of religion from the true faith—that faith bequeathed by our Savior Christ and a St. Paul to a perishing world, and of which invaluable faith each disciple of our Lord should constitute an exemplar and an exponent.

It is not many evenings since that a private masquerade was held in our city, at which members of our principal churches were present and personated negresses and other ludicrous counterfeits. In connection with this arises the question, Would St. Paul, if alive, approve of such and similar inconsistencies, and refusing to approve fail to privately reprimand and publicly condemn the same? I for one am a radical opponent of each and all of the devices of the devil to defraud us of that which, by contrition and self-denial, we have obtained, and can only forfeit by a departure from the faith. Carnal pleasures, popularity, and a lukewarm faith,—away with you all. As I near the Holy City, earth's pleasures fade from view, and I joyfully bid them a long adieu. R. S. FOSTER.

"UNWORTHY."

BRO. GRANT:—I am a widow with one child. I am in limited circumstances. I have many times wished for something to give, and had nothing. A sower went forth to sow; some seed fell upon stony ground, and some fell among thorns. I heard the gospel preached, and received the word with gladness, and was buried in baptism; but instead of growing in grace, I have become backslidden and soul-hardened. I have heard the gospel preached but once in nearly a year. My father takes the Crisis, which I read with much interest. It has convinced me that my soul is in great danger, if not lost. Is there forgiveness for such a sinner? I entreat your prayers, and the prayers of others, that I may be forgiven; that God will direct me, that I may be ready and waiting to receive the Lord when he shall appear.

Yours in hope of immortality,

UNWORTHY.

THE FAR-OFF LAND.

In the far-off land, where the ransomed meet,
To cast their crowns at the Savior's feet;
'Mid the joyful hosts, that by faith I see,
O say, is there room in that throng for me?

I have heard of the health of that sunny clime,
Of the breezes that blow o'er those hills sublime;
And, while struggling here in this deadened air,
I have panted and prayed for the pure breeze there.

They say, in that land, all the weary may rest,
With no foe to intrude and no fear to molest;
That the loved ones we laid in the cold damp tomb,
Shall, living again, to that bright world come.

There Jesus reigns, and he sheds his light
All thro' the city, where is known no night;
And the music of angels and ransomed men
Shall fill all the earth with melody then.

O the far-off land is now specially nigh,
Its shores can be seen by faith's keen eye;
And, through Jesus' blood, 'mid that throng, I see
A place and a palm and a crown for me.

"A MARKED YEAR.—1866."

Under the above heading, we find the following in the June No. of the Guide to Holiness. We are glad to learn that our Methodist brethren are becoming interested in "the signs of the times," which so plainly declare that Jesus is soon coming.—ED.

Thus far, the year 1866 has been remarkably signalized for the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of believers. The editor of the "North-Western Christian Advocate" says, "We have made a hasty inspection of our revival reports, and find that, amid them all, about seventy-five pastors only have stated distinctly the number of probationers received. Disregarding all others, we have fully authenticated material to estimate the addition to the church within the bounds of our circulation, since January 1st, at about 9,569. By States, they are distributed thus: Michigan, 1,488; Wisconsin. 651; Iowa, 999; Indiana, 2,110; Illinois, 3,309; Minnesota, 92; Nebraska, 76; undesignated states 752.

These reports are defective to a great extent. For instance: Wisconsin gives an addition of but 651, whereas our reports show that the conversions in that State number nearly two thousand.

The distinct reports to which we restrict our estimate are about seventy-five. Now, there are at least twelve conferences within our regular circulation, averaging one hundred charges each; hence but about one-sixteenth of the whole number have sent reports. Assuming that all could send corresponding returns, we should have an aggregate of over one hundred and fifty thousand additions to the church in our North-western field. Of course, we may not expect this; but the statement illustrates the magnitude of the divine marvel which accurate returns would announce.

We fully believe that the church will receive an addition of at least twenty-five per cent during the Centenary year; and we hope our ministers will promptly, conscientiously, and accurately forward their reports. Even the additions we have named are based upon figures given, in many instances, while the revival was in progress. We hope to receive amended muster-rolls at the close of the campaign, and in the mean time have the privilege of reporting progress to encourage the armies now confronting the enemy."

The editor of the "Western Advocate" observes, "Since the commencement of the present year, the 'Western Advocate,' it is stated, has reported no less than ten thousand who have been brought into the church within this short period! This is a grand opening for the Centenary year. It is said, believers in revelation have, for more than a thousand years, looked forward to the year 1866 as one in which the Son of God would manifest himself to the christian world as he never did before. It is a coincidence of no small moment that the Centenary of American Methodism should fall on this same year."

Other of our contemporaries might make a similar report. From notices of revivals which have come under our own observation since our last month's issue, we see, as hopefully added to the ranks of the saved, nearly thirty thousand. These, added to those given in our two preceding numbers, make an aggregate of about one hundred thousand.

And yet we know that this is far from setting forth the full magnitude of the work; these numbers being mainly taken from religious exchanges as they met our eye, and which we have reason to know would have been considerably augmented had all our exchange papers come to hand. It is also proper to add, that, of the number of those newly enlisted in the service of Jesus, nearly all hail under the banner of Methodism.

Rev. S. Irwin, pastor of the Emory M. E. Church, Philadelphia, says, "The revival which commenced about five months since is unabated. Persons are found nightly at the altar of prayer. The converts average at least one hundred per month since the meeting began, amounting in all up to this time to five hundred and thirty-five who have professed to find the Savior." What a work is this! And yet this is but one out of over a score of items assuring us that the Holy Spirit is mightily at work among the people.

Eighteen hundred and sixty-six is a year that has been looked forward to with great interest by the many who have identified themselves with that form of christianity denominated Methodism. Just one hundred years ago, the first Methodist society was formed in America. When it took its rise in England, a little over a century ago, it was regarded by many as a revival of primitive christianity; others have spoken of it as christianity in earnest. This certainly is just what it should be in view of the stringency of its doctrines and self-sacrificing principles. It is well known that HOLINESS is the distinguishing doctrine of Methodism. Of this, the crowning doctrine of the crowning dispensation, Mr. Wesley says, "This is the peculiar doctrine committed to our trust." Where this is enforced as a blessing to be received now, and to be received by faith, there Methodism prospers; but, where it is not, there is little grace either in the members or hearers. It is not only worthy of note, but of special thanksgiving to God, that, since the Centenary year commenced, a new era of almost unparalleled revivals have opened upon us. Glory be to God in the highest!

The year 1866 has also been signalized in the minds of many devoted students of prophecy. Says one, "The calculations of most of those who have tried to penetrate the prophetic periods terminate between 1830 and 1880." David Chytrœus, D. D., in 1571 writes' "The end may be expected in 1866." Avetius, who died in 1574, advanced the same idea. Rev. William Whitson, in 1706, advocated the same; also Archbishop Laud. Rev. Thomas Scott, D. D., the commentator, born in England in 1747, says the beginning of the 1260 years cannot be well fixed sooner than A. D. 606, or later than A. D. 756, 1260 years from the first date end in 1866. Rev. William Cogswell, D. D., Secretary of the American Education Society, in a manual published in 1836, makes 1866 the probable time for the latter-day glory of the church, and says it is agreeable to the most learned and modern writers on the prophecies. Rev. A. Bryant says, one of the most prominent periods fixed for the termination of the 1260 years is 1866. Rev. John Wesley, Rev. John Fletcher, and Dr. Benson, also have left on record their belief that a little prior to or about the present time, 1866, the prophetic periods culminate.

The devoted Bickersteth and Mr. Birks mark the limit of our world's age to 1877 or 1882. Rev. E. B. Elliot says the 1260 years of Antichrist's dominion end in 1866. Thus we see many of the devoted and learned christians bring the time of the end as near at hand. We have never been of those who would set the day or hour of Christ's coming; but we do know that he who ascended from Mount Olivet near two thousand years ago said he would come again. The angels told the disciples, as they were gazing upward as the cloud received him out of their sight, that he would in like manner descend.

When he made his revelation to St. John, he said, "Behold, I come quickly!" The early disciples were in earnest expectancy of his coming. We certainly live in the "last days" as foretold by the prophet Joel; because Peter said, on that wonderful day which ushered in the Spirit's dispensation, "This is that which was spoken by Joel: it shall come to pass in the last days," etc. Again he says, in his epistle to the saints, "We upon whom the ends of the world have come," etc. If Peter, by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, could say thus nearly two thousand years ago, in what period of the world may we imagine that we are now living? We judge also from analogy. The patriarchchal age was about 2,000 years; then came the Mosaic dispensation, which also continued about 2,000 years; then was ushered in the Spirit's dispensation, as foretold by Joel; and now we are being brought toward the completion of the six thousand years which we have reason to believe will usher in the grand Sabbatic year, when he who said, "Behold, I come quickly," will come, and claim the kingdoms of this world. And where is the christian heart but will, from its inmost depths, exclaim, "Come, Lord Jesus: come quickly."

"Watch, ye saints, with eyelids waking;
Lo! the powers of heaven are shaking;
Keep your lamps all trimmed and burning,
Ready for your Lord a returning.
Jesus comes!

Lo! the promise of your Savior;
Pardoned sins and purchased favor,
Blood-washed robes and crowns of glory,
Haste to tell redemption's story.
Jesus comes!"

THE POWER OF KNOWLEDGE.

It has been said, and not without some reason, that "knowledge is power." If this be true, then he who neglects to provide himself with this element of moral strength, should not complain if he be compelled to eat the fruits of his own imbecility. The knowledge of true and undefiled religion should be the first object for us to pursue; for it enlightens the mind, softens the heart, and fits us for every emergency. He that would deprive us of this christian hope is our inveterate enemy. He snatches from us the last cup of consolation, and returns it impregnated with horrid forebodings as to the future. As we value our peace and safety, let us avoid those cold and cheerless sayings, which teach us that the grave is our eternal home; or, what is worse, "that death is a passport to eternal fires."

Lay hold, dear readers, on the hope set before you, with the firm assurance that God will open his hand and satisfy the desires of every christian believer. This hope of happiness beyond the dark Jordan of death, was implanted in our bosom by the God who made us; and we doubt not but he that feeds our bodies daily with food, will also give us to drink of that river of immortal love which flows from the throne of the Eternal. May all those who are engaged in this heaven-born cause feel and realize the responsibilities that rest upon them. May they assiduously guard against the debasing influence of false doctrine, which destroys the happiness of the true believer. Let christianity be regarded as being before all other, and above all other enterprises. Thus shall we go on from conquering unto conquest, cheered by the smiles of heaven, and blessed by the approbation of God.

Now, as knowledge and religion have been set before us to treasure up for our happiness and best good, by an All-wise Being, let not those gifts appear in a low degree. But let us show by improving them that we are christians indeed; and that we mean, through the grace of God, to secure to ourselves the great reward.

Dearly beloved, it appears to me, by what I can learn from the Scriptures of truth, and what is now transpiring, that Christ is soon coming to cleanse and judge the earth. If this be the case, let us strive with all the power and wisdom we have to meet him in peace, that we may be accepted of him, when he shall come to gather up his precious jewels.

Now, before I dismiss this weighty subject, let me say, we must have this christian knowledge within ourselves, before it will bear to us any important effect. We must not look to the arm of flesh for it, but unto God, with prayer and supplication, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not. It would be well for us to remember that we are placed here in this transitory world to learn what we can, and to prepare ourselves for a better one, beyond the grave. Blessed is the man who lives up to the light he has, and thrice blessed is the man that hath attained the knowledge and light that the Scriptures afford. J. ELKINS.

REFLECTIONS ON THE PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

For the past five weeks, being sick and not able to do anything, but a few chores round the house, I have had more than usual reflections on the past nineteen years, since I first heard the glorious news of our soon coming Lord. Then this life-giving message found me living without hope or God in the world, and fast traveling towards the infidel's road; all caused by the teaching, as well as the practice of professed Christians; but after a careful and deep searching of the word of God, I soon found a different doctrine taught by prophets, Jesus, and his apostles; also a different life for the Christian to live; and my greatest sorrow is that I have not during all those years past adorned that christian life, which the ever-blessed truth has demanded of me; and it is only through the unfailing love and rich grace of God that I have been kept to this day, still loving the christian's only "blessed hope."

When I reflect on those years past, and know what sad work the adversary has done, not only in laying many of the most faithful soldiers under his power in death, but being more busily engaged in sowing tares. Where love and union once reigned, now there is discord, strife, and hatred. Where once there were loving churches of believers, who loved to pray with one another; now, scarcely one can be found who returns praise and glory to God. O the unholy war and strife, breaking up and dividing into parties, seeking for honor one of another, without paying regard to the new commandment which our blessed Lord gave to his disciples, that the world might know that they were the disciples of Christ. Their faith enabled them to step out on the promises of God, cut loose from the world, and all its pride and vanity, and adorn themselves like holy ones of old (1 Tim. 2: 9; 2 Pet. 3: 3); and a few do so now. But look at the majority (I wish I could be convinced my calculation was too large); see the conformity to the world in fashion, and pride. Mothers, who say they are looking for the Lord, indulging their daughters in all the foolish pride and vanity that their vain hearts covet; and at the same time will complain of their leanness, and that they do not enjoy themselves as they once did. To such the apostle gives some very wholesome advice in Heb. 3: 6, 12-14. Here, the conditions of our being of the "house" of Christ are, "if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the HOPE firm unto the end." And that "we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." How many there are who have lost the steadfast confidence they once had in Christ, by being conformed to this vain world; and yet they will hold on to the truth in theory, like holding on to the boat drifting on to the rapids, when they have left off using the oars, the only available means for their safety. What necessity of returning to the "first love"; more conforming to Christ, and less to the world; more letting the light shine, and less talking about the light.

THE PRESENT.

Without the sure word of prophecy, the present would be a dark picture to look at in all its surroundings, political, moral, and religious. The political world is now about to fill out their last move, as foretold by prophets, Joel 3: 9-12; Jer. 25: 32, 33; Dan. 12: 1; Rev. 16: 13, 14.

The moral and religious state of society is such that we need not the light of prophecy to tell us where we are. But yet we are not left in darkness. We have line upon line, and precept upon precept. I want to hasten by this dark, DARK picture. When we know that many, who ought to be the light of the world, the salt of the earth, are only stumbling-blocks in the way, increasing the perils of these last days.

THE FUTURE.

Who would know anything about it without the light of prophecy? And how little does the professed christian world know about the future, as God has been pleased to make it known by the Holy Spirit through his servants. Their ignorance is about as great as the heathen portion of the world. But with a knowledge of the sure word of prophecy, the future looks bright and glorious. The apostle says, "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of LIGHT." I am glad I have ever been made to see the light of prophecy. It has lit up my pathway for these nineteen years in the past, and now, when we know we are near the perfect day, it shines more glorious than ever before. But those who once walked in the light, but now the God of this world hath blinded their eyes, so they cannot see what is shortly coming to pass; such are in a sad state, and are to be pitied. May their eyes be opened before it will be too late. I wish these slaves of pride and fashion would give heed to what the apostle says in 2 Cor. 11: 3,—"But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." Take heed! beware of his devices!

The glorious future shines brightly and clearly. Soon sorrow's tear will all be wiped out. For

"There'll be no more sorrow there."

Hasten, O Lord, the welcome day.

GIVE US YOUR NAME,

Is the request Bro. Grant has repeatedly made. Perhaps he is right; but I, for one, have been rather unwilling to comply with that request. There may be some (especially among my acquaintance), who have wondered why I wrote for the Crisis. I will tell you. I felt so glad that I had been enabled to get the scales from my eyes, and see the beauty and harmony of the word of God, and plan of redemption, and to believe the blessed truths of the Bible, that I wanted to express my gratitude; and the way we travel is so emphatically a pilgrim's and a stranger's path, I was anxious to do something to help some poor fainting traveler on the way. And as my "bodily presence was weak," and my "speech contemptible," I thought perhaps I might write something which might benefit somebody a little. I wanted to remain hidden, but Bro. Grant seems to be firm in his decision that all writers for "our paper" must be introduced to its readers by name; so I had about concluded I would write no more.

But a good Bro. has given me a lesson. He spoke of something I had written. I told him he would probably see no more from my pen, for Bro. Grant was very particular to have the name given, and I did not want my name to appear again; and I did not like the idea of writing for the great preachers to read. He said if I wrote for the great preachers, I might well feel delicate; but if it was to comfort and strengthen God's little ones, I ought to be willing to let them know who was talking to them. Well, they are the ones I write for, certainly; so if any great folks, who stand head and shoulders above the army, with great minds, giant intellects, and thrilling eloquence, should happen to see anything from my pen, they need not read it. I do not write for them; they do not need my small talk. It is my companions—the weak ones of the flock, God's little children, that I address. Surely we ought to try and help each other. And if we are united in the bonds of sympathy and love, we may be stronger than the giants who stand independent and alone. A number of small sticks bound together, and helping each other, may be stronger than one large stick alone.

We will not grieve because we are small; the little ones of the household are always loved the best; and the weak and sickly ones receive more of the parents' care and sympathy than the strong and robust. Are you one of Christ's little ones? "He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom." Nestle close to his breast, for he loves you. Do you feel weak and faint and weary? Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth his weak, trembling little ones. Lean upon him, trust in him, and he will be your strength. Do you in deep abasement feel utterly unworthy to be numbered among the children of God? Ah! I know how to pity you. But Christ is worthy; in his name we'll come, and pleading his righteousness we'll claim the promise of the Father, the forgiveness of sin, the witness of the Spirit, and eternal life.

Do you hide "among the stuff" and say, "I am so small, I can do nothing for the cause of God, nothing to strengthen his children, nothing to induce sinners to forsake the path which leads to death?" How do you know? Have you tried? Have you done what you could? If you have, you have done as much as the mightiest man can do. Don't refuse to let your candle burn and shine, because somebody carries a great blazing torch. The moon fills her place in the sky as well as the dazzling sun. Let us each fulfill our mission, do what we can in trying to strengthen the weak, comfort the sorrowful, and raise up the bowed down; not forgetting the poor sinner. And if we trust in God and lean on his strong arm, he will assist us in our endeavors to work for him.

In trying to strengthen the weak, we gain strength. In comforting the sorrowful, we get joy; and in forgetting self and working for others, we are ourselves built up and established in the faith. We will not seek for earthly honor, or a great name; but we will try to keep the name we have untarnished by dishonor, and the immoralities of this wicked generation. We will try to keep ourselves free from the influence of evil spirits, which is being thrown around the people to draw them down to perdition. Then, as we pass along on our journey, trying to do a little good, and leave a mark for God, if those we try to help look up and ask us who we are, we will look them honestly in the face, and frankly give them our names.

TRUTH.

What is truth concerning us and the Bible? and how may we know the truth? None doubt our being and existence, hence this is a reality. Now is what the Bible relates concerning the report of this reality, truth? We read, "The word of the Lord . . . . is truth." "Every word of God is pure." "My word shall come to pass." "The word of our God shall stand forever." By what may we know that these are the words of God? By their own language, as you would understand your child by its voice. What man among us, since this world was made, hath said, "Let there be light, and there was light"?—let the earth bring forth fruit, flowers, and grass, and it was so?—and let us form man of the dust of the earth, and breathe into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul; and it was so? Where is the infidel who could prove himself a man from a horse, were it not for the word of God? Where is the man that hath said, I have declared the end of this world from the beginning, and had an idiot to believe him, much more a wise man? Hath ever man, from the highest throne to the lowest footstool, made laws and judgments for the entire world, and they abide today as firm as they did six thousand years ago?

The word of God is truth. Job believed the word of God, for he esteemed his words more than necessary food, and told the Lord that when he died he would wait his appointed time, and when called would answer. Job here refers to the day when Christ says all in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth. Is this truth? Has Christ ever called man from the grave after he was buried? Then where is the man, in this age of wisdom and progress, who could step to the grave of his friend or foe and say, Come forth, and they should hear his voice and come?

"Every word of God is pure." When the infidel reads about Noah, the ark, and the flood, he says it is all a hoax; and when asked, How came the sea-shells and beach-stones on the tops of the highest mountains? his skill is completely baffled, and like the old lady, when she could not account for the Indians, came to the conclusion that they rained down, or made themselves.

The word of God is truth, not one of doubt, uncertainty, and variation, made up of mere human opinions; and should be one of undoubted certainty, infallible, consisting of positive truths and facts; and will stand, whether we believe it or not.

Summer with all its splendor cometh, the flowers bloom and all pass away; but the word of God remaineth the same. Man cometh forth to honor, is laid low, passeth away, and is forgotten. God's word must stand. Who then dare doubt the infallible word of God? and who really believes it in these latter days?

Why were the Jews (the chosen people of God) rejected? not for neglecting to pray, for they made long prayers; not for neglecting to keep the Sabbath, for in that none were more strict than they; not for neglecting to meet at the place of worship, for all were punctual. For what, then, were the Jews rejected? For not believing the word of God. How then could they, or will any one else be saved, who believe not the words of Christ, since God hath said he that believeth shall have everlasting life, and he that believeth not shall be damned? How important that we live, not in unbelief, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God.

East Greenwich, R. I. N. D. BABCOCK.

CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

"Be pitiful, be courteous," said an apostle of Christ. Christianity gives directions touching the manners of men as well as their morals. Indeed, the manners of men decide much for the man.

An individual may be as positive in morals as John the Baptist, and as unbending in religious devotions as Elijah the prophet, but without an exhibition of courteousness in his manners, he will fail to exert an influence by social contact. The character of the Savior could not be discovered, fully, without intimacy. It was when the poor blind beggar cried to him in anguish, that he showed that peculiar manner of treating men, which ornaments the historic page. He turned not in disdainful scorn away from blind Bartimeus, but left the highway to honor the beggar by his presence. He waited not for a king's call. A petition from a prince would have had no more power upon him than the trembling appeal of the poorest of earth's oppressed millions. He acknowledged no power in the sceptre of kings, except by the gift from above.

A rude or rough manner never constituted any part of the attraction of his life. There was boldness of deep religious faith and feeling, not that of an uncourteous eccentric.

In a religion of which bigotry and dogmatism constitute important elements, courteousness is not manifest, except when it is mingled with hypocrisy. The proud sectary may be affable and winning in his manner, with those who are of the same stripe with himself, or with those whose wealth stirs up a hope in hypocrisy; but to those who do not say the "amen" to his theory, he disdains to stoop in courtesy.

The flatterer and deceiver is more than courteous. He overdoes the truth, and deceives the simple. He is winning, but he baits with the poison which must ultimately destroy. The man of true christian courtesy deceives none, because he is true in his pretensions of friend.

The sycophant will fawn and flatter. But flattery was never a part of friendship. The man who may study to learn the bias of our inclinations, only that he may keep on the right side of our pleasure, and profit himself thereby, is not the man of christian courtesy; but he is like the tempting bait which helps the trap to catch the simple hare.

To very many, the volume of human nature is not an open and readable book. They are not warned by the deceptive baits of the flatterers, but in sipping the sugar, they swallow the poison.

The language of actions is emphatic. It is an old maxim that "Actions speak louder than words." An act of christian courtesy expresses the idea, "I would be glad to please you," or, "I am happy to render you beneficial service." This language is not that of speech. It is the language of actions. The genuine christian talks through deeds. The sycophant—the flatterer—the hypocrite is full of wordy love. With polite bow, and a graceful touch of his hat, he may deal out his soft words of false friendship; but he practises no christian courtesy. He may pour a thousand warm wishes upon the child of need and suffering; but it is not in his heart to show true benevolence.

No man should occupy a doubtful position in that which relates to the most important matters of human life. No man should be satisfied to occupy a religious position to which he attaches so little importance that he would not eagerly invite others to join him, saying, "Come, go with us, and we will do you good."

There are in the church persons of very diversified talents, and among all men an unmeasured variety of conditional circumstances. Each knows and feels his own trials, and imagines others to be less tried than himself. Cold indifference or personal scorn is never becoming in a professed follower of Jesus, towards any person.

It is not the pinching grip of the hand, it is not the superabundance of smiles, it is not love in language, which proves the true christian. But it is he who does good as he has opportunity, respects the image of God everywhere, is just to an enemy, faithful to a friend, pitiful to the unfortunate, patient with the erring, and courteous to all.—Christian Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE SCATTERED ONES.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—It is with feelings of thankfulness that I write a few lines to the dear, scattered, tried, and tempted ones. I wish to glorify my heavenly Father by offering praise to him, who hath bought me with his own precious blood. Glory be to his blessed name, he hath abundantly blessed me of late, for which I do praise him. I have long felt that there were great blessings in reserve for me: and although I have often felt a measure of the Spirit, and have often been blessed in prayer, and in giving my feeble testimony for Christ; yet I have as often felt a hungering and thirsting after righteousness. I wanted the fulness I had years ago when I first embraced the Advent doctrine, and with it the doctrine of holiness. I then drank from the fountain. I knew there was living water there. I wanted to drink and never thirst; for says Jesus, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life."

I tried hard a few years ago to work out a righteousness. It was truly hard work. I made no progress, and when I came to myself I found it was as filthy rags; it would not cover me. I would exhort those who are trying to become righteous by doing righteousness, to cease at once. You can never accomplish it; but go immediately to Christ, and obtain that righteousness which is of God by faith. It is a whole garment, a beautiful garment; one which will cover completely. I I found it so, and I could say that, "being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." But thank the good Lord, I have found of late a fulness in Christ that I have not experienced since 1843, when my mind was enlightened upon the doctrine of entire consecration. How true that if we give all, we shall receive all; not for giving as a reward, but in giving according to the plan. God is true. He will not deny himself. If we get down where blessings flow, we become a sharer. O how precious, how blessed, peace like "a river and . . . righteousness as the waves of the sea,"—a continual flow. Man cannot stop it. Day and night, streams of salvation roll on, while divine rays of heavenly light illuminate the soul. No wonder angels shouted "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men," at the birth of our Saviour. What a complete Saviour, and we are so complete in him.

Language fails to describe it; pen cannot write it; but bless the Lord, our hearts feel it. O methinks I see (in imagination) many a dear countenance brighten, and hear the response from many a loving heart that is a sharer in this blessed work. Let us be bold witnesses for God and not shun to declare what the Lord has done for us, and not for

"Fear of feeble man,
The Spirit's course in us restrain;
But undismayed in deed and word,
Be true witnesses of our Lord."

We know the children of the bond-woman persecute the children of the free, as Paul says; but as then he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the Spirit; even so it is now; but we'll "never mind the scoffs nor the frowns of the world," but keep our hearts full of love to all. Blessed be God, if our hearts are full of love, there will be no room for any hard feeling, or any ill will toward any.

O Brethren and sisters,

"Ye who know your sins forgiven,
And are happy in the Lord,
Have you read that gracious promise
Which is left upon record?
I will sprinkle you with water,
I will cleanse you from all sin
Sanctify and make you holy,
I will dwell and reign within?
Though you have much peace and comfort,
Greater things you yet may find;
Freedom from unholy tempers,
Freedom from the carnal mind.
To procure your perfect freedom,
Jesus suffered groaned and died;
On the cross, the healing fountain
Gushed from his wounded side.
Wake up, brother, wake up, sister,
Seek, O seek the holy state;
None but holy ones can enter
Through the pure celestial gate."

The Lord promised that in the last days he would pour out of his Spirit upon all flesh. It began to be fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. The promise of the Father holds good to-day. Says Peter, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The baptism of the Spirit is ours to-day by faith; and as our motto, or password is, or should be, (as Bro. Fassett says) "Our Lord is coming," how important we prepare to meet our Judge. And then again how solemn to live, even if we did not expect Jesus in our day. Truth remains the same. Death is on our track. We may be suddenly cut down.

O Sinner, while it is called to-day, repent and harden not your heart. O dear brethren and sisters, seek an entire conformity to the will of God. Come out from the world and be separate. Be not conformed to its maxims and fashions. My dear sisters, let us heed Peter's advice,—"whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and the wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price;" and as Paul says, "adorn" ourselves "in modest apparel, . . . not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works."

I would refer you to that most excellent letter of Dr. A. Judson (late missionary to Burmah) to the female members of christian churches in America; also Mrs. Wade's letter, who was another very useful member of the mission. I'm thinking, if they could write as they did thirty-five years ago, how much more ought we to lift our warning voice in these days of pride and vanity. Surely we have fallen upon the perils of the last days, and our only safety is in denying ourselves daily and taking up our cross and following Christ.

May God endow his servants, whom he has called to stand in defense of the gospel, with power from on high, that they may not speak "in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance," and your labor will not be in vain in the Lord.

In the language of Dr. Judson, I would say, Let us all do now as we shall then wish we had done when we stand before that awful bar, in the presence of God.

Your Sister, willing to become of no reputation for Christ's sake.

DEPARTURE FROM THE FAITH.

BRO. GRANT:—It is indeed painful to every true christian to witness the present departure on the part of numerous professors of religion from the true faith—that faith bequeathed by our Savior Christ and a St. Paul to a perishing world, and of which invaluable faith each disciple of our Lord should constitute an exemplar and an exponent.

It is not many evenings since that a private masquerade was held in our city, at which members of our principal churches were present and personated negresses and other ludicrous counterfeits. In connection with this arises the question, Would St. Paul, if alive, approve of such and similar inconsistencies, and refusing to approve fail to privately reprimand and publicly condemn the same? I for one am a radical opponent of each and all of the devices of the devil to defraud us of that which, by contrition and self-denial, we have obtained, and can only forfeit by a departure from the faith. Carnal pleasures, popularity, and a lukewarm faith,—away with you all. As I near the Holy City, earth's pleasures fade from view, and I joyfully bid them a long adieu. R. S. FOSTER.

"UNWORTHY."

BRO. GRANT:—I am a widow with one child. I am in limited circumstances. I have many times wished for something to give, and had nothing. A sower went forth to sow; some seed fell upon stony ground, and some fell among thorns. I heard the gospel preached, and received the word with gladness, and was buried in baptism; but instead of growing in grace, I have become backslidden and soul-hardened. I have heard the gospel preached but once in nearly a year. My father takes the Crisis, which I read with much interest. It has convinced me that my soul is in great danger, if not lost. Is there forgiveness for such a sinner? I entreat your prayers, and the prayers of others, that I may be forgiven; that God will direct me, that I may be ready and waiting to receive the Lord when he shall appear.

Yours in hope of immortality, UNWORTHY.

THE FAR-OFF LAND.

In the far-off land, where the ransomed meet,
To cast their crowns at the Savior's feet;
'Mid the joyful hosts, that by faith I see,
O say, is there room in that throng for me?

I have heard of the health of that sunny clime,
Of the breezes that blow o'er those hills sublime;
And, while struggling here in this deadened air,
I have panted and prayed for the pure breeze there.

They say, in that land, all the weary may rest,
With no foe to intrude and no fear to molest;
That the loved ones we laid in the cold damp tomb,
Shall, living again, to that bright world come.

There Jesus reigns, and he sheds his light
All thro' the city, where is known no night;
And the music of angels and ransomed men
Shall fill all the earth with melody then.

O the far-off land is now specially nigh,
Its shores can be seen by faith's keen eye;
And, through Jesus' blood, 'mid that throng, I see
A place and a palm and a crown for me.

"A MARKED YEAR.—1866."

Under the above heading, we find the following in the June No. of the Guide to Holiness. We are glad to learn that our Methodist brethren are becoming interested in "the signs of the times," which so plainly declare that Jesus is soon coming.—ED.

Thus far, the year 1866 has been remarkably signalized for the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of believers. The editor of the "North-Western Christian Advocate" says, "We have made a hasty inspection of our revival reports, and find that, amid them them all, about seventy-five pastors only have stated distinctly the number of probationers received. Disregarding all others, we have fully authenticated material to estimate the addition to the church within the bounds of our circulation, since January 1st, at about 9,569. By States, they are distributed thus: Michigan, 1,488; Wisconsin. 651; Iowa, 999; Indiana, 2,110; Illinois, 3,399; Minnesota, 92; Nebraska, 78; undesignated states 752.

These reports are defective to a great extent. For instance: Wisconsin gives an addition of but 651, whereas our reports show that the conversions in that State number nearly two thousand.

The distinct reports to which we restrict our estimate are about seventy-five. Now, there are at least twelve conferences within our regular circulation, averaging one hundred charges each; hence but about one-sixteenth of the whole number have sent reports. Assuming that all could send corresponding returns, we should have an aggregate of over one hundred and fifty thousand additions to the church in our North-western field. Of course, we may not expect this; but the statement illustrates the magnitude of the divine marvel which accurate returns would announce.

We fully believe that the church will receive an addition of at least twenty-five per cent during the Centenary year; and we hope our ministers will promptly, conscientiously, and accurately forward their reports. Even the additions we have named are based upon figures given, in many instances, while the revival was in progress. We hope to receive amended muster-rolls at the close of the campaign, and in the mean time have the privilege of reporting progress to encourage the armies now confronting the enemy."

The editor of the "Western Advocate" observes, "Since the commencement of the present year, the 'Western Advocate,' it is stated, has reported no less than ten thousand who have been brought into the church within this short period! This is a grand opening for the Centenary year. It is said, believers in revelation have, for more than a thousand years, looked forward to the year 1866 as one in which the Son of God would manifest himself to the christian world as he never did before. It is a coincidence of no small moment that the Centenary of American Methodism should fall on this same year."

Other of our contemporaries might make a similar report. From notices of revivals which have come under our own observation since our last month's issue, we see, as hopefully added to the ranks of the saved, nearly thirty thousand. These, added to those given in our two preceding numbers, make an aggregate of about one hundred thousand.

And yet we know that this is far from setting forth the full magnitude of the work; these numbers being mainly taken from religious exchanges as they met our eye, and which we have reason to know would have been considerably augmented had all our exchange papers come to hand. It is also proper to add, that, of the number of those newly enlisted in the service of Jesus, nearly all hail under the banner of Methodism.

Rev. S. Irwin, pastor of the Emory M. E. Church, Philadelphia, says, "The revival which commenced about five months since is unabated. Persons are found nightly at the altar of prayer. The converts average at least one hundred per month since the meeting began, amounting in all up to this time to five hundred and thirty-five who have professed to find the Savior." What a work is this! And yet this is but one out of over a score of items assuring us that the Holy Spirit is mightily at work among the people.

Eighteen hundred and sixty-six is a year that has been looked forward to with great interest by the many who have identified themselves with that form of christianity denominated Methodism. Just one hundred years ago, the first Methodist society was formed in America. When it took its rise in England, a little over a century ago, it was regarded by many as a revival of primitive christianity; others have spoken of it as christianity in earnest. This certainly is just what it should be in view of the stringency of its doctrines and self-sacrificing principles. It is well known that HOLINESS is the distinguishing doctrine of Methodism. Of this, the crowning doctrine of the crowning dispensation, Mr. Wesley says, "This is the peculiar doctrine committed to our trust." Where this is enforced as a blessing to be received now, and to be received by faith, there Methodism prospers; but, where it is not, there is little grace either in the members or hearers. It is not only worthy of note, but of special thanksgiving to God, that, since the Centenary year commenced, a new era of almost unparalleled revivals have opened upon us. Glory be to God in the highest!

The year 1866 has also been signalized in the minds of many devoted students of prophecy. Says one, "The calculations of most of those who have tried to penetrate the prophetic periods terminate between 1830 and 1880." David Chytræus, D. D., in 1571 writes' "The end may be expected in 1866." Avetius, who died in 1574, advanced the same idea. Rev. William Whitson, in 1706, advocated the same; also Archbishop Laud. Rev. Thomas Scott, D. D., the commentator, born in England in 1747, says the beginning of the 1260 years cannot be well fixed sooner than A. D. 606, or later than A. D. 756, 1260 years from the first date end in 1866. Rev. William Cogswell, D. D., Secretary of the American Education Society, in a manual published in 1836, makes 1866 the probable time for the latter-day glory of the church, and says it is agreeable to the most learned and modern writers on the prophecies. Rev. A. Bryant says, one of the most prominent periods fixed for the termination of the 1260 years is 1866. Rev. John Wesley, Rev. John Fletcher, and Dr. Benson, also have left on record their belief that a little prior to or about the present time, 1866, the prophetic periods culminate.

The devoted Bickersteth and Mr. Birks mark the limit of our world's age to 1877 or 1882. Rev. E. B. Elliot says the 1260 years of Antichrist's dominion end in 1866. Thus we see many of the devoted and learned christians bring the time of the end as near at hand. We have never been of those who would set the day or hour of Christ's coming; but we do know that he who ascended from Mount Olivet near two thousand years ago said he would come again. The angels told the disciples, as they were gazing upward as the cloud received him out of their sight, that he would in like manner descend.

When he made his revelation to St. John, he said, "Behold, I come quickly!" The early disciples were in earnest expectancy of his coming. We certainly live in the "last days" as foretold by the prophet Joel; because Peter said, on that wonderful day which ushered in the Spirit's dispensation, "This is that which was spoken by Joel: it shall come to pass in the last days," etc. Again he says, in his epistle to the saints, "We upon whom the ends of the world have come," etc. If Peter, by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, could say thus nearly two thousand years ago, in what period of the world may we imagine that we are now living? We judge also from analogy. The patriarchehal age was about 2,000 years; then came the Mosaic dispensation, which also continued about 2,000 years; then was ushered in the Spirit's dispensation, as foretold by Joel; and now we are being brought toward the completion of the six thousand years which we have reason to believe will usher in the grand Sabbatic year, when he who said, "Behold, I come quickly," will come, and claim the kingdoms of this world. And where is the christian heart but will, from its inmost depths, exclaim, "Come, Lord Jesus: come quickly."

"Watch, ye saints, with eyelids waking;
Lo! the powers of heaven are shaking;
Keep your lamps all trimmed and burning,
Ready for your Lord's returning.
Jesus comes!

Lo! the promise of your Savior;
Pardoned sins and purchased favor,
Blood-washed robes and crowns of glory,
Haste to tell redemption's story.
Jesus comes!"

THE POWER OF KNOWLEDGE.

It has been said, and not without some reason, that "knowledge is power." If this be true, then he who neglects to provide himself with this element of moral strength, should not complain if he be compelled to eat the fruits of his own imbecility. The knowledge of true and undefiled religion should be the first object for us to pursue; for it enlightens the mind, softens the heart, and fits us for every emergency. He that would deprive us of this christian hope is our inveterate enemy. He snatches from us the last cup of consolation, and returns it impregnated with horrid forebodings as to the future. As we value our peace and safety, let us avoid those cold and cheerless sayings, which teach us that the grave is our eternal home; or, what is worse, "that death is a passport to eternal fires."

Lay hold, dear readers, on the hope set before you, with the firm assurance that God will open his hand and satisfy the desires of every christian believer. This hope of happiness beyond the dark Jordan of death, was implanted in our bosom by the God who made us; and we doubt not but he that feeds our bodies daily with food, will also give us to drink of that river of immortal love which flows from the throne of the Eternal. May all those who are engaged in this heaven-born cause feel and realize the responsibilities that rest upon them. May they assiduously guard against the debasing influence of false doctrine, which destroys the happiness of the true believer. Let christianity be regarded as being before all other, and above all other enterprises. Thus shall we go on from conquering unto conquest, cheered by the smiles of heaven, and blessed by the approbation of God.

Now, as knowledge and religion have been set before us to treasure up for our happiness and best good, by an All-wise Being, let not those gifts appear in a low degree. But let us show by improving them that we are christians indeed; and that we mean, through the grace of God, to secure to ourselves the great reward.

Dearly beloved, it appears to me, by what I can learn from the Scriptures of truth, and what is now transpiring, that Christ is soon coming to cleanse and judge the earth. If this be the case, let us strive with all the power and wisdom we have to meet him in peace, that we may be accepted of him, when he shall come to gather up his precious jewels.

Now, before I dismiss this weighty subject, let me say, we must have this christian knowledge within ourselves, before it will bear to us any important effect. We must not look to the arm of flesh for it, but unto God, with prayer and supplication, who giveth liberally and upbraideth not. It would be well for us to remember that we are placed here in this transitory world to learn what we can, and to prepare ourselves for a better one, beyond the grave. Blessed is the man who lives up to the light he has, and thrice blessed is the man that hath attained the knowledge and light that the Scriptures afford. J. ELKINS.

REFLECTIONS ON THE PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

For the past five weeks, being sick and not able to do anything, but a few chores round the house, I have had more than usual reflections on the past nineteen years, since I first heard the glorious news of our soon coming Lord. Then this life-giving message found me living without hope or God in the world, and fast traveling towards the infidel's road; all caused by the teaching, as well as the practice of professed Christians; but after a careful and deep searching of the word of God, I soon found a different doctrine taught by prophets, Jesus, and his apostles; also a different life for the Christian to live; and my greatest sorrow is that I have not during all those years past adorned that christian life, which the ever-blessed truth has demanded of me; and it is only through the unfailing love and rich grace of God that I have been kept to this day, still loving the christian's only "blessed hope."

When I reflect on those years past, and know what sad work the adversary has done, not only in laying many of the most faithful soldiers under his power in death, but being more busily engaged in sowing tares. Where love and union once reigned, now there is discord, strife, and hatred. Where once there were loving churches of believers, who loved to pray with one another; now, scarcely one can be found who returns praise and glory to God. O the unholy war and strife, breaking up and dividing into parties, seeking for honor one of another, without paying regard to the new commandment which our blessed Lord gave to his disciples, that the world might know that they were the disciples of Christ. Their faith enabled them to step out on the promises of God, cut loose from the world, and all its pride and vanity, and adorn themselves like holy ones of old (1 Tim. 2: 9; 2 Pet. 3: 3); and a few do so now. But look at the majority (I wish I could be convinced my calculation was too large); see the conformity to the world in fashion, and pride. Mothers, who say they are looking for the Lord, indulging their daughters in all the foolish pride and vanity that their vain hearts covet; and at the same time will complain of their leanness, and that they do not enjoy themselves as they once did. To such the apostle gives some very wholesome advice in Heb. 3: 6, 12–14. Here, the conditions of our being of the "house" of Christ are, "if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the HOPE firm unto the end." And that "we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." How many there are who have lost the steadfast confidence they once had in Christ, by being conformed to this vain world; and yet they will hold on to the truth in theory, like holding on to the boat drifting on to the rapids, when they have left off using the oars, the only available means for their safety. What necessity of returning to the "first love"; more conforming to Christ, and less to the world; more letting the light shine, and less talking about the light.

THE PRESENT.

Without the sure word of prophecy, the present would be a dark picture to look at in all its surroundings, political, moral, and religious. The political world is now about to fill out their last move, as foretold by prophets, Joel 3: 9–12; Jer. 25: 32, 33; Dan. 12: 1; Rev. 16: 13, 14.

The moral and religious state of society is such that we need not the light of prophecy to tell us where we are. But yet we are not left in darkness. We have line upon line, and precept upon precept. I want to hasten by this dark, DARK picture. When we know that many, who ought to be the light of the world, the salt of the earth, are only stumbling-blocks in the way, increasing the perils of these last days.

THE FUTURE.

Who would know anything about it without the light of prophecy? And how little does the professed christian world know about the future, as God has been pleased to make it known by the Holy Spirit through his servants. Their ignorance is about as great as the heathen portion of the world. But with a knowledge of the sure word of prophecy, the future looks bright and glorious. The apostle says, "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of LIGHT." I am glad I have ever been made to see the light of prophecy. It has lit up my pathway for these nineteen years in the past, and now, when we know we are near the perfect day, it shines more glorious than ever before. But those who once walked in the light, but now the God of this world hath blinded their eyes, so they cannot see what is shortly coming to pass; such are in a sad state, and are to be pitied. May their eyes be opened before it will be too late. I wish these slaves of pride and fashion would give heed to what the apostle says in 2 Cor. 11: 3,—"But I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." Take heed! beware of his devices!

The glorious future shines brightly and clearly. Soon sorrow's tear will all be wiped out. For

"There'll be no more sorrow there."

Hasten, O Lord, the welcome day.

GIVE US YOUR NAME,

Is the request Bro. Grant has repeatedly made. Perhaps he is right; but I, for one, have been rather unwilling to comply with that request. There may be some (especially among my acquaintance), who have wondered why I wrote for the Crisis. I will tell you. I felt so glad that I had been enabled to get the scales from my eyes, and see the beauty and harmony of the word of God, and plan of redemption, and to believe the blessed truths of the Bible, that I wanted to express my gratitude; and the way we travel is so emphatically a pilgrim's and a stranger's path, I was anxious to do something to help some poor fainting traveler on the way. And as my "bodily presence was weak," and my "speech contemptible," I thought perhaps I might write something which might benefit somebody a little. I wanted to remain hidden, but Bro. Grant seems to be firm in his decision that all writers for "our paper" must be introduced to its readers by name; so I had about concluded I would write no more.

But a good Bro. has given me a lesson. He spoke of something I had written. I told him he would probably see no more from my pen, for Bro. Grant was very particular to have the name given, and I did not want my name to appear again; and I did not like the idea of writing for the great preachers to read. He said if I wrote for the great preachers, I might well feel delicate; but if it was to comfort and strengthen God's little ones, I ought to be willing to let them know who was talking to them. Well, they are the ones I write for, certainly; so if any great folks, who stand head and shoulders above the army, with great minds, giant intellects, and thrilling eloquence, should happen to see anything from my pen, they need not read it. I do not write for them; they do not need my small talk. It is my companions—the weak ones of the flock, God's little children, that I address. Surely we ought to try and help each other. And if we are united in the bonds of sympathy and love, we may be stronger than the giants who stand independent and alone. A number of small sticks bound together, and helping each other, may be stronger than one large stick alone.

We will not grieve because we are small; the little ones of the household are always loved the best; and the weak and sickly ones receive more of the parents' care and sympathy than the strong and robust. Are you one of Christ's little ones? "He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom." Nestle close to his breast, for he loves you. Do you feel weak and faint and weary? Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth his weak, trembling little ones. Lean upon him, trust in him, and he will be your strength. Do you in deep abasement feel utterly unworthy to be numbered among the children of God? Ah! I know how to pity you. But Christ is worthy; in his name we'll come, and pleading his righteousness we'll claim the promise of the Father, the forgiveness of sin, the witness of the Spirit, and eternal life.

Do you hide "among the stuff" and say, "I am so small, I can do nothing for the cause of God, nothing to strengthen his children, nothing to induce sinners to forsake the path which leads to death?" How do you know? Have you tried? Have you done what you could? If you have, you have done as much as the mightiest man can do. Don't refuse to let your candle burn and shine, because somebody carries a great blazing torch. The moon fills her place in the sky as well as the dazzling sun. Let us each fulfill our mission, do what we can in trying to strengthen the weak, comfort the sorrowful, and raise up the bowed down; not forgetting the poor sinner. And if we trust in God and lean on his strong arm, he will assist us in our endeavors to work for him.

In trying to strengthen the weak, we gain strength. In comforting the sorrowful, we get joy; and in forgetting self and working for others, we are ourselves built up and established in the faith. We will not seek for earthly honor, or a great name; but we will try to keep the name we have untarnished by dishonor, and the immoralities of this wicked generation. We will try to keep ourselves free from the influence of evil spirits, which is being thrown around the people to draw them down to perdition. Then, as we pass along on our journey, trying to do a little good, and leave a mark for God, if those we try to help look up and ask us who we are, we will look them honestly in the face, and frankly give them our names.

TRUTH.

What is truth concerning us and the Bible? and how may we know the truth? None doubt our being and existence, hence this is a reality. Now is what the Bible relates concerning the report of this reality, truth? We read, "The word of the Lord . . . . is truth." "Every word of God is pure." "My word shall come to pass." "The word of our God shall stand forever." By what may we know that these are the words of God? By their own language, as you would understand your child by its voice. What man among us, since this world was made, hath said, "Let there be light, and there was light"?—let the earth bring forth fruit, flowers, and grass, and it was so?—and let us form man of the dust of the earth, and breathe into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul; and it was so? Where is the infidel who could prove himself a man from a horse, were it not for the word of God? Where is the man that hath said, I have declared the end of this world from the beginning, and had an idiot to believe him, much more a wise man? Hath ever man, from the highest throne to the lowest footstool, made laws and judgments for the entire world, and they abide to-day as firm as they did six thousand years ago?

The word of God is truth. Job believed the word of God, for he esteemed his words more than necessary food, and told the Lord that when he died he would wait his appointed time, and when called would answer. Job here refers to the day when Christ says all in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth. Is this truth? Has Christ ever called man from the grave after he was buried? Then where is the man, in this age of wisdom and progress, who could step to the grave of his friend or foe and say, Come forth, and they should hear his voice and come?

"Every word of God is pure." When the infidel reads about Noah, the ark, and the flood, he says it is all a hoax; and when asked, How came the sea-shells and beach-stones on the tops of the highest mountains? his skill is completely baffled, and like the old lady, when she could not account for the Indians, came to the conclusion that they rained down, or made themselves.

The word of God is truth, not one of doubt, uncertainty, and variation, made up of mere human opinions; and should be one of undoubted certainty, infallible, consisting of positive truths and facts; and will stand, whether we believe it or not.

Summer with all its splendor cometh, the flowers bloom and all pass away; but the word of God remaineth the same. Man cometh forth to honor, is laid low, passeth away, and is forgotten. God's word must stand. Who then dare doubt the infallible word of God? and who really believes it in these latter days?

Why were the Jews (the chosen people of God) rejected? not for neglecting to pray, for they made long prayers; not for neglecting to keep the Sabbath, for in that none were more strict than they; not for neglecting to meet at the place of worship, for all were punctual. For what, then, were the Jews rejected? For not believing the word of God. How then could they, or will any one else be saved, who believe not the words of Christ, since God hath said he that believeth shall have everlasting life, and he that believeth not shall be damned? How important that we live, not in unbelief, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God.

East Greenwich, R. I. N. D. BADCOCK.

CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

"Be pitiful, be courteous," said an apostle of Christ. Christianity gives directions touching the manners of men as well as their morals. Indeed, the manners of men decide much for the man.

An individual may be as positive in morals as John the Baptist, and as unbending in religious devotions as Elijah the prophet, but without an exhibition of courteousness in his manners, he will fail to exert an influence by social contact. The character of the Savior could not be discovered, fully, without intimacy. It was when the poor blind beggar cried to him in anguish, that he showed that peculiar manner of treating men, which ornaments the historic page. He turned not in disdainful scorn away from blind Bartimeus, but left the highway to honor the beggar by his presence. He waited not for a king's call. A petition from a prince would have had no more power upon him than the trembling appeal of the poorest of earth's oppressed millions. He acknowledged no power in the sceptre of kings, except by the gift from above.

A rude or rough manner never constituted any part of the attraction of his life. There was boldness of deep religious faith and feeling, not that of an uncourteous eccentric.

In a religion of which bigotry and dogmatism constitute important elements, courteousness is not manifest, except when it is mingled with hypocrisy. The proud sectary may be affable and winning in his manner, with those who are of the same stripe with himself, or with those whose wealth stirs up a hope in hypocrisy; but to those who do not say the "amen" to his theory, he disdains to stoop in courtesy.

The flatterer and deceiver is more than courteous. He overdoes the truth, and deceives the simple. He is winning, but he baits with the poison which must ultimately destroy. The man of true christian courtesy deceives none, because he is true in his pretensions of friend.

The sycophant will fawn and flatter. But flattery was never a part of friendship. The man who may study to learn the bias of our inclinations, only that he may keep on the right side of our pleasure, and profit himself thereby, is not the man of christian courtesy; but he is like the tempting bait which helps the trap to catch the simple hare.

To very many, the volume of human nature is not an open and readable book. They are not warned by the deceptive baits of the flatterers, but in sipping the sugar, they swallow the poison.

The language of actions is emphatic. It is an old maxim that "Actions speak louder than words." An act of christian courtesy expresses the idea, "I would be glad to please you," or, "I am happy to render you beneficial service." This language is not that of speech. It is the language of actions. The genuine christian talks through deeds. The sycophant—the flatterer—the hypocrite is full of wordy love. With polite bow, and a graceful touch of his hat, he may deal out his soft words of false friendship; but he practises no christian courtesy. He may pour a thousand warm wishes upon the child of need and suffering; but it is not in his heart to show true benevolence.

No man should occupy a doubtful position in that which relates to the most important matters of human life. No man should be satisfied to occupy a religious position to which he attaches so little importance that he would not eagerly invite others to join him, saying, "Come, go with us, and we will do you good."

There are in the church persons of very diversified talents, and among all men an unmeasured variety of conditional circumstances. Each knows and feels his own trials, and imagines others to be less tried than himself. Cold indifference or personal scorn is never becoming in a professed follower of Jesus, towards any person.

It is not the pinching grip of the hand, it is not the superabundance of smiles, it is not love in language, which proves the true christian. But it is he who does good as he has opportunity, respects the image of God everywhere, is just to an enemy, faithful to a friend, pitiful to the unfortunate, patient with the erring, and courteous to all.—Christian Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE SCATTERED ONES.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—It is with feelings of thankfulness that I write a few lines to the dear, scattered, tried, and tempted ones. I wish to glorify my heavenly Father by offering praise to him, who hath bought me with his own precious blood. Glory be to his blessed name, he hath abundantly blessed me of late, for which I do praise him. I have long felt that there were great blessings in reserve for me: and although I have often felt a measure of the Spirit, and have often been blessed in prayer, and in giving my feeble testimony for Christ; yet I have as often felt a hungering and thirsting after righteousness. I wanted the fulness I had years ago when I first embraced the Advent doctrine, and with it the doctrine of holiness. I then drank from the fountain. I knew there was living water there. I wanted to drink and never thirst; for says Jesus, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life."

I tried hard a few years ago to work out a righteousness. It was truly hard work. I made no progress, and when I came to myself I found it was as filthy rags; it would not cover me. I would exhort those who are trying to become righteous by doing righteousness, to cease at once. You can never accomplish it; but go immediately to Christ, and obtain that righteousness which is of God by faith. It is a whole garment, a beautiful garment; one which will cover completely. I I found it so, and I could say that, "being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." But thank the good Lord, I have found of late a fulness in Christ that I have not experienced since 1843, when my mind was enlightened upon the doctrine of entire consecration. How true that if we give all, we shall receive all; not for giving as a reward, but in giving according to the plan. God is true. He will not deny himself. If we get down where blessings flow, we become a sharer. O how precious, how blessed, peace like "a river and . . . righteousness as the waves of the sea,"—a continual flow. Man cannot stop it. Day and night, streams of salvation roll on, while divine rays of heavenly light illuminate the soul. No wonder angels shouted "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will towards men," at the birth of our Saviour. What a complete Saviour, and we are so complete in him.

Language fails to describe it; pen cannot write it; but bless the Lord, our hearts feel it. O methinks I see (in imagination) many a dear countenance brighten, and hear the response from many a loving heart that is a sharer in this blessed work. Let us be bold witnesses for God and not shun to declare what the Lord has done for us, and not for

"Fear of feeble man,
The Spirit's course in us restrain;
But undismayed in deed and word,
Be true witnesses of our Lord."

We know the children of the bond-woman persecute the children of the free, as Paul says; but as then he that was born after the flesh, persecuted him that was born after the Spirit; even so it is now; but we'll [illegible] souls nor the frowns of the world," but keep our hearts full of love to all. Blessed be God, if our hearts are full of love, there will be no room for any hard feeling, or any ill will toward any.

O Brethren and sisters,

"Ye who know your sins forgiven,
And are happy in the Lord,
Have you read that gracious promise
Which is left upon record?
I will sprinkle you with water,
I will cleanse you from all sin
Sanctify and make you holy,
I will dwell and reign within!
Though you have much peace and comfort,
Greater things you yet may find;
Freedom from unholy tempers,
Freedom from the carnal mind.
To procure your perfect freedom,
Jesus suffered groaned and died;
On the cross, the healing fountain
Gushed from his wounded side.
Wake up, brother, wake up, sister,
Seek, O seek the holy state;
None but holy ones can enter
Through the pure celestial gate."

The Lord promised that in the last days he would pour out of his Spirit upon all flesh. It began to be fulfilled on the day of Pentecost. The promise of the Father holds good to-day. Says Peter, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." The baptism of the Spirit is ours to-day by faith; and as our motto, or password is, or should be, (as Bro. Fassett says) "Our Lord is coming," how important we prepare to meet our Judge. And then again how solemn to live, even if we did not expect Jesus in our day. Truth remains the same. Death is on our track. We may be suddenly cut down.

O Sinner, while it is called to-day, repent and harden not your heart. O dear brethren and sisters, seek an entire conformity to the will of God. Come out from the world and be separate. Be not conformed to its maxims and fashions. My dear sisters, let us heed Peter's advice,—"whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and the wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price;" and as Paul says, "adorn" ourselves "in modest apparel, . . . not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works."

I would refer you to that most excellent letter of Dr. A. Judson (late missionary to Burmah) to the female members of christian churches in America; also Mrs. Wade's letter, who was another very useful member of the mission. I'm thinking, if they could write as they did thirty-five years ago, how much more ought we to lift our warning voice in these days of pride and vanity. Surely we have fallen upon the perils of the last days, and our only safety is in denying ourselves daily and taking up our cross and following Christ.

May God endow his servants, whom he has called to stand in defense of the gospel, with power from on high, that they may not speak "in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance," and your labor will not be in vain in the Lord.

In the language of Dr. Judson, I would say, Let us all do now as we shall then wish we had done when we stand before that awful bar, in the presence of God.

Your Sister, willing to become of no reputation for Christ's sake.

Westboro, Mass. L. MARIA BRITTAN.

DEPARTURE FROM THE FAITH.

BRO. GRANT:—It is indeed painful to every true christian to witness the present departure on the part of numerous professors of religion from the true faith—that faith bequeathed by our Savior Christ and a St. Paul to a perishing world, and of which invaluable faith each disciple of our Lord should constitute an exemplar and an exponent.

It is not many evenings since that a private masquerade was held in our city, at which members of our principal churches were present and personated negresses and other ludicrous counterfeits. In connection with this arises the question, Would St. Paul, if alive, approve of such and similar inconsistencies, and refusing to approve fail to privately reprimand and publicly condemn the same? I for one am a radical opponent of each and all of the devices of the devil to defraud us of that which, by contrition and self-denial, we have obtained, and can only forfeit by a departure from the faith. Carnal pleasures, popularity, and a lukewarm faith,—away with you all. As I near the Holy City, earth's pleasures fade from view, and I joyfully bid them a long adieu. R. S. FOSTER.

"UNWORTHY."

BRO. GRANT:—I am a widow with one child. I am in limited circumstances. I have many times wished for something to give, and had nothing. A sower went forth to sow; some seed fell upon stony ground, and some fell among thorns. I heard the gospel preached, and received the word with gladness, and was buried in baptism; but instead of growing in grace, I have become backslidden and soul-hardened. I have heard the gospel preached but once in nearly a year. My father takes the Crisis, which I read with much interest. It has convinced me that my soul is in great danger, if not lost. Is there forgiveness for such a sinner? I entreat your prayers, and the prayers of others, that I may be forgiven; that God will direct me, that I may be ready and waiting to receive the Lord when he shall appear.

Yours in hope of immortality,
UNWORTHY.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

It is not a very common thing to answer a private letter publicly; but, as I am considered an uncommon man, I shall answer three questions publicly in short.

"Bro. Munger, as you are traveling about, and know the gifts of different preachers, I wish you would suggest some one for our place. Many of our people will not go to meeting unless we have preaching, and it is difficult to always get the right man, or even any sometimes. We want a man with us that can interest outsiders, and teach and lead the church, and take hold and sustain the Sabbath school, and visit all that attend church, and keep us up in working order. If you know of such a man, please inform me by mail, and much oblige."

Bro., I can't find the man under heaven that can supply your wants; and if I could, he would be too good a man to be killed in two or three years; for you have asked enough to kill any man. Only think of visiting all that attend his meeting. Think of it seriously. Suppose there were three hundred different ones attended, and they would want a visit once in six months. Six hundred visits in three hundred days,—only think of it! One half of it would be more than a year's work, as people generally want a preacher to visit; i. e., tell all they know, and hear all others are talking about.

Now, Bro., as I believe this is a flying message for this generation, the preachers called to the work will feel the freest to keep going, and do more good, as a general thing. But few are qualified to settle down two, or three, or more years, and sustain themselves. No man has a variety for all classes of minds, unless he and his congregation are fashionable formalists; then fashion is preferable to the religion of the Bible. You don't want that. And now, Bro., you had better pick up your preaching, and all feel a responsibility to do what little you can in instructing your own children, with the help of such books as are necessary. You don't live in a locality where an effort would be expedient to start and sustain a Sabbath school, or settle a preacher that would try to make brick without straw. Some have tried it, and had to back out, and left things worse off.

Take this kindly, and keep to work in the old school-house. The Lord is soon coming. No mistake. We better live from hand to mouth, than get a load on us in these perilous times. To count on a great congregation, is like raking in old last year's stubble with good hay, to make a show. The love of the truth will gather all that will be willing to work, and be a benefit to the cause. Keep up your meetings; scatter tracts, pray much, and God will send you preachers as you really need. The Crisis will preach once a week; and the signs are preaching all the time, as you will see if you read the Crisis. If your people don't take the Crisis, preachers will do you but little good; and, as I am reckoned among them, my advice will be in that direction.

ANOTHER QUESTION.

"Bro. Munger, do tell us what to do. One is preaching the gifts must all be restored in the church before the Lord comes; another, that we must keep the whole law, and Saturday for Sunday; and another, 1867 time; another, 1868, etc. Now I can't work miracles. I can't talk in the unknown tongue; I can't see it duty to keep Saturday; I can't see the 1867 time, nor the 1868 time. Must I be damned, if I do not see and believe all this? I am almost in despair."

Dear child, you have eaten too many sorts of food, and cloyed the digestive organs. Don't eat every thing you see, because the pedlar says it is good. You have so much down already, I propose letting your stomach rest awhile, before I give another dose. Those special gifts were for the confirmation of the gospel, in the apostolic church, which lasted thirty-two years. See Col. 1: 23. You see the gospel was preached in all the then known world, which was seventeen nations, and they needed a gift of tongues to preach to all; and as they had no education, God gave them the tongues to teach. All this was a sign to the wicked. We don't need it now, because we understand one another's language. Don't throw yourself away, because some make this a test question.

The seventh day doctrine is not binding on a christian, and you must fall from grace before it is binding on you, which I hope you will not do.

The 1867 time, or the 1868 time, is the work of man's computation. All cannot comprehend either, and it is not necessary to your salvation. If you are trying to serve God, he has pledged to make the time known himself, and he will do it to you. So don't take that food until your stomach can digest it. The simple food of doing duty when God's Spirit dictates, will keep you in health, and ready for events as fast as they come.

ANOTHER QUESTION.

"Bro. Munger, who shall we have for Editor this year?"

Don't ask me so many questions. I am out of breath, and almost out of patience.

"Well, you have thought of some one, of course."

No.

"Well, some talk of ——. What do you think of him?"

I never would send a mouse to mill; he could not carry the grist.

"Well, another, how is he?"

I would not set a snail to run a race.

"Well, another."

He would not bare pounding six months.

"I thought you would go for a change."

I will, when the change will be for the good of the whole party; but to change a main shaft often deranges the small machinery. Experiments often bring a sad experience, as you know. Good Editors, and natural crooked hog yokes are scarce; and if we have one that answers, keep it until we are sure of a better one.

Wait until campmeeting for the other answers; and, if I am not too busy, I will answer the rest. HIRAM MUNGER.

WHAT IS THE HOLY GHOST?

BRO. GRANT:—Is there any difference between the Holy Ghost and Holy Spirit? If so, what are the original words? I find some translations do not use the word Ghost. I find also that it is preached that there is no Holy Ghost in the world now. If the Holy Ghost and Holy Spirit are two, we want to know if that position is correct. If some of the apostles made shipwreck of the Holy Ghost and had to have it taken from them, we want to know that. J. T. KIMBALL.

In the Bible the Holy Spirit and Holy Ghost mean the same thing.—ED.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Aug. 8, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $1.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $2.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Good Fractional Currency.

In sending postal currency, be careful to see that it is good before sending it. Very much of this fractional currency now in circulation is counterfeit; and every week we are receiving worthless notes of this description, which we are obliged to return to the sender.

☞ BILLS! BILLS!!

We shall send out bills of indebtedness soon to those who are owing the office on book and Crisis accounts. We should be glad to be saved that trouble, by a prompt and immediate remittance from all who are in arrears. Shall we hear from such at once?

THE GREAT FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

We expect a great and good meeting at "Camp Wilbraham" this year. It is a rich privilege to be allowed to meet so many dear saints as annually assemble at this "feast of tabernacles." They are a foretaste of the coming kingdom. O what happy greetings are witnessed as the pilgrims meet upon that consecrated spot, after traveling perhaps ten or fifteen hundred miles to enjoy this feast. Thank the Lord for a religion that binds hearts together in love, without adopting a sectarian creed; a religion that makes all one in Christ Jesus.

Come, from the north, the south, east and west; and let us make the camp upon the hill-top echo with the praises of our coming King.

FAST DAY.

For several years it has been our custom to propose the Friday preceding the commencement of our great annual campmeeting at Wilbraham, as a day of fasting and prayer that the special blessing of God may rest on that important meeting. We would again earnestly request all who are interested in the welfare of this meeting, to observe Friday, Aug. 17th, as a time for fasting, and special prayer that our coming campmeeting may be the best one ever held in that consecrated spot.

It will be a meeting of great importance to the cause of Christ. As the gatherings at Wilbraham are the largest in the world among those looking for the speedy coming of Jesus, they should exert a greater influence for good than any other meetings. But nothing can be done without the help of the Lord. Let us all go to him with an earnest plea that he will assist every one to "follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." Rom. 14: 19.

We hope every christian who sympathizes with this great feast of tabernacles will make it a subject of special daily prayer, from now till its close; that it may glorify our heavenly Father more than any other meeting ever held since we began to look for the coming of Jesus.

It is very evident that the day of the Lord is at hand, and the time has come for the bride to be ready "for the marriage of the Lamb."

BAPTISM.

We would remind those coming to campmeeting, who have not been baptized, that there is a very nice place near the camp ground to administer the ordinance of baptism, where many in past years have been buried with Christ in baptism, and received very rich blessings. We hope many more will come prepared to follow their worthy example, thus showing to an infidel world that they believe Jesus died and rose again; and that their only hope of a future life, if they die, is in "the resurrection of the dead."

CAMP FURNITURE.

Those who have not attended campmeetings may need a little advice. All should bring their overshoes, umbrellas, overcoats and shawls. You will find them useful, no doubt, during the meeting. Always go prepared for rain. Bring your own bedding. A quilt for each individual will be sufficient. You can put one-half under you and cover yourself with the other half. Bring a pillow-case and fill it with straw, or leaves, after you get there. Some bring bed-ticks and fill them with straw; but you can fix a pretty good bed in the straw of the tents, without the bed-ticks,—much better than soldiers have.

Put a piece of soap, and a towel or two into your bag, a hair-brush and comb.

Each tent's company will need a wash-basin, wooden pail, looking-glass, some nails, hammer, small cord; and if you can bring a crowbar, an inch-and-a-half, or two-inch augur, you will find them convenient in pitching your tent, and for other purposes. Bring a few tacks and matches. Lamps and oil will be furnished on the ground.

There will be extra tent room for those who cannot provide tents; but we hope all who possibly can, will bring them. Wear plain clothing that you will not be afraid of soiling by sitting on the straw. If you wear jewelry—hope you do not—you will do well to leave it at home, as you will be liable to lose it on the camp-ground. Have stout boots or shoes that will be a match for sticks and stabs. Come to work for the Lord, and you will go home rejoicing.

CERTIFICATES.

It should be remembered that all delegates sent to the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, should be provided with certificates from the churches who send them. The following may answer as a form:—

"This is to certify that —— was duly appointed by the church in —— as a delegate to the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, to be held at Wilbraham campmeeting, at 4 P. M., Aug. 21, 1866.

Every church can send one delegate, and for every fifty members above the first twenty-five, they can send another; i. e., if they have seventy-five members, they can send two; one hundred twenty-five, three; one hundred seventy-five, four.

By a church is meant any company of believers met together for the worship of God. As important business is to be transacted relating to the spiritual welfare of many thousands, we hope all churches will send their delegates.

All preachers co-operating with the association are considered as members, and need no certificates.

TREMONT CAMPMEETING.

The Tremont campmeeting, which commenced July 23d and closed the 30th, was one of special interest and profit to the children of the Lord—the best one ever held at that place. It was characterized by an extra manifestation of christian love, joy, peace, and harmony.

We arrived on the ground Wednesday A. M. We met the following preaching Brn. at the meeting:—J. G. Hook, Israel Damman and his son, M. Batchelor and son Benjamin, L. Boutell, A. Decker, C. Piper, M. B. Patterson, J. Thomas, Sam'l Curry, B. Williams, A. Ross, T. K. Jones, W. C. Hathaway,—from whom we had good preaching and exhortations. The prayer meetings were excellent. There were a large number of young converts present from New Bedford and Fairhaven, who added much interest to the meetings. There is a lively feeling among the followers of Jesus relative to his second coming. Some feel quite sure that he will come next year; others, that the great event will be in 1868.

The signs of the times, morally, socially, physically, and politically, as well as the prophetical periods, all declare in very strong terms that the day of the Lord is at hand. The feeling is becoming very common among christians in all churches, that the coming of Jesus is drawing near; and they love to hear on the subject. We are satisfied that this interest will continue to increase in power and extent, till all who are the true disciples of the Lord will be looking for his appearing; while the mere formalist will mock at the idea, treating it with contempt. But the saints can well afford to be despised by the enemies of the cross of Christ, for the sake of enjoying such a blessed hope as ours. A large number at the campmeeting appeared to have a good degree of this willingness to bear reproach for Christ's sake. They rejoiced that they were worthy to have a share in the sufferings of our Lord. None others know the richness and sweetness of the christian's joys. Those who attempt to escape the cross of Christ are strangers to the hundred-fold profit in this life, which is enjoyed by those who take up the cross and follow Jesus.

We are glad to find a growing feeling among christians in favor of a higher standpoint in divine life, with a deep consciousness that it is essential in order to be ready for the coming of the Son of man. This is a bright omen. This must be the case among those who are ready "for the marriage of the Lamb. The campmeeting at Tremont contributed largely towards this feeling. We shall expect to see the same at our other campmeetings.

The Lord's day at Tremont was one of special interest. The weather was beautiful, and all nature smiled around us. This, in connection with hundreds of hearts rejoicing in the Lord, conspired to make it a heavenly place in Christ Jesus.

Our love-feast at 8 o'clock was one of special interest. There were over two hundred testimonies, one hundred and fifty of which were in the first thirty minutes. It was truly good to be there. Those who participated in it had a feast with Jesus seldom enjoyed in this world.

At the hour for preaching, large numbers came in from the surrounding country, and between one and two thousand from New Bedford. We had excellent order during the whole meeting. During preaching, the large audiences gave excellent attention, as though they came on purpose to hear. Conviction evidently fastened on many minds that "the last days" have really come. We trust some will seek the Lord as the result of this effort.

During the meeting, several found peace in believing on Jesus as their Savior, and others requested prayers. Bro. Hook baptized three on the Lord's day, and four more on Monday.

We left them on Monday morning, July 30th, in the midst of a blessed meeting, which, we learn, continued to increase in interest. When looking over the entire meeting from its beginning to the end, we think it was the best one we ever enjoyed. In saying this, we only repeat a remark that was often heard on the camp-ground. O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness.

It may be well to notice some reasons why we had such a good meeting at Tremont.

1. There was more praying in the conference meetings than usual, indicating that it was felt that all the help must come from the Lord.

2. Nearly all attended the prayer meetings, which were held three times a day (8 A. M., 1 and 6 P. M.) in front of the preacher's stand, when the weather would admit.

3. The preachers attended the prayer meetings, and were active there, not by long tedious talks, that kill a prayer meeting, but short and earnest exhortations. This was a very important feature of the meetings. It sometimes happens that preachers feel like young men, when they are asked to go to a Sabbath school, that it is too small business for them. We saw nothing of that feeling at Tremont. All were like little children, ready to sit at the feet of Jesus and learn of one who is meek and lowly.

4. There was an absence of contention on disputed points of doctrine wherein brethren honestly differ. There was a real christian toleration, that made it pleasant for all the friends of Jesus. This was one of the most important features of the meeting, and contributed very largely to make the meeting what it was,—a feast to christians. Without this element, it is impossible to have a good meeting, because the Spirit of God approves of no other, as the experience of all ages most fully proves. Unless we follow the instruction of the Spirit, which says,—"Walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness, and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4: 1–3,) we must not expect the approbation of the Lord. This being the case, we must expect that Satan will do all he can to prevent this union; hence, whatever does prevent it, we may know is Satanic.

☞ FARE REDUCED.

Bangor and intermediate places to Boston, for Wilbraham Campmeeting.

We have arranged with the Agent of the Steamer Katahdin, so that the brethren and sisters in Maine, who wish to attend the Wilbraham meeting, can come and return on the boat for one fare—half price. Call for Wilbraham Campmeeting tickets (good Aug. 16 to 28 inclusive), with return Check, to be endorsed by Geo. T. Adams, at the campmeeting or in Boston. The steamer leaves Bangor Aug. 16th and 20th.

THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

A new era has dawned upon us relative to foreign news. We can now get news from Europe in less time than it was conveyed the distance of forty miles in the days of our boyhood. This is a fast age. Mr. Cyrus Field, the noted manager of the cable expedition, reports that he sent a telegram to London "and got a reply in eight minutes." The whole length of the cable is 1864 miles. The average speed of the ship Great Eastern, while paying out the cable was about five nautical miles per hour. The weather was quite unpleasant, but the laying of the cable is considered a complete success. We may now have news twice a day from Europe. Truly this is an age of wonders. What next?

"OUR HOME."

We have just received a beautiful Chromo-Lithograph of "Our Home" on the hill-side; by which we mean the justly celebrated Water Cure, under the care of Dr. J. C. Jackson, as physician-in-chief, and his associates Drs. F. W. Hurd, Miss H. N. Austin, and Jas. H. Jackson.

We take pleasure in recommending this institution to all who are seeking to regain lost health by any human agency; and also to those who wish to learn how to preserve health, and avoid a premature grave. Dr. Jackson and his competent associates are having great success in curing all varieties of disease. They do not give one particle of medicine.

The picture of "Our Home," to which we have referred, is 36 by 24 inches. Price $3.00. Address F. W. Hurd and Co., Dansville, N. Y.

THE NAME.—We hope all our contributors will imitate the good example of Sr. B. P. French. See article in another column, headed, "Give us your name." The article is doubly valuable for having the name. Let none be ashamed of their names, till they do wicked and mean things.

CAMPMEETINGS.—Our readers will find some very important suggestions from Bro. Ladd, in this paper, on campmeetings.

A PLAIN BRIDE.

Jesus, the King of kings, wishes to have his bride dress in a plain manner,—"modest apparel," "not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works." Are all who profess to be members of his bride—the church—trying to please him; or are they seeking to please a wicked world? We conceive this to be an important question to all who wish to be ready for "the marriage of the Lamb," which is evidently about to take place. It is crossing, we know, to come out from the world and be separate; but when we do it to please Jesus, he smiles upon us, and gives us "GREAT PEACE." Will you try to please him in all things?" It is the only way to find pure happiness in this life.

Please read the following, from a Sr. in Christ:—

"BRO. GRANT:—I feel as if I ought to do something for God, when he has done so much for unworthy me. And oh, what can I do? When I contemplate what he has done for fallen man, I shrink into nothing, and creep close behind the cross, and am willing to sacrifice all, yes, lay all on the altar, that I may obtain that crown he has prepared for them that love his appearing. The night is far spent, the dawn is nearing, our King is coming, and what I can do let me do quickly. Enclosed you will find two dollars. I also enclose a breast-pin, given to me by my husband eighteen years ago, which you will make such use of as you think proper. I give it to do the will of my Master. Should have done so long ago, but did not want it known who sent it, it looked so much like boasting. But perhaps it is as well. Some other one seeing it may do the same. Seeing the like gifts of others published led me to do the same, as I should not have otherwise thought of it. It is, or was, worth twelve dollars. I have lost some of the gold off of it. ($1.65 was all that could be got for it.—ED.)

In reading of the poor and destitute, and the labor of God's people, and how much help they need, is it right that professors should keep and wear things unnecessary? I for one will give up all such things. Oh! would to God that I had thousands to give to God's suffering poor, and for the spread of the truth."

THE COMING CAMPMEETING.

DEAR CRISIS:—How shall we make our approaching Feast of Tabernacles "the most successful and profitable one that we have ever enjoyed"? With your leave, I propose offering a few thoughts that occur to me on this question.

1st. The campmeeting is to the church of this age what the "Feast of Tabernacles" was to the Israelites—a period set apart and devoted exclusively to the service, worship, and praise of Jehovah. It is said of that hallowed occasion, that "on the day that the Tabernacle (Tent) was reared up, the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the testimony; and at even there was . . . the appearance of fire until the morning. So it was alway; the cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night."—Num. 9: 15, 16. To secure the divine presence, it was requisite that the Israelites should make all the preparation according to the law, previous to the feast. And thus their abstinence, purifications, and all other requirements, were faithfully observed by all the people, or the "Shechinah glory" was withheld. If this rule will apply with any propriety to our great annual feast, then the duty of the church is plain.

2nd The campmeeting should not be made a religious picnic, nor a place to spend a few days leisurely and idly; but, as it may be made to be, the greatest and most thrilling occasion of religious worship known to the church. All her moral forces should be brought to bear upon the question of doing the greatest amount of good, both to the "body of Christ which is the church," and to the unconverted there assembled.

The spirit with which persons attend campmeeting has much to do with their own profit, and with the general success of the meeting. If they come to the ground (as too many of them do) like helpless invalids, to absorb the attention and tax the time and patience and labor of the sound members of the body, to help them up from their miserable backsliding; it detracts so much from what could have been better employed in laboring for the spirituality of the church, and for the conversion of perishing sinners.

We ought most assuredly never to backslide in any degree. Every step taken should be a step forward; but if a brother find himself backslidden, or lukewarm, let him promptly and honestly confess his fault to his brethren; and "ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness." Let the work of restoration be done at once, and not look forward weeks or months to the approaching campmeeting, as the time for the annual settlement of a crooked and Christ-dishonoring account with the Lord. Go at once to the Savior of sinners, confess, repent, and believe in him. The matter is between you and the Lord. He will hear an honest, earnest prayer, and a confession of sin. Light will break into your soul; and instead of coming to the camp heavy and burdened with sin and backsliding, you will see at the first approach the cloud by day, or the fire by night.

3rd. Let us remember from the first, that the object is wholly a spiritual one. Salvation in the gospel sense,—full, present salvation,—entire consecration to the Lord, is the work of the church. Thus purity for the saints, and pardon for sinners, should be the ruling motive and effort. If saints are pure and holy, sinners will inevitably be converted. Says David, "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right (or constant) spirit within me; . . . then will I teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners SHALL be converted unto thee." The result is thus guaranteed. Let us therefore receive from the Lord Jesus the divine unction, the holy anointing, the baptism of the Spirit, that the fruit of our labor may be abundant in the winning of souls to Christ. Instead of fifty or a hundred conversions at the meeting, there ought to be, and may be five hundred or a thousand. Why not three thousand, as on the day of Pentecost?

4th. The conducting of meetings in the tents should be another matter of careful attention. Every large tent should be a "Bethesda,"—a "tent of the testimony"; and "the cloud . . . by day, and the . . . fire by night" should be the constant condition. To secure this result, there must be heavenly order and system. From three to five prayer meetings can be held each day, besides the public exercises at the stand. My experience and observation prove that the most profitable morning meeting, after breakfast, is the "class meeting" in each tent. All meetings should be conducted with life and spirit, but especially this. Every exercise should be brief. "BE SHORT," should be the motto, and never varied from. Nothing kills the spirit of a meeting like long, windy, sleepy prayers and exhortations. If brethren cannot speak and pray short, then divide into small parcels and let a space intervene, and speak again. BEWARE OF TEDIOUSNESS. Remember how you dislike it in others, and practice what you approve in them. Much more might be added that will readily appear to the thoughtful and spiritual in the church of Christ.

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

It is expected to be a good one, and there are signs of a large one. There will necessarily be many things to see to, and preparation to be made to accommodate all. I wish that all those who have tent ground, that they will not occupy this year, would notify me as early as possible, that I can accommodate with their ground before Wednesday. You all know your ground is forfeited by Wednesday, unless we are notified that you are coming. If you will notify us that you are not coming at all, and tell where your tent stood, you will save us much trouble, and we shall be able to accommodate some one with your ground, especially if it is in the front or second circle of tents.

Bring what tools you can, to accommodate yourself and neighbors. The tools that belong to the ground are not sufficient at the time of tent-pitching. Axes and hand saws can be brought in a trunk. Some coming in wagons can bring a crowbar. Think of that, Bro. Then you need not hear it so often announced from the stand, "Where is our crowbar?" Cords and strings are always called for. I have begged of all of our merchants what I could for years, and will this; but we are always short.

Sisters, don't forget that thick dress, and a pair of shoes that are thick. I have secured pasture for twenty horses or more, and there will be horse feed on the ground this year. There will be tents for strangers, and for those that cannot bring one; but bring a blanket, and a pillow-case, and fill it with straw, and you have a bed of your own. Remember that tin cup and basin. We use all we have at the cooking stand. Vegetables and meat can be had on the ground. Let us all do our duty, and have a good meeting. HIRAM MUNGER.

For the World's Crisis.

CAMPMEETING.

I want to say a word to the little, inexperienced ones who intend to be at Wilbraham during the coming campmeeting. I never was there until the last two years, and it took me both years to learn how to receive the most good at a campmeeting.

First of all, if you have misused any body, or slandered any of the brethren or sisters, be sure to confess it, and so have a good clear conscience to carry with you. (And this would be a good idea for those who do not go to campmeeting.) When you get there, every thing will be novel. Perhaps you never saw a village of cotton-cloth houses before, or never dreamed that there were hundreds and thousands of "like precious faith" scattered over the earth. Well, here you see them,—those "whose praise is in all the churches," admired and unadmired; preachers loved and unloved; your own fellow-pilgrims from east and west, north and south, who have come up to the sacred hill, singing and preaching the truths of God. You will weep for joy as one after another take you by the hand. Ah! you never expected to meet this Bro., or that Sr., till God called you to Jerusalem. But here they are—glory to God. Some of them are yellow and some are black; but Christ has purchased all with his own blood, and made them "all one" in himself.

Just here you must begin to watch. These new scenes may so fill your mind as to prevent your being benefited by them. Keep in mind the object of campmeetings—to strengthen and encourage us, spiritually. I have found by attending four campmeetings, that one cannot get much good of the prayer and conference meetings, unless wherever we go, we remain in the tent till the meeting is closed. By running from one tent to another, you do not get the spirit of any of the meetings, nor do you benefit yourselves or any one else.

Then about that host of preachers, male and female. Here they meet. O may God give them grace and wisdom to dwell together in love, and to rightly divide his word. You will not like all you hear preached; nevertheless, girded with charity you can stand unharmed by conflicting views. All think they are right, and if they are truly christians, looking for the Lord, we can overlook minor differences in opinion.

Now if you make up your mind to grow strong at a campmeeting without exercise, you will be mistaken. Nature teaches us that after a hearty meal has been taken, health requires us to exercise. Otherwise, we shall be dull and sleepy. Just so with spiritual food. If you want to grow, work for it. If you want to be blessed, bless others. But don't be hypocritical. If you wouldn't be heard to "shout" at home, and pretend that it is in bad order to talk and pray loud there, stick to it, and not go out into the woods where noisy ones are met, and there practice what you will not preach. If it isn't pretty to shout in a religious meeting in a city, it isn't at Wilbraham. And sisters, while I think of it, if that great homely-looking woman can be treated something like a sister at campmeeting, treat her like more than a "black washerwoman" at home.

There, I've tried to stop before, but could not feel as though all had been said. May the Lord bless us, and enable us to honor him at home and abroad.

REPORT OF PROGRESS.

We left Haverhill for North Salem, N. H., Apr. 7th, having first found a good home for my dear old mother. We were at N. S. two Sabbaths and the intervening week. The report went out before we went there that I was a Spiritualist, and that was used as an influence against us. Before the meetings closed, the people saw that Spiritualism and my Bible position did not agree very well. Our last meeting was the best of all; a larger number being out, and prejudice evidently giving way to the truth.

Monday, April 16th, we left North Salem for Great Falls. Here we found a little company who were amid trials. They felt a want of fellowship. Some old differences of long standing were in the way, and many felt grieved. All desired to have the troubles removed, but did not know just how it could be done. We preached and labored among them over the Sabbath, working privately at the difficulties; and on Monday evening called a meeting of all who desired for themselves the full christian fellowship of their brethren. The differences were brought together, and privately and satisfactorily settled the following day; so that on Tuesday evening, we had a little company together acknowledging full fellowship for each other.

If christians in all places will take this position, and not fret, or be impatient about restraints of a mutual covenant obligation, "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," adopting and working on the gospel rule, in Matt. 18: 15–18, the difficulties that so often distract would be out of the way.

We left Great Falls praising God for the privilege of laboring in his service. The people helped us after a "godly sort." He that goeth forth trusting God shall not return empty.

Friday, April 24th, we went to Kennebunk Port, Me., and found a good home at Bro William Mitchell's. Had an excellent time preaching on the Lord's day, and in visiting among the brethren. Bro. B. S. Emery and Bro. Mitchell are keeping the truth before the people in this region; both living here, and going out as duty calls. They give the trumpet a "certain" sound. Thank God for good, faithful laborers.

Our next appointment was at Biddeford. Here, as at K. Port, we met old friends, and had a free time. The brethren in some places are struggling with difficulties. Some who say they are believers, and are not, are found in many places; but God's sifting time is close at hand.

We were well entertained by our amiable Bro. and Sr. Bailey. God bless them and all our dear friends, with whom we have found such pleasant pilgrim homes. To those who have no home, no local habitation, but are out in the world as pilgrims and strangers, such pleasant temporary homes are like the green oases with their sparkling fountains of clear cold water in the midst of the sandy deserts. We rest in such places as happily as we could in our own home. But we cannot tarry long. Scarcely have we found pleasant friends, before we are obliged to leave them. When we feel that we must part, they draw like chords around our heart. So it was at Yarmouth. We bade our kind friends "good-bye," and Bro. Wellcome took us in his wagon to West Falmouth. Bro. W. was good company, and we beguiled our way by talking of the blessedness of the truth, and the best means of advancing the knowledge of it, until we arrived at Bro. Field's, in West Falmouth. L. C. MCKINSTRY.

A SAD MISFORTUNE.

The following private letter from Bro. Sheldon we give without his consent, and we trust he will pardon us for so doing. Bro. Sheldon has been the victim of a most daring outrage and theft, which he describes more graphically than we can do. We most deeply sympathize with our dear brother and fellow-laborer in this severe loss, and the trouble occasioned by it; and not only this, but we know hundreds of other hearts beat in sympathy for him in this hour. Let him be remembered in this time of misfortune.—Voice of the West.

Dear Bro. Himes:—It is with a sad heart that I write you to-day. I pitched my tent in this village on Wednesday, the 18th inst., and preached in the evening. After meeting, Eld. G. W. Miller and family decided to remain in the tent all night, and let me go and get some rest. I left my trunk in the tent, containing my books, tracts, clothing, and money. I had long been saving all I could to meet my arrangements in pecuniary matters, and had by the utmost prudence saved $150, which I had deposited in my trunk, deeming it much safer there than in my pocket, as the trunk with its contents weighed over one hundred and fifty pounds, and was not easily moved. But sometime in the night, while Eld. Miller was asleep, the trunk was taken from within about eight feet of his head, and carried off. Faithful search was made the next day. Early in the day a bundle of letters came floating down the river, which I recognized as a package taken from the pocket of my coat, which was locked up in my trunk. This proved that the trunk had gone up the river, and been broken open.

After long search, the till of the trunk was found concealed in the brush, with some of my Greek and Hebrew Lexicons wet up. Further search revealed the trunk sunken in the mill-pond, and a part of my books in the bottom of the river, among which were my Greek Testament and Hebrew Bible—about entirely ruined. A part of my tracts were thrown into the stream, and a part sunk with the trunk, which was filled with gravel and stone. A large share of my clothing, a part of my books, and all of the money is missing, and the rest of my books ruined, including several hundred tracts of different kinds.

Three Catholic Irishmen, who had been living in the place a short time, were missing the morning after this occurrence, and cannot be traced in any direction. The sheriff thinks they are the guilty ones. It is well that Eld. Miller did not awake to resist them, as his life would not have been spared.

I am thrown into a serious dilemma by this loss of money, books, tracts, and clothing. What to do I know not, unless I suffer it out. Some have suggested that I make a call for aid through the press, but this I refuse to do for two reasons: first, there are so many calls, that it would be of no avail; second, if any were in possession of "bowels of compassion," after hearing of the facts, they would as soon give without a call, as with one. Let me suffer, rather than add another to the already unheeded list of calls for help. I shall be as cheerful as I can under the circumstances. Our congregation is large and attentive. But I am too much depressed in spirit to do justice to the theme I treat on; yet I am listened to with eagerness. Hope for good results. Bro. Miller is helping me, and is much pleased with the interest evinced to hear.

LITTLE WANDERERS' HOME.

Bro. Grant:—Received your note of the 27th on Monday the 29th, and hereby acknowledge the receipt of the money contained therein; viz., $1.00 from R. Rich, $1.00 from "an unconverted young man," and 30 cents from Sr. Taylor.

Through Bro. Adams, I have just received $2.00 for the "Home," from C. C. B. Have also received $2.00 from "a friend" in Worcester; 50 cts. from E. Myers, of ——, Pa.; $1.00 from Sarah F. W. of Davenport, N. Y.; and $1.50, "reward of merit" money, from a little Sunday School taught by Mrs. Sarah A. G., South Windsor, Conn. May the Lord bless all these donors who have sent their money to aid in purchasing a home for the little wanderers, and to feed the hungry, and to instruct the ignorant.

The Cholera is gaining ground. Last week there were twenty-one deaths from this plague. Within forty-eight hours there have been fourteen new cases and seven deaths. These facts are from the reports of the Board of Health. "Seventy cellar, shed, and court tenements in Bedford and Baker streets, and other places" where we labor, have been closed and nailed up. A few days ago, one of that degraded class called "Bummers," died of Cholera at the corner of Eighth and Shippen Sts., on the sidewalk. She was bareheaded, barearmed, and barefooted. As her hands and feet were turning black, a bystander called out, "When she dies send for the Coroner." How different the end of the wicked from that of the righteous. There were one hundred and one deaths from Cholera Infantum, twenty-one from Cholera Morbus, ten from Diarrhea, seventeen from Dysentery, five from sun-stroke, and eight from the effects of the heat, in this city last week.

We look upon these phenomena, and upon the state of the elements, the nations, the world, and the church, as indicating the near approach of the Prince of peace. Until he comes, we expect that wars, tumults, divisions, plagues, pestilences, famines, distresses, etc., will increase. We believe that Satan will make one more grand effort for the mastery, and that he is maturing the plans that six thousand years' experience have enabled him to devise, in order to effect his purpose; and he will well-nigh succeed. The Antichrist will soon be revealed fully. I hope that our ministers will be faithful in showing to a perishing world that they are to look to Jesus for immortality and endless life. I am afraid that when the time of deep trial comes, some will have occasion to regret their unfaithfulness in this direction. It will at once show the necessity of the second advent of Christ, if faithfully preached, and will lead christians to "be sober, and to hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto" us "at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Our hearts are cheered by the epistles we receive from various parts of the country. May the Lord bless all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." We thank you, dear brother, for your encouraging words. The seed which you have sown here is springing up. May grace, mercy, and peace abide with your spirit. Yours waiting for salvation,

HOME AGAIN.

Bro. Grant:—After an absence of over seven weeks from the loved ones, I have arrived at home once more, and with a heart full of gratitude to God for his care over us—me and mine.

For the benefit of our most excellent paper, the Crisis, I would say that I have visited several places in Vt., and find the brethren and sisters in most places alive, and in a waiting position for the coming of the Just One. In Bridgewater, Vt., I stayed over four weeks, and baptized eight, making thirty-two in all since I went there last fall. Five others were baptized belonging to other places.

Well, my heart says, Praise our God. I am glad that I have the privilege to be at home again with my family. It is good to rest, but my eye is turned to the great gathering time, when all of Father's family will be at home. Long-separated families will then meet to part no more. Glory to God. The time will soon come. Brn. in the ministry, let us be bold; it is no time now for dallying with the enemy. Pray for me. Your Bro. in Christ, Geo. A. Streeter.

Correspondence.

From Bro. and Sr. Damman.

Bro. Grant:—If we shall not commit too great a trespass upon your patience, and the rights of much better contributors, we would humbly ask the privilege of reporting ourselves through the Crisis to the dear brethren and sisters in Maine, and to all who would like to hear from us. All hail! blessed pilgrims. Having obtained help of God, we are still following in the way, expecting immediately to be led to the house of our Master. Thank Heaven, unworthy, little, and unknown as we are, we have received and accepted an invitation to be there, where will be gathered the good and blest of every age and clime.

We have recently enjoyed a rich foretaste of the great feast, with the brethren of our Lord, on holy ground, at the Tremont campmeeting. God was in the place, and we knew it not until we saw the manifestation of his power, not in burning the trees, but in holy cement, the virtue of that petition—I would that they be one. Praise the Lord. With one voice we all exclaimed, I never saw it on this wise so fully. It was really good to be there; and if there was nothing better in prospect, we should have desired, as Peter did, to make tabernacles and remain in the sacred presence. But it is not quite yet. It was only as a way-side temple, where we might turn aside to pray and refresh ourselves for a little, girding up anew, fortifying our powers, looking over the reckoning, desiring to know what manner of TIME the Spirit of God did signify. We were indeed fed with the word of life, and honey from the rock.

How blessed to know we have not been following cunningly devised fables. Our faith was never stronger. Evidences are perfectly conclusive that we are almost home. We hardly think there will be time for another anniversary of the feast at Tremont. Our hearts respond, Amen, let the curtain be rolled up; that we may look upon the face of our Beloved, and be made like him. O blessed hope! We need not mistake. If the hope is ours, we shall purify ourselves. We shall be watchful and sober, putting off the works of the flesh, and putting on the armor of righteousness, seeking favor and fellowship with God. It is his blessed will, even our sanctification.

Take courage, weary pilgrim, the journey has been somewhat toilsome, 'tis true; but there's a home in waiting for every one,—crowns laid up, angels in waiting readiness to obey the last mandate, Gather them unto me. O we must be there. Then, once for all, we'll bare our bosoms to the storm, and all together "lift or die." I. & L. Damman.

New Bedford, Mass., July 31st, 1866.

From Bro. J. S. Hinds.

Bro. Grant:—Thinking that some of the readers of the Crisis might be pleased to know how I am getting along, I will inform them. Dear Brn. and Srs., scattered in every direction from Wilbraham camp-ground, perhaps you remember of seeing me there. I have remembered the countenance and kindness of many that I saw there. Yes, and I have and do still remember them in my prayers.

There are but few around here of our belief, and we do not have any Second Advent preaching near here, excepting Bro. G. W. Stetson, who was here the last of March. His preaching was liked well. The best blessings we enjoy are the comforting influences of the Holy Spirit and the Bible, and the next is the Crisis and the Voice; and some of my friends have sent me tracts that have been a great help to me.

Now a few words about the Wilbraham campmeeting last year. I had a hard time to get there, but was greatly disappointed to find so much of the life and power of godliness there. It was beyond anything that I had ever expected to see in this life. Brn. and Srs., I am very anxious to attend the next campmeeting at Wilbraham, but do not see as it is possible, for I am not able to work at my trade in warm weather; and besides being sick some, I have had a felon on my right thumb that has kept me from doing much work for five or six weeks. And we have a daughter that lives with us, that is very sick with consumption, and can hardly make up our mind whether she will ever get well or not; but think her prepared for death.

Dear Brn. and Srs., I love the Crisis and Voice of the West; but I am sorry that I am not able to pay for either; and I don't know the brother's name that offered to pay for the Voice for a year from last August; but thanks be to him. And I do not know who pays for the Crisis; but I am thankful that I have had it for over a year. It appears to me that these papers are better and better. John S. Hinds.

Wilmington, Essex Co., N. Y.

From Bro. N. Sprague.

Bro. Grant:—I hope you, or some other faithful watchman, will try to visit Lanesville, and preach to us the word of life. We have been much strengthened and encouraged by a visit from Bro. J. T. Dixon, who was with us some three weeks in all, including three Sabbaths. Although there were many discouragements, the weather being very warm, and a very busy time of the year; yet, backsliders were reclaimed, and sinners inquired the way to Zion. Four were baptized by Bro. D. while here.

We are small in number, and poor in this world's goods; still, we live and wait and hope. Bro. Sam'l Curry has visited us also; and has promised us another visit. His words of cheer were timely. These labors of love are appreciated. May these preaching Brn., who knew we were unable to compensate them fully in this world's goods, find their exceeding great reward in the world to come.

Yours truly, looking for "the blessed hope,"

Lanesville, Ct. N. Sprague.

From Bro. S. D. Daniels.

Bro. Grant:—My health has been very poor several months, but I am in hopes of improvement now. I believe the Lord is soon to come, and I feel it duty to go out into the highways and hedges and urge them to come in. Unless I do, I cannot enjoy religion. I have been discouraged by some, as has been the case with other young preachers. I have not the least shadow of a doubt with regard to my duty. I do believe I shall be lost if I do it not; and I start again, knowing that he that is for me is greater than all that can be against me. S. D. Daniels.

LIGHT ADVANCING.

Extract from a private letter of a Baptist minister:—

"Dear Bro. Grant:—Some ten years since, I was led to inquire into the teachings of the Bible on the two questions, 'Is the soul of man immortal?' and, 'Will the finally impenitent exist forever in conscious misery?' After careful investigation, I came to the same conclusion, on these questions, with Bro. C. F. Hudson, in his excellent work, 'Christ our Life.' In the summer of 1863, I was taking 'The Earnest Christian' published in Buffalo, N. Y., by Rev. B. T. Roberts. In the June No. of that periodical, the editor published a stirring article on 'Eternal Punishment,' strongly advocating the popular view. As I read the article, I wrote on the margin phonographic pencil notes of dissent. Afterward, I expanded those notes into a regular reply, read that reply to some half dozen Advent brethren living here, and then sent a copy of it to the editor for publication. Bro. Roberts, a Free Methodist, received the reply, and wrote to me that he admired the spirit of my article, and desired to give the subject further investigation; but said such a periodical as his could not be sustained, if he should admit controversial articles into it. The Advent brethren here, then talked of getting the two articles published together in pamphlet form for circulation. But when they found the cost of publishing would be considerably more than they had expected, they gave it up. And thus the matter has rested till now, except that I have devoted several spare hours to revising and rewriting the reply.

I still think the two articles, in pamphlet form, might be circulated by mail among Orthodox ministers, and lay members also, and, by the blessing of God, do something towards bringing them back to Bible teaching on the subject of future punishment. In this opinion the Advent brethren here concurred, after hearing the two articles read.

Bro. Roberts' article presents the arguments for the popular view, in a very strong and condensed form; and in the judgment of the brethren who have heard them read, my reply fully meets those arguments, and establishes the scriptural doctrine of the destruction of the wicked."

"Mayor's Office,
New York, July 30, 1866.

To the Lord Mayor of London:

The energy and genius of man, directed by the Providence of God, have united the Continents.

May this union be instrumental in securing the happiness of all nations and the rights of all peoples. John T. Hoffman, Mayor of New York."

New York, Aug. 1. The Herald has the following dispatch, dated London, July 30:

A great reform meeting was held to-day in this city; 30,000 people were present. Resolutions were adopted declaring that they had no faith in the government. Petitions were read, which are to be presented to Parliament, demanding inquiry into the conduct of Sir Richard Mayne, Chief of Police. The procession was immense. Several bands of music were in attendance. Everything passed off quietly.

The Tribune has a special which says that peace was certain at Berlin on Saturday. Bismark and the King return this week. Prussia carries all her points. The Liberals support Bismark's foreign policy. Austria's naval victory is much overrated.

The Hyde Park riots and the movement to form exclusive reform league meetings have periled the Derby Government.

Londonderry, July 27—A. M. The armistice between Prussia and Austria expires to-day. It will probably be renewed, but there is no intimation as yet of this having been done.

Previous to the armistice the Italians had been very successful in the South Tyrol.

The Times says that the armistice did not come a moment too soon to save Austria from a final catastrophe. Yet one day more and the Italians would have found themselves in full possession of Southern Tyrol, and the Prussians, masters of the passes of the Danube, would have threatened Vienna on the east and west. The combatants are now resting irrespective of their positions, and there are well grounded hopes that the truce may be prolonged into an armistice and this again into a definite peace.

On the 25th, a suspension of hostilities for eight days was concluded between the Italians and Austrians.

London, Aug. 1. The advices from the seat of war state that the Prussian troops have entered Manneheim and Heidelberg.

Special dispatch to the New York Herald from London, Aug. 3, received in New York Aug. 5.

Martial law has been proclaimed in lower Austria and also in Venice, Prussia and Wurtemberg.

A peace conference is to be held at Prague. The preliminaries agreed upon are as follows: Austria is to withdraw from the German Confederation and is to lose Venetia and her part of Schleswig-Holstein. Austria is also to pay ten millions of dollars to her adversaries as expenses of the war. The German States north of the Maine, are to form a union under the guidance of Prussia. The German States south of the Maine are to form an independent union.

THE PROPHETIC TIME QUESTION; or, Bible Time Examined. By Wm. Sheldon. 27c.

Children's Hymns.

We have just published another edition of this book of 32 pages, containing nearly sixty choice hymns. Its peculiarities are these.

1. The hymns are devotional, and scriptural in character, and adapted to purposes of worship, instead of being songs and ditties about birds and flowers and pic-nics and Sunday school theatres.

2. They have some poetic merit, and are fit to read if they do not have a musical accompaniment, instead of being what the Independent calls "rhyme run mad which is attempted to be sanctified by singing it in the Sunday School."

3. They are mostly in ordinary and familiar meters, and can be sung by the congregation, in well-known tunes, without having to wait and learn a lot of new jigs, waltzes, marches, and the like.

4. Their price brings them within the reach of all classes, and hence entire schools are easily supplied with them.

They are sent post paid for 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.50 per 100.

LITTLE WANDERERS' HOME.

Bro. Grant:—Received your note of the 27th on Monday the 29th, and hereby acknowledge the receipt of the money contained therein; viz., $1.00 from R. Rich, $1.00 from "an unconverted young man," and 30 cents from Sr. Taylor.

Through Bro. Adams, I have just received $1.00 for the "Home," from C. C. B. Have also received $2.00 from "a friend" in Worcester; 50 cts. from E. Myers, of ——, Pa.; $1.00 from Sarah F. W. of Davenport, N. Y.; and $1.50, "reward of merit" money, from a little Sunday School taught by Mrs. Sarah A. G., South Windsor, Conn. May the Lord bless all these donors who have sent their money to aid in purchasing a home for the little wanderers, and to feed the hungry, and to instruct the ignorant.

The Cholera is gaining ground. Last week there were twenty-one deaths from this plague. Within forty-eight hours there have been fourteen new cases and seven deaths. These facts are from the reports of the Board of Health. "Seventy cellar, shed, and court tenements in Bedford and Baker streets, and other places" where we labor, have been closed and nailed up. A few days ago, one of that degraded class called "Bummers," died of Cholera at the corner of Eighth and Shippen Sts., on the sidewalk. She was bareheaded, barearmed, and barefooted. As her hands and feet were turning black, a bystander called out, "When she dies send for the Coroner." How different the end of the wicked from that of the righteous. There were one hundred and one deaths from Cholera Infantum, twenty-one from Cholera Morbus, ten from Diarrhea, seventeen from Dysentery, five from sun-stroke, and eight from the effects of the heat, in this city last week.

We look upon these phenomena, and upon the state of the elements, the nations, the world, and the church, as indicating the near approach of the Prince of peace. Until he comes, we expect that wars, tumults, divisions, plagues, pestilences, famines, distresses, etc., will increase. We believe that Satan will make one more grand effort for the mastery, and that he is maturing the plans that six thousand years' experience have enabled him to devise, in order to effect his purpose; and he will well-nigh succeed. The Antichrist will soon be revealed fully. I hope that our ministers will be faithful in showing to a perishing world that they are to look to Jesus for immortality and endless life. I am afraid that when the time of deep trial comes, some will have occasion to regret their unfaithfulness in this direction. It will at once show the necessity of the second advent of Christ, if faithfully preached, and will lead christians to "be sober, and to hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto" us "at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Our hearts are cheered by the epistles we receive from various parts of the country. May the Lord bless all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." We thank you, dear brother, for your encouraging words. The seed which you have sown here is springing up. May grace, mercy, and peace abide with your spirit. Yours waiting for salvation,

Phila., July 31. F. H. Burbank.

For the World's Crisis.

HOME AGAIN.

Bro. Grant:—After an absence of over seven weeks from the loved ones, I have arrived at home once more, and with a heart full of gratitude to God for his care over us—me and mine.

For the benefit of our most excellent paper, the Crisis, I would say that I have visited several places in Vt., and find the brethren and sisters in most places alive, and in a waiting position for the coming of the Just One. In Bridgewater, Vt., I stayed over four weeks, and baptized eight, making thirty-two in all since I went there last fall. Five others were baptized belonging to other places.

Well, my heart says, Praise our God. I am glad that I have the privilege to be at home again with my family. It is good to rest, but my eye is turned to the great gathering time, when all of Father's family will be at home. Long-separated families will then meet to part no more. Glory to God. The time will soon come. Brn. in the ministry, let us be bold; it is no time now for dallying with the enemy. Pray for me. Your Bro. in Christ, Geo. A. Streeter.

Correspondence.

From Bro. and Sr. Damman.

Bro. Grant:—If we shall not commit too great a trespass upon your patience, and the rights of much better contributors, we would humbly ask the privilege of reporting ourselves through the Crisis to the dear brethren and sisters in Maine, and to all who would like to hear from us. All hail! blessed pilgrims. Having obtained help of God, we are still following in the way, expecting immediately to be led to the house of our Master. Thank Heaven, unworthy, little, and unknown as we are, we have received and accepted an invitation to be there, where will be gathered the good and blest of every age and clime.

We have recently enjoyed a rich foretaste of the great feast, with the brethren of our Lord, on holy ground, at the Tremont campmeeting. God was in the place, and we knew it not until we saw the manifestation of his power, not in burning the trees, but in holy cement, the virtue of that petition—I would that they be one. Praise the Lord. With one voice we all exclaimed, I never saw it on this wise so fully. It was really good to be there; and if there was nothing better in prospect, we should have desired, as Peter did, to make tabernacles and remain in the sacred presence. But it is not quite yet. It was only as a way-side temple, where we might turn aside to pray and refresh ourselves for a little, girding up anew, fortifying our powers, looking over the reckoning, desiring to know what manner of TIME the Spirit of God did signify. We were indeed fed with the word of life, and honey from the rock.

How blessed to know we have not been following cunningly devised fables. Our faith was never stronger. Evidences are perfectly conclusive that we are almost home. We hardly think there will be time for another anniversary of the feast at Tremont. Our hearts respond, Amen, let the curtain be rolled up; that we may look upon the face of our Beloved, and be made like him. O blessed hope! We need not mistake. If the hope is ours, we shall purify ourselves. We shall be watchful and sober, putting off the works of the flesh, and putting on the armor of righteousness, seeking favor and fellowship with God. It is his blessed will, even our sanctification.

Take courage, weary pilgrim, the journey has been somewhat toilsome, 'tis true; but there's a home in waiting for every one,—crowns laid up, angels in waiting readiness to obey the last mandate, Gather them unto me. O we must be there. Then, once for all, we'll bare our bosoms to the storm, and all together "lift or die." I. & L. Damman.

New Bedford, Mass., July 31st, 1866.

From Bro. J. S. Hinds.

Bro. Grant:—Thinking that some of the readers of the Crisis might be pleased to know how I am getting along, I will inform them. Dear Brn. and Srs., scattered in every direction from Wilbraham camp-ground, perhaps you remember of seeing me there. I have remembered the countenance and kindness of many that I saw there. Yes, and I have and do still remember them in my prayers.

There are but few around here of our belief, and we do not have any Second Advent preaching near here, excepting Bro. G. W. Stetson, who was here the last of March. His preaching was liked well. The best blessings we enjoy are the comforting influences of the Holy Spirit and the Bible, and the next is the Crisis and the Voice; and some of my friends have sent me tracts that have been a great help to me.

Now a few words about the Wilbraham campmeeting last year. I had a hard time to get there, but was greatly disappointed to find so much of the life and power of godliness there. It was beyond anything that I had ever expected to see in this life. Brn. and Srs., I am very anxious to attend the next campmeeting at Wilbraham, but do not see as it is possible, for I am not able to work at my trade in warm weather; and besides being sick some, I have had a felon on my right thumb that has kept me from doing much work for five or six weeks. And we have a daughter that lives with us, that is very sick with consumption, and can hardly make up our mind whether she will ever get well or not; but think her prepared for death.

Dear Brn. and Srs., I love the Crisis and Voice of the West, but I am sorry that I am not able to pay for either; and I don't know the brother's name that offered to pay for the Voice for a year from last August; but thanks be to him. And I do not know who pays for the Crisis; but I am thankful that I have had it for over a year. It appears to me that these papers are better and better.

Wilmington, Essex Co., N. Y.

From Bro. N. Sprague.

Bro. Grant:—I hope you, or some other faithful watchman, will try to visit Lanesville, and preach to us the word of life. We have been much strengthened and encouraged by a visit from Bro. J. T. Dixon, who was with us some three weeks in all, including three Sabbaths. Although there were many discouragements, the weather being very warm, and a very busy time of the year; yet, backsliders were reclaimed, and sinners inquired the way to Zion. Four were baptized by Bro. D. while here.

We are small in number, and poor in this world's goods; still, we live and wait and hope. Bro. Sam'l Curry has visited us also; and has promised us another visit. His words of cheer were timely. These labors of love are appreciated. May these preaching Brn., who knew we were unable to compensate them fully in this world's goods, find their exceeding great reward in the world to come.

Yours truly, looking for "the blessed hope,"

Lanesville, Ct. N. Sprague.

From Bro. S. D. Daniels.

Bro. Grant:—My health has been very poor several months, but I am in hopes of improvement now. I believe the Lord is soon to come, and I feel it duty to go out into the highways and hedges and urge them to come in. Unless I do, I cannot enjoy religion. I have been discouraged by some, as has been the case with other young preachers. I have not the least shadow of a doubt with regard to my duty. I do believe I shall be lost if I do it not; and I start again, knowing that he that is for me is greater than all that can be against me. S. D. Daniels.

Bro. H. Rockwell writes:—"Will you be so kind as to withdraw my appointments for Westfield Farms and Montgomery, Aug. 12th and 19th, on account of injuries caused from a fall, by the breaking of a round in a ladder, and oblige your unworthy brother in affliction."

LIGHT ADVANCING.

Extract from a private letter of a Baptist minister:—

"Dear Bro. Grant:—Some ten years since, I was led to inquire into the teachings of the Bible on the two questions, 'Is the soul of man immortal?' and, 'Will the finally impenitent exist forever in conscious misery?' After careful investigation, I came to the same conclusion, on these questions, with Bro. C. F. Hudson, in his excellent work, 'Christ our Life.' In the summer of 1863, I was taking 'The Earnest Christian' published in Buffalo, N. Y., by Rev. B. T. Roberts. In the June No. of that periodical, the editor published a stirring article on 'Eternal Punishment,' strongly advocating the popular view. As I read the article, I wrote on the margin phonographic pencil notes of dissent. Afterward, I expanded those notes into a regular reply, read that reply to some half dozen Advent brethren living here, and then sent a copy of it to the editor for publication. Bro. Roberts, a Free Methodist, received the reply, and wrote to me that he admired the spirit of my article, and desired to give the subject further investigation; but said such a periodical as his could not be sustained, if he should admit controversial articles into it. The Advent brethren here, then talked of getting the two articles published together in pamphlet form for circulation. But when they found the cost of publishing would be considerably more than they had expected, they gave it up. And thus the matter has rested till now, except that I have devoted several spare hours to revising and rewriting the reply.

I still think the two articles, in pamphlet form, might be circulated by mail among Orthodox ministers, and lay members also, and, by the blessing of God, do something towards bringing them back to Bible teaching on the subject of future punishment. In this opinion the Advent brethren here concurred, after hearing the two articles read.

Bro. Roberts' article presents the arguments for the popular view, in a very strong and condensed form; and in the judgment of the brethren who have heard them read, my reply fully meets those arguments, and establishes the scriptural doctrine of the destruction of the wicked."

Wilson. Died in Richmond, Me., July 17th, 1866, Bro. Samuel Wilson, aged seventy-four years and six months.

Bro. Wilson was one of the best men that I ever knew. He was an every-day, Bible christian; one who followed the Lord fully; and when his health would permit was active in the service of God. His prayers and exhortations were always weighty and edifying. Truly a Father in Israel has gone.

Correspondence between the Mayors of London and New York.

Heart's Content, July 28. To the Mayor of New York: May commerce flourish, and peace and prosperity unite us.

(Signed) Mayor of London.

His Honor the Mayor of New York caused to be forwarded to His Honor the Lord Mayor of London a telegraph dispatch, of which the following is a copy:

"Mayor's Office,
New York, July 30, 1866.

To the Lord Mayor of London:

The energy and genius of man, directed by the Providence of God, have united the Continents.

May this union be instrumental in securing the happiness of all nations and the rights of all peoples. John T. Hoffman, Mayor of New York."

New York, Aug. 1. The Herald has the following dispatch, dated London, July 30:

A great reform meeting was held to-day in this city; 30,000 people were present. Resolutions were adopted declaring that they had no faith in the government. Petitions were read, which are to be presented to Parliament, demanding inquiry into the conduct of Sir Richard Mayne, Chief of Police. The procession was immense. Several bands of music were in attendance. Everything passed of quietly.

The Tribune has a special which says that peace was certain at Berlin on Saturday. Bismark and the King return this week. Prussia carries all her points. The Liberals support Bismark's foreign policy. Austria's naval victory is much overrated.

The Hyde Park riots and the movement to form exclusive reform league meetings have periled the Derby Government.

Liverpool July 26th, Londonderry 27th.

Londonderry, July 27—A. M. The armistice between Prussia and Austria expires to-day. It will probably be renewed, but there is no intimation as yet of this having been done.

Previous to the armistice the Italians had been very successful in the South Tyrol.

The Times says that the armistice did not come a moment too soon to save Austria from a final catastrophe. Yet one day more and the Italians would have found themselves in full possession of Southern Tyrol, and the Prussians, masters of the passes of the Danube, would have threatened Vienna on the east and west. The combatants are now resting irrespective of their positions, and there are well grounded hopes that the truce may be prolonged into an armistice and this again into a definite peace.

On the 25th, a suspension of hostilities for eight days was concluded between the Italians and Austrians.

London, Aug. 1. The advices from the seat of war state that the Prussian troops have entered Mannheim and Heidelberg.

Special dispatch to the New York Herald from London, Aug. 3, received in New York Aug. 5.

Martial law has been proclaimed in lower Austria and also in Venice, Prussia and Wurtemberg.

A peace conference is to be held at Prague. The preliminaries agreed upon are as follows: Austria is to withdraw from the German Confederation and is to lose Venetia and her part of Schleswig-Holstein. Austria is also to pay ten millions of dollars to her adversaries as expenses of the war. The German States north of the Maine, are to form a union under the guidance of Prussia. The German States south of the Maine are to form an independent union.

The Italian patriot Parini (Query—Mazzini) is dead.

Children's Hymns.

We have just published another edition of this book of 32 pages, containing nearly sixty choice hymns. Its peculiarities are these.

1. The hymns are devotional, and scriptural in character, and adapted to purposes of worship, instead of being songs and ditties about birds and flowers and pic-nics and Sunday school theatres.

2. They have some poetic merit, and are fit to read if they do not have a musical accompaniment, instead of being what the Independent calls "rhyme run mad which is attempted to be sanctified by singing it in the Sunday School."

3. They are mostly in ordinary and familiar meters, and can be sung by the congregation, in well-known tunes, without having to wait and learn a lot of new jigs, waltzes, marches, and the like.

4. Their price brings them within the reach of all classes, and hence entire schools are easily supplied with them.

They are sent post paid for 5 cts. single, 50 cts. per dozen, $3.50 per 100. [illegible] for sale at this office.

GOD'S ANVIL.

"Tribulation means threshing," or "beating," and French in his excellent treatise on the study of words, has carried out the figure, showing that it is only by "threshing" that God separates the wheat from the chaff." Julius Sturm has the idea of "beating" beautifully delineated in his poem entitled, "GOD'S ANVIL." One almost feels himself to be passing through the fire, becoming heated and softened, and then on the anvil under the hammer, being beaten into the proper form—God's "own fair shape," as he reads it. It is thrilling. We promised its appearance in the Crisis some time since, and now it is published, and we commend it to God's suffering ones.

It is true that none can say with any significance,—

> "As God will,
> And in his hottest fire hold still," except they are brought to the strait between their own will and God's. He who never knows any will but his own, knows nothing of the happiness of him who can say, "Father, thy will be done." Such as can say this, experience with Paul the solution of the problem, that "tribulation worketh experience, and experience hope." We have need of patience, because God has given us in the "fires" of "tribulation" a place to put it. Where patience is needed, grace will be given; so that it may be successfully exercised. "Tribulation" sometimes works impatience; oftenest so when there is a want of submission to the will of God; but with the spirit of the poem, we can with Paul "glory in tribulation."

L. C. MCKINSTRY.

The following is the poem:—

> "Pain's furnace heat within me quivers,
> God's breath upon the flames doth blow,
> And all my heart in anguish shivers,
> And trembles at the fiery glow;
> And yet I whisper—As God will,
> And, in his hottest fire, hold still.
>
> "He comes and lays my heart, all heated,
> On his hard anvil, minded so
> Into his own fair shape to beat it
> With his great hammer, blow on blow;
> And yet I whisper—As God will,
> And, at his heaviest blows, hold still.
>
> "He takes my softened heart and beats it,
> And sparks fly off at every blow;
> He turns it o'er and o'er and "beats" it,
> And lets it cool, and makes it glow;
> And yet I whisper—As God will,
> And, in his mighty hand, hold still.
>
> "Why should I murmur? for the sorrow
> Thus only longer lived will be;
> Its end may come, and will, to-morrow,
> When God has done his work in me;
> So I say, trusting—As God will,
> And, trusting to the end, hold still.
>
> "He'll cause it all to *profit purely
> Affliction's* glowing, fiery brand,
> For all his heaviest blows are surely
> Afflicted by a Master hand;
> So I say, praying—As God will,
> And hope in him, though suffering still."

TRUST IN GOD.

What is it to trust in God? Is it when our houses are full of every needful thing, and we have every thing that heart can wish? or is it trusting in God when we are brought where we have to look to God for the next meal? The Psalmist tells us to "trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Shall we do as the word tells us? As for myself, I mean to trust in the Lord in all things. When I need anything, I do mean to live where I can go to God on bended knees, and tell him all my wants, and pour out my heart's desire and heart-felt requests before him, who alone can do wondrous things. And I mean to have a faith "that will not tremble on the brink of poverty or woe."

I know from happy experience what it is to trust in the Lord, and what it is not to trust in him. I used to think when husband was at work in the shop earning nine shillings a day, and two dollars, and I had a house full of needful things, that I then knew what it was to trust in the Lord. But, dear ones in Christ, I knew nothing about looking to the Lord and trusting him for my food and raiment, and all things that we needed. But since my dear companion has given up all for Christ, and gone out into the highways and hedges to help get a bride for his Master, I have by experience known what it was to trust in the Lord for almost every thing; and I know we do live nearer the Lord when we have to trust him for all we have. When we have a house full of all the good things that this world affords, it is so sweet, so blessed to commit our all into the hands of God.

The past spring and summer have been of great value to me. I feel as if I had been sitting at the feet of Jesus and learning of him many things I never knew before. Sickness, with its blighting influences, has been in my family; and continued watchings around a dear sister's sick bed, have greatly impaired my health, so that, together with my domestic cares, my health has given way a great deal, and I have felt so poorly at times that I have feared I should be taken from my family, and they left without the kind care and counsels of a mother. But when in this state of mind, I would go to the Lord and pour out my petitions to him who is able to save; and I have felt strengthened, and the needed help has come when I most needed it. It is blessed to trust in the Lord. How sweet are the words of Jesus: "What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." I am glad these words were ever recorded for us poor lone pilgrims in this dreary land. To you who are faithless in regard to trusting in the Lord, let me say to you, cast "all your care upon him, for he careth for" you; and "no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly."

To let you see how good the Lord has been to us this summer, let me first tell you a little incident. My invalid sister had been confined to her bed a long time, not being able to have her bed made without the greatest suffering, and fainting so fast and often, that doctors feared she would die. We asked the good Lord to give us just the things we needed; and the Lord heard and answered prayer in a way that we least expected; and the fifth day of July two dear sisters in Christ, from Athol, came to see us, and brought her a nice new spring bed and bedstead, which cost twenty dollars, a present from the dear children in Athol. Tears of joy filled her eyes, and mine also; and we could not express our heart-felt thanks to them, and to the Lord, for answering our prayers so signally. We have wept and prayed, and thanked God for all his abundant care for us. Sister said, How can I praise God enough for this noble present. Her heart, as well as mine, is filled with thanksgiving and praise to God for his unceasing goodness to us. How can we but love and serve him with undivided hearts and affections for such precious tokens of his love and care toward us?

Yes, I know he loves me, and owns me for his child. How consoling to know from day to day that we are the Lord's. I know today that Jesus is mine and I am his. Blessed assurance! How can I doubt his love to me, when he hears and answers my feeble prayers. To God be all the glory. No goodness in myself; but it is all through the precious name of Jesus. Glory to God and the Lamb. I do love to serve God, and trust in him for all we need. I never felt so much like bringing every thing to Jesus as now.

Dear ones in Christ, who so kindly aided in getting this nice bed for my dear sick sister, I would say, you never can know the good you have done her. She says every day, How can I be thankful enough for it; and she has prayed very earnestly for God to bless and reward every one who so kindly helped in getting her this exceedingly generous present. Now she can lie and not be disturbed, to have it made, for it is always made. God bless you all, is our united prayer. This is the fruit of trusting in the Lord. Praise his dear name. I do love to go to Father for everything I need. I have given up the conflicts of this life for a home where pleasures never die. Let us be good, hoping, praying, trusting, in God for all we need; and very soon we shall be where all things will be ours, and we will sit at Jesus' feet, and cast our crowns before him, and unite to sing the new song. Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus.

MARY E. STREETER.

RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

The following extract of a letter from Harriet Beecher Stowe, dated June, 1845, to her brother Thomas, will, we doubt not, be interesting to those of our readers who are desirous of abiding in Christ.—Friend of Virtue.

"For some three or four years past, there has been in my mind a subdued under-current of perplexity and unhappiness in regard to myself in my religious experience. I have often thought, when sifting myself, why am I thus restless? why not at peace? I love God and Jesus Christ with a deep and real devotion; nay, at times I am overwhelmed, pierced to the very soul with the perfect beauty and sweetness of the divine One, and in general I trust in him, in general I mean to conform my life to him. I am as consistent as many christians, more so than some; then why not satisfied? Ah! I thought to myself, still I am not satisfied. Though I live, perhaps, what might be in christian courtesy called a religious life, still there is something wrong. I can conceive of a style of christian devotion as much higher than my present point, as my present position is above that of the world. The sudden death of George, shook my whole soul like an earthquake; and as in an earthquake we know not where the ground may open next, so I felt an indistinct terror as if father, brothers, husband, any or all, might be just about to sink. Such unexpected, stunning agonies show us heart-secrets before undreamed of. I had written and spoken of Christ, the immovable and ever-present portion, and while I was writing my heart exulted; yet, when I had done writing, all went down, as a fire burns itself out, and I returned to grief and tears. Ah! said I to myself, is my soul fully on God, to be so shaken? I saw that my trust was partial, superficial, and that was one more element of self-discontent.

The winter after, care and anxiety came upon me, and I often, day and night, was haunted and pursued by care that seemed to drink my life-blood. A feeble, sickly child—a passionate, irritable nurse, with whom I feared to leave it, from whom I feared to withdraw it—slowly withering in my arms, and yet I exerting my utmost care for it in vain—harassed, anxious, I oftened wondered why God would press my soul, longing for re-union, with a weight of cares that seemed to hold it prostrate on the earth. I felt alone, unsupported, and He whom in former times I had found very present, seemed to leave me entirely. Often, thoughts like this would flash upon me: 'How much of your anxieties are caused by apprehensive fears of what this, that, and the other will think and say of you? how much by having separate purposes and plans which have no reference to Christ's will, and here and there cross it?' In short, I often saw, as by a dart of sunlight, than an entire identity of my will with God's, would remove all disquiet, and give joy even to suffering, as says Paul, 'Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing.'

Oh, how I have groaned in spirit, and longed and prayed for it; but the more I strove and prayed, the more inveterate and determined, and unsubdued seemed every opposing desire. The sensitive fear of blame, the ever-living, self-conscious desire of proving to myself and others that I was right, I perceived to be stronger and more efficient in me than the love of Christ, the fear of his opinion, and the desire to do his will.

Am I then a christian? thought I. Since I have always heard that the balance or preponderance of the soul decides the character, certainly I have more thoughts of myself separate from Christ and his will, more anxieties that relate not to his plans, more agitations and distresses, in short, that are the fruit of my own separate will, than all that I feel for him, his will, his cause altogether. Then it must be that I am not a christian. But, then, why do I—why have I loved Christ—loved him so deeply as I know I have, nay, as I know I do? I cannot tell. I think I love him above all, yet certainly my will is at best, only in a small degree subjected to his.

Well, then, I thought, if you see that entire union and identity of your will with Christ is the thing, why don't you have it? Just submit,—give up all these separate interests—unite your soul to him in a common interest—why not? Why not? ah! why not? Words of deep meaning to any one who tries that vain experiment! Every effort breaks like a wave upon a rock. We reason, reflect, resolve, and pray—weep, strive, love,—love to despair, and all in vain. In all I adjured my soul, 'Do you not love Christ? why not, then, cut wholly loose from all these loves, and take his will alone? Is it not reasonable, since you can be blessed in no other way? What else can you do?' Yet, for the same reason that the lost cling to a bitterer, more unmitigated anguish, when they know what might make them at peace, so did I. I reasoned with myself, circumstances are against me; this pressure of outward care stands in my way; God must remove this.

Well, the summer after, I spent some months with Henry, and was, of course, free from all pressure, and I thought now is the time; but now my soul seemed all to collapse; the impetuous sense of want receded, and only a complaining, dissatisfied undertone remained. On my return this winter, again the wave of dissatisfaction rose. 'Still there! Oh, dissatisfied heart,' said I to myself, 'why wilt thou never rest?' Something said to me, 'You are a christian, perhaps, but not a full one.' 'Learn of me,' said Christ, 'ye shall find rest.' I do not find rest, consequently I do not learn of him. I perceived that the New Testament ideal of a christian was different from and higher than what I even tried or purposed to be; that I was only trying at parts, and allowedly in some things living below. Nor did it comfort me at all to think that other christians did so, and even good ones, too.

The question was distinctly proposed to me, 'Will you undertake, and make a solemn and earnest effort to realize, the full ideal of Christ's plan, though not one other christian should?' The obstacles were many. 'Twill do no good to try. With a lower standard have I striven, wept, prayed, despaired, in vain, and shall I undertake this? I shall never do it. But how I prayed that by some vision, some sudden and mighty influence, God would bring me up to this conceived, but not ever felt state! I felt, 'If there is a fact I know not, a truth I never saw—if there is an emotion that the Holy Spirit has never breathed into action in my soul,—if there is a motive unfelt that should bring me to Christ, oh, let me know it!' This was the burden of my prayers; and my discouragement was, 'How can I see God clearer than I have seen him? Can I ever be searched, and penetrated and bowed by a deeper love than I have been, and which yet has been but transient—has never wholly subdued me? Can I make deeper, sincerer resolutions? No. What then?

I thought of this passage: 'I will love him, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him.' This is it, I thought; Christ has been with me by visits and intervals; this permanent abode is what I have not known. Again: 'Abide in me, and I in you'—a steady, ever-present Christ within, who should exert an influence steady as the pulse of my soul; this I needed. I copied that class of texts—I prayed with prayer unceasing, that Christ would realize them—I despaired of bending my will—I despaired of all former and all present efforts; but at His word I resolved to begin, and go for the whole. As James and John: 'He said unto them, launch out now, and let down the net. They say unto him, Master, we have toiled all night and have taken nothing; nevertheless, at thy word, we will let down the net; and lo! the net brake with the multitude of fishes.'

What was the result? When self-despair was final, and I merely undertook at the word of Christ, then came the long expected and wished help. All changed. Whereas once my heart ran with a strong current to the world, now it runs with a current the other way. The will of Christ seems to me the steady pulse of my being. I am calm, but full—every where and in all things instructed, and I find I can do all things through Christ. Now, if this is a dream, it answers the purpose entirely, and I shall never wake till I awake 'in His likeness.'"

For the World's Crisis.

ARE THE CHILDREN OF ANY CONSEQUENCE?

This question may seem to be an absurd one. "Just as though any one would or could doubt the 'consequence' of the children," says brother A.; "why ask such a question?" For this simple reason, that I want it answered,—practically, not verbally, nor theoretically,—but practically. Bro. A. may be deeply interested in the little ones, and be doing all he can to get them saved; but all others are not; many others are not. And some of them profess to believe that the Lord is soon coming; and yet they say, practically, "The children are of but little consequence." They say so in this way: they go to meeting and hear a sermon Sunday morning, perhaps talk after the sermon is over, and then go straight home and remain there until afternoon meeting; and then go and have a good time again.

"Well, isn't that all right?" asks Bro. B. Yes, all but the going straight home from the meeting as soon as it is done. Those who profess to love God, and are not interested to have the children well cared for, make a grand mistake. The children are exposed to error and temptation as well as older people. They have often a keen appreciation of the truth; and, having no errors of creed or prejudice of education to overcome, they readily perceive the truth, and hold it with simple faith. And yet they are neglected; and many who profess to love God must bear the blame of that neglect.

Sometimes a brother makes an effort to have a Sabbath School. He appoints the hour at the close of the meeting at noon for the school to convene; but, though the people know that something has been said about a school, they stand and talk, and seem to think it is of no use to try to have a school. There is not much interest in the matter. They belong to a class who think that, as they are, so are all others. So there is no interest, they think, because they are not interested. There is no determination to be interested in the children, and no fixed plan to interest them. Some stay, after awhile, to see what is being done, but are not particularly interested to do anything themselves. Their children may go, if they want to, though they don't see the need of trying to do anything for them,—it is so near the time of the Lord's coming! That is the point.

Suppose all who have believed in these truths for the last twenty years had been thus unfaithful—and some have—where would all the children be to-day! Some out in the world, wandering about, careless of their eternal interests; and others at home, perhaps, following the fashions of the world, and loving its pleasures. This might be so, after any effort to teach them, and lead them to Christ; but it will be so if there is no effort. The children are of great consequence; and it is necessary, if the Lord is coming even this year, 1866, to do what can be done to teach them to love his appearing. Why, children will as gladly cry now, "Blessed is be that cometh in the name of the Lord!" as they did when Jesus rode into Jerusalem; and, while the Bridegroom tarries, by our neglect of them, and their wilful neglect of salvation, they are in just as much danger now as then, if not in greater danger, of becoming candidates for the second death.

In the churches about as the largest number of conversions is from the Sabbath School. Why not, with us, everywhere, have the Sabbath School interest as prominent as the interest in preaching? It is, in some places; why not in all? I had rather go without dinner every Lord's day, than to see the children neglected, and no Sunday school.

There is a waking up in this matter; but there is not half interest enough. The "Young Pilgrim" ought to have double the circulation it now has; and there should be a real system in the matter of Sabbath schools. There ought to be a Sabbath School Society, with a Treasurer and Secretary. All the schools should have the same officers, and each school should be reported quarterly, and efforts made to increase the interest.

Let the brethren and sisters take hold of this matter. The Lord is coming, and what we do must be done quickly. The children are of consequence. Christians and infidels are made out of children. Saints and sinners are made out of children. Come, take hold of the matter, and see if you cannot do something in your place. No matter if there are but a few children among you. Make up the number from yourselves. Have a Bible class. Do something, and, when the preacher comes around, don't let him think he can get off home to dinner, and hardly stop to think whether there is such a thing in the world as a Sabbath School. Make him take hold with you, and talk to the children, and interest them. I had much rather take them and try to save them when young, than let them get old in sin and hardened, and then try. Come, parents, preachers, all; come, take hold of the work in earnest.

WIDE AWAKE FOLKS.

Are you, readers, old folks and young folks, little folks and great folks, on lightning's wing for good things, merciful and gracious,—salvation's bright morning glory? Christ was; so was Paul, Peter, James and John; so was Wesley, Whitfield, Bunyan, Baxter, Payson.

> "Labor with what zeal we will,
> Something still remains undone;
> Something uncompleted still
> Waits the rising of the sun."

Are you wide awake? active, industrious, persevering? diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord? constantly engaged in something useful and profitable? Something that will be beneficial to yourselves and community? You know it is said, that "an idle pate is the devil's work shop." Solomon tells us that "the desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labor."

Rest assured, little folks and great folks, that idleness is not only dishonorable, but dangerous; it eateth as doth a canker. "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do."

The idle man is an annoyance, a nuisance. He is of no benefit to anybody. He is an intruder into the thoroughfare of every day life. He stands in our path, and we push him contemptuously aside. He is of no advantage to any body. He annoys busy men. He makes them unhappy. He is a blot in society. He may have an income to support him in idleness, or he may "sponge" on his good natured friends. But in either case he is despised.

Young man, young woman, do something in this busy, bustling, wide-awake world. Move about for the benefit of mankind, if not for yourself. Do not be idle. God's law is, that by the sweat of our brow we shall earn our bread. That law is a good one, and the bread we earn is sweet. Do not be idle. Minutes are two precious to be squandered thoughtlessly. Every man and every woman, however exalted, or however humble, can do good in this short life, if so inclined; therefore do not be idle. "Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbor's house; lest he be weary of thee and so hate thee." As ye sow, so shall ye reap.

> "Scatter we must, and scatter we will,
> Strewing it broadcast all the day long,
> Down through the valley, or over the hill,
> The seeds of right, or the seeds of wrong."

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

At this time, I bring to the attention of the readers of the Crisis a class of persons who "stay" in the highways and hedges, who are called "Bummers." Bummers are men and women, both colored and white; but chiefly white, who have no fixed place of abode. They spend the greater part of their time in "riotings and drunkenness." Three Sundays ago I saw fourteen of them lying upon the sidewalk at the corner of Seventh and Bedford Streets, in a beastly state of intoxication. Sometimes the groggeries which they patronize will grant, or have in days gone by granted them a night's lodging, for a few cents. A bench, or the floor, serves for their bed and bedding. In these groggeries, I have seen from fifteen to thirty persons thus piled away. It would not be specially edifying to enter into details of their appearance, etc. I send with this article a portion of an article from the "Philadelphia Press," of July 22d., as a witness to the truth of what I have written at various times concerning sights among the lowly; or more properly, one class of them. It may be of interest to some of my friends to learn that I am personally acquainted with, and have the confidence of quite a number of Bummers. The law claims them as vagrants. Large numbers of them have been arrested, and imprisoned for a few days. The house from which I took Maria has been a favorite rendevous with them. I could write much about this class, but withhold at present, for the purpose of having the following article added. The italics are mine.

"The grand place of resort for the vagrants is in the Fourth and Fifth wards—along Shippen, Seventh, Baker, and other streets, and the various little alleys that lead from them in all directions. Those who have given attention to the subject, have noticed that persons who have been sent to the county prison for petty misdemeanors, seldom go north of South street after the fourth or fifth visit to that institution. There is an inexplicable fascination about the purlieus of Shippen and Seventh streets that retains them until they fall into the hands of the coroner, and are deposited in Potter's Field. In many instances men and women of refinement and education are found in these dens of iniquity. As society is constituted, it is not surprising that women should be found there, for one step from the path of virtue leads them slowly down, until the most infamous places receive them as habitues. A witness in the criminal court not long since testified that an English bred physician boarded with him at Seventh and St. Mary streets, and this occasioned a laugh in the court-room. We did not doubt that such was the case, for at the time of the last robbery of Mr. Wright's house, in South Ninth street, a Scotchman was arrested on suspicion, and taken from Spafford street, where he led a life of degradation. Notwithstanding the sad ravages that poisonous liquor had made, and the filthy rags that covered his person, he possessed a collegiate education, and had a diploma from one of the first medical colleges in Great Britian, and could not explain why the degraded life in Spafford street had fascinated him, nor could he be prevailed upon to leave it and endeavor to reform, although strong inducements were held out to him. The police gather up the vagrants in these localities once a week, so that the Sabbath may be passed without the hideousness witnessed during the other days of the week. On Monday they are at large again, and the vile groggeries that infest the locality are busy plying them with poisonous liquid at a few pennies per glass, for a drink in these places means as much as a tumbler will hold. They are fortunately not very large, but sufficient for all purposes. It might be supposed that glass tumblers would not be used, but as a matter of sheer necessity they are, for the liquor sold would burn out a tin-cup in a few hours. The scenes presented in these regions are too horrible and gross for description. Many of the police, who are to some extent accustomed to them, are often sickened at exhibitions they behold when they are compelled to enter the dens where these vagrants herd together at night. It is not alone adults who infest these terrible resorts, but children of tender years are reared in them, some of whom first saw the light of day in prison, and unless some marked change takes place they will spend the greater portion of their miserable lives in their natal place."

To such persons, we dare not give clothing or money, and in some cases we dare not give food. Some will sell clothing and food as fast as they get [illegible], in order to gratify their cravings for liquor. Though there are many charitable institutions in this city, yet there is still room for extensive operations. If I had the means, I could gather together at this hour two hundred children, both colored and white, who are surrounded by all kinds of degradation.

The cholera has made its appearance in our mission field, as the following quotation from the "Philadelphia Ledger" of this morning will show:—"Nine cases of Asiatic Cholera were reported to the Board of Health yesterday; three of them in the vicinity of Fifth and Lombard Sts. The Board passed a resolution yesterday, declaring that the Cholera had made its appearance; and a daily bulletin will be issued giving the number of cases reported, deaths, etc."

Last week there were ten deaths in this city from this dreadful plague. We mean by the help of the Lord to stand at our post. If we die, we will die there; but we expect that the same Lord who preserved our lives when the plague was carrying off hundreds, winter before last, will preserve us this season also. We shall use every precaution, and then go forth trusting in the Lord. Pray for us.

We have just received $2.00 from "a friend" in Worcester, for which we thank him and the Lord. Yours, etc., waiting for redemption,

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

LETTER FROM ANNA.

ELDER GRANT:—You wished to hear from the "Try Company." Three or four years ago I joined it, and have not broken the pledge. I am ten years old. There were others here who joined it with me. I do not know whether they have kept it. Mother says I shall be more healthy and happy; and, if I try to be a good girl, the Savior will help me, and give me a glorious prize when he comes. So I am trying to keep my pledge and be good, that I may obtain the prize, for I want to live with him in that beautiful home forever. I hope I shall see all the "Try Company" there, and Elder Grant too.

ANNA'S LETTER.—Dear children, you will all be pleased with Anna's letter. It did the heart of your Editor good to read it. Come, let us hear from more of the TRY COMPANY. Please read over the PLEDGE again, and then make a new resolve never to break it. How true it is what Anna's mother said. You will "be more healthy and happy." We think Jesus will come soon. Try to be good, so that when he comes, you will be glad to see him.

PICTURE OF PRAYING SAMUEL.

About fifty years ago, one winter afternoon, when the snow lay deep upon the earth, as the sun was setting, and the woodcutters were all returning from their work in the Thuringian Forest of Germany, a little boy, only four years old, stole out of his mother's cottage, and started towards the woods to meet his father.

It was a very cold evening, and Benjamin was only clad in a thick flannel shirt; but the stout, bear headed little fellow did not think anything about the cold, as he went wading through the snow, intent on finding his father.

Presently he was met by some of the woodcutters, who told him his father was probably home already, and much against his will they took the little runaway back to his mother.

His father had not come; so she sat him down, and gave him a book of Bible Stories, with pictures, to amuse him, and went about her work. But while she was engaged, he stole out into the snow again. She called and called, but he was not to be seen or heard. She grew very anxious; but, hoping his father would see him, and bring him, she waited. The father came soon, but had not seen the boy.

Then the whole village was roused. It was growing dark fast, and very cold, and the little curly-headed, red-checked, half-naked boy, would freeze to death if they did not find him soon. Kind neighbors took their lanterns and went in all directions into the dark forest to search for him. His poor, anxious mother, grasping her older boy by the hand, rushed ahead of all, crying and shouting at the top of her voice. But at midnight, when they all met, no trace of him had been discovered. "If he only had on his hobnail shoes," cried his brother, "how easily we could track him in the snow." "Or his new Christmas pants," replied the mother; "my darling will freeze to death this dreadful cold night."

The men were all shivering with cold, but they could not forsake the agonized mother, who was running over the snow, shouting till she was hoarse. But just as they were starting anew for the hunt, his brother cried out, "There he is, lying dead!"

His mother rushed to the spot, and threw herself upon the little figure that was lying quietly curled up in a gully in the snow. Quickly turning over, the little fellow opened his eyes and looked with great wonderment on so many men with their lanterns, and then began to joyfully embrace his mother.

"Why Benjamin, where have you been?" "How came you here?" they all commenced asking him.

Then the little wanderer told his story. He went to meet father, and kept calling him, but he could not find him. At last he grew cold, and thought he would go home; but he could not find his way, and so he sat down and cried bitterly. Then he remembered about the Samuel he had seen kneeling in the book his mother showed him, and he thought he would do just like it; so he got down on his knees in the snow, and asked God to take care of him; till his mother came and found him. And then he crawled into the gully where the wind did not blow, and fell asleep.

And here he was all safe. God had heard the little prayer, and kept him from freezing to death till his mother came and waked him up.

It is very sad to be lost. I have heard of men lost in a prairie at night; of sailors lost on the wide ocean, far away from any vessel; of travelers lost on vast sandy deserts; of children lost in the midst of a crowded city, and of one who was lost in the catacombs of Rome, those vast burying places which extend many miles underneath the ground, filled with tombs. But a lost soul, wandering upon the dark mountains of sin, far away from its Father's house, is the saddest of all things. Yet, with a love, tenderer than that mother felt for little Benjamin, does Jesus go out seeking such to bring them home. One lost lamb is more precious to him than all the saved ones in his fold.

BLACK MOLLIE'S ANSWER.

Mollie was a little black girl, about eight years old, who lived in the family of our neighbor, Mr. Reeves. She seemed to be a child of rather uncommon abilities, and her quaint and decided remarks were often such as to give cause for earnest and deep reflection on the part of her hearers.

Mr. R's. oldest son, George, was very fond of plying Mollie with questions; and pretending to hold different opinions from hers. He would spend a long time in arguing to convince her that something she had said or done was not just right, but it must be confessed that he very seldom came off victorious; Mollie had such a quiet, but withal, decided way of putting things, that there was no gainsaying her.

One day George was lying on the lounge in the dining-room, watching the movements of Mollie, who was laying the table for supper. Presently he accosted her with the inquiry:

"Mollie, do you ever pray?"

She started with a surprised air, as she replied, "Yes, sir, every night."

"Do you suppose God hears you?"

"Yes, I know he does."

"Well, do you think he hears your prayers as quickly as he does those of white children?"

For full three minutes the child continued her work without speaking, then, stopping in front of the lounge, she slowly remarked,

"Mr. George, I pray into God's ears, and not his eyes; I reckon my voice is just like any other little girl's; and, if I say what I ought to, God doesn't stop to think anything about my skin.

That was enough for George; he soon afterwards left the room, and has never since taken the trouble to make any further inquiries into Mollie's opinions.

Will it be at all amiss for us to remember the curious but significant idea, that we ought to pray into God's ears and not into his eyes?—Sunday School Times.

NELLIE'S PRAYER.

Do any of you children think that you are too small or too young to lead people to the Savior? I do not think that any of you who will read this can be much smaller or younger than some little girls I knew of, who, not many years ago, lived in a small village where there was only one doctor, an old man, who had had the care of all of them, when sick, ever since they were babies. But this kind old man did not love Jesus; and one of these little girls, named Nellie Gray, was very much troubled about it.

At last, her mother said to her, "Why, Nellie, you must pray for the doctor."

It was a bright thought to the child; and, in following it out, she induced a few of her little playmates to go with her each day to a secluded place to pray for her aged friend. It was not far from the traveled way, but so thickly overgrown, that no passer-by could look into it.

Not many days after, the doctor was passing, and hearing the sound of childish voices, paused just in time to hear Nellie say, "O God! have mercy on Dr. K——, and give him a new heart."

"Is it so," said the doctor to himself, "that even the little children are praying for me? I don't mind the talk of the old folks, but I can't stand this."

He went home, but found no rest until he gave his heart to the Savior. Then he went to Nellie, and, with tears in his eyes, thanked God that he had put it into her heart to pray for an old man.—Child at Home.

WHEN OUGHT WE?

One day a lady was teaching a class of little girls in a Sunday School. She was talking to them about love to God. "My dear children," she said, "how soon may we give our hearts to God, and become true christians?" They did'nt answer at first. Then she spoke to them one by one. Turning to the oldest scholar in the class, she asked, "What do you say, Mary?"

"When we are thirteen."

"What do you say, Jane?"

"When we are ten."

"What do you say, Susan?"

"When we are six."

At last she came to little Lillie, the youngest scholar in the class.

"Well, Lillie," she said, "and how soon do you think we may give our hearts to God?"

"Just as soon as we feel that we are sinners, and know who God is?" said Lillie.

How beautiful an answer that was! and how true! Yes, "as soon as you feel that you are a sinner, and know who God is," you may give him your heart, and become a christian.

DON'T GIVE UP.

One day last winter we heard of a little boy who put on a pair of skates for the first time, and, as usual in such cases, his feet went faster than his head, and he fell.

His elder brother, who was skating with him, on seeing him fall and hurt himself, advised him to give it up.

"No, I shall not give it up," replied the little fellow; I can learn to skate, and I will learn."

And at it he went again, with an energy and determination that bade defiance to all apparent difficulties, and he did learn to skate.

There, thought we, is the boy who will succeed in the world. There, my young friends, is a noble lesson for you. Don't give up, but rather say, "I can, and I will." If you have a long lesson to learn, "don't give up." If you are requested to write a composition, "don't give up."

If you have any thing to do, "don't give up," but let your motto ever be, "I can, and I will."

LOVE FOR MOTHER AND JESUS.

A little boy once had a canary bird which he loved very much. His mother was taken ill, and the singing of the pretty bird gave her great annoyance in her weakness. The boy was told by the mother that his little bird gave her pain by its singing. He went at once and gave the bird away to his cousin, and then came home and told his mother that the canary would not disturb her any more, for he had given it to his cousin.

"But did you not love it very much?" said the mother to him; "how could you part with it?"

"It is true I loved the bird, mother," he replied, "but I love you much more. I could not really love any thing that gave you pain."

Now you must love God as this little boy loved his mother, more than you love anything else; and also everything that grieves him you must give up, however much you may like it.

"You love me," said a mother to her little child as he leaned over her in bed, "don't you?" "Yes," said the half-sleeping child, "but I love God much more."

So we are to love parents, brothers, sisters, friends, and everything that God has made; but we must love him much more, supremely—with all our hearts.

ONE WAY TO DO GOOD.

Emma Gray, on her way to school, passed a little boy whose hand was through the railing of a gentleman's front yard, trying to pick off a beautiful spring flower.

"O, little boy," said Emma, kindly, "are you not taking that without leave?"

"Nobody sees me," answered the little boy, looking up.

"Somebody sees you from the blue sky, little boy," said Emma. "God says we must not take what does not belong to us without leave, and you will grieve him if you do so."

The little boy looked up into her face as she spoke. "Shall I?" said he; "then I won't."

He drew back his hand, and went away. Was it not thoughtful and kind in Emma? I think so.

One way of doing good is to prevent others from doing wrong. A gentle word of reproof or persuasion would save many a one from sin.

WHAT IS THE TONGUE FOR?

God made the tongue; and, since he never makes anything in vain, we may be sure he made this for some good purpose. "What is it, then?" asked a teacher one day of her class.

"He made it that we may pray with it," answered one boy.

"To sing with," said another.

"To talk to people with," said a third.

"To recite our lessons with," replied another.

"Yes; and I will tell you what he did not make it for. He did not make it for us to scold with, to lie with, or to swear with. He did not mean that we should say unkind, or foolish, or indecent, or impatient words with it. Now, boys, think, every time you use your tongues, if you are using them in the way God means you to. Do good with your tongues, and not evil. It is one of the most useful members of the whole body, although it is so small. Please God with it every day."

BE KIND.

Several years ago, when I was attending a school at Hartford, Ct., there were two young lads, members of the school, of opposite characters. One was remarkably amiable, and distinguished for his mild and kind disposition, the other delighted in teasing, insulting and abusing him.

The young man endured all this abuse with patience and meekness, and the next day, after the other had spit in his face, he purchased some oranges, and gave one of the best of them to his persecutor, when, in an instant, his face was crimsoned with shame and mortification. After that, he was never known to treat this young man, or any others unkindly; and from being the most quarrelsome, he became one of the most peaceable members of the school.

WHO WAS RIGHT?

James was a happy, playful, noisy boy. He delighted in that kind of sport which made the most stir, and resulted in some kind of demonstration. One day his mother lost all her patience, and cried out: "James, stop your noise, and sit down quietly for the next hour, or I will punish you."

"Why, mother," said he, "I can't keep still. I'd burst right open, I know I would, if I could'nt run and laugh, and get the noise out of me."

Be patient, good parents, and if you are blessed with boys that have a good deal of noise in them, let it come out. Such are the boys that will make a stir in the world, if you give them a chance.

HUMILITY.

A farmer went with his son into a wheat-field to see if it was ready for the harvest.

"See, father!" exclaimed the boy: "how straight these stems hold up their heads! They must be the best ones. Those that hang their heads down, I am sure, are not good for much."

The father plucked a stalk of each kind, and said, "See here, foolish child! This stalk, that stood so straight and high, is light-headed, and almost good for nothing; while this, that hung its head so modestly, is full of the most beautiful grain."

A QUESTION.

"We are so happy, we don't say bad words any more; and we know that God is with us all the time," said a little boy in heathen lands.

Can you, my little boy in your christian home, say as much? Are you happy, because you "don't say bad words any more"? And does the thought that God is with you "all the time," watching you, and seeing all you do, give you pleasure? If not, I sadly fear the little Hindoo boy will rise up in judgment and condemn you.

For the World's Crisis.

O, WHEN SHALL I REACH MY HOME?

I'm a wanderer now, no home have I,
No cottage to call my own;
I've wandered long, and am weary oft,
O, when shall I reach my home.

I'm trying to walk in the narrow way,
The path my Savior trod;
The way that leads to the saints' abode,
The beautiful city of God.

But the way looks long, the night is dark,
And clouds my path o'ershadow;
And friends oft chide, and foes deride,
And an enemy's lurking ever.

But I'll travel on, a pilgrim still,
For my Savior's near me ever;
I'll try and conquer all my foes,
And dwell with him forever.

I'll face the storm, I'll stem the tide,
I'll gird the armor round me;
I'll calmly wait till the Master comes,
With the mansion he's prepared me.

We'll not wait long for the promised rest,
Dear pilgrim sister, brother;
"A little while," and "He'll come again,"
Our darling Elder Brother.

BRIEF THOUGHTS

On the Nature of the Soul, Resurrection of the Dead, and the Final Destiny of Man.

From the Scriptures alone can we obtain satisfactory information concerning the nature of the soul. Reason may lead to conjecture, but reason alone cannot give us confidence. The wise men of antiquity have reasoned without the light of Revelation, and remained in unhappy uncertainty. We are shut up to seek light from the Scriptures, shining in a dark place. The first question that presents itself to our mind will be, Is the soul of man a conscious and intelligent existence, when separated from the body, immortal in its nature, and destined to exist forever? My object in the brief thoughts on this subject will not be to examine all the isolated passages which appear to present objections to the views I shall offer on this question; but to inquire what is the current testimony of Scripture; and this, not so much to present all the evidence from the Scriptures that goes to support my views on the subject, as to suggest trains of thought for others, as to what is truth on this subject.

1. I should not think the soul of man an immortal, conscious, and intelligent existence, separate from the body, from the silence of the Scriptures on the subject. The Scriptures speak of the nature of man as plainly as they do of the nature of God; of his mortality, depravity, his perishing condition by nature, yet in this volume, written by prophets and apostles, recording the teachings of Christ, their own teaching and preaching to men of all classes and conditions—yet in all this volume composed by so many writers, under so many different circumstances, and discussing so many subjects, the soul's immortality is never stated as a fact plainly and explicitly, nor the subject discussed. This appears the more strange, supposing the writers to have believed the doctrine, from the fact that religious teachers in our day, who believe the doctrine, often discuss the subject; speak of the soul's immortality in most of their sermons and exhortations, so that no one who hears them, or reads their writings, is in the least doubt as to their real sentiments on the subject.

2. I should not infer the doctrine of the soul's immortality from the terms used in the Scriptures in speaking of it. I shall examine but a few of the most prominent passages on this point, and refer the reader to "Bush on the Soul" for a full examination of this class of passages. The first mention of the soul is, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul," or a living creature.

There is no intimation that what God breathed into man had an intelligent, and conscious existence previous to its entrance into the body, or that it became such after its entrance into the body.

But its entrance into the body made man a rational, and intelligent creature. The Scriptures call it the spirit, the life. By whatever name it is called, it is evidently nothing more nor less that the principle of life, which, before it entered the body, had no conscious and intelligent existence; and after it leaves the body has no conscious and intelligent existence; but, united, makes a rational and accountable being. This is what Paul tells the Athenians, "seeing he giveth to all life and breath;" and what Jesus refers to when he says, "but are not able to kill the soul;" and what Solomon designates when he says, "the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." The breath of life, or the principle of life, that gift of God to man, returns to God who gave it; not as a rational and intelligent existence, but as the principle of life merely. Man cannot destroy it. As Paul says, "your life is hid with Christ in God." "When Christ who is our life shall appear," though our enemies kill this body, yet our life shall not be lost, but shall be restored to the body in its incorruptible state—"and then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—"He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he who loseth his life for my sake shall find it." Though they kill your body, the principle of life shall return to God who gave it. And he shall restore it again, though apparently lost, to your incorruptible body; and thus shall you keep it unto life eternal. "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" The question does not speak of the happiness of the soul, but of the soul itself, as a thing that may be lost, or bartered away. The previous verse calls it life; they mean the same thing. If the soul of man was immortal by nature, it could not be lost or exchanged for something less valuable.

3. From the punishment threatened to the ungodly, I should not infer its immortality, but its destruction and extinction. The first penalty held up to Adam previous to the fall was, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This curse was after the fall explained to Adam: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." The prospect held before Adam was that he should go back to the dust from whence he was taken, and God would take back the principle of life he had conditionally given to Adam. An extinction of being was the prospect before his mind. If Christ had not come as the resurrection and the life, there would have been no future existence for man. And until he was promised, there was no curse that reached beyond the grave. But there is a second death; and as there was an extinction of being in prospect before Adam, which was only prevented by Christ's coming as the resurrection and the life, the second death will be an entire extinction of being—a destruction for which there is no remedy, being a destruction of both soul and body in hell. The principle of life will be destroyed, and there can be no resurrection from the second death. "I have set before you life and death"—"the soul that sinneth it shall die." "For, behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed forever." David speaking by the Spirit, says, "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Bless thou the Lord, O my soul." "And gather his wheat into the garner, but will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Will the chaff remain burning yet unconsumed because it is burnt up with unquenchable fire?" "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." What doom is here threatened? In what does this final, eternal, and everlasting punishment consist? Let the apostle Paul speak: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Then where will the wicked be after their destruction? They must be out of God's universe, or out of existence. "Vessels of wrath fitted to destruction." "Gather ye together first the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them." When burnt do they become extinct? "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." Not his happiness only shall be destroyed, but himself. "Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly." Not only their happiness is to have an end, but they are to have an end.

The wicked will not rise with immortal bodies. Paul, referring to the resurrection, says, "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Here corruption and life everlasting are placed in contrast. Corruption is the opposite of immortality and incorruption. If the wicked are to reap corruption, they are not to be immortal nor incorruptible; "for corruption doth not inherit incorruption." All whose corruption puts on incorruption, and whose mortal puts on immortality, can sing, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

4. I should not suppose the soul to be immortal by nature, from the fact that eternal life, or immortality, is a conditional gift: both these terms express the same idea. God said of Adam in his fallen state, lest he "eat and live forever."

These terms when applied to the righteous, always imply an eternal existence of blessedness. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." "This is that bread which came down from heaven; he that eateth of this bread shall live forever." "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Immortality is a thing to be sought for. This does not appear as though all were possessed of it. "And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." If men by nature are immortal, will not those who do not God's will abide forever, or remain forever? "Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Immortality and life are brought to life, and no immortality but one of life. Death and immortality are nowhere brought to light through the gospel.

5. The future existence of man is predicated on the resurrection of the dead, and not on the immortality of the soul. Christ says, "That I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." "That every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." "No man can come to me except the Father which sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day."

Paul says, "of the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question." "Because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead." The final judgment is here made to depend on the resurrection of the dead. "And have hope toward God. . . . that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." The resurrection is the apostle's ground of hope. "If Christ be not raised, ... then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." "If the dead rise not, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." The apostle here makes the resurrection of the dead the ground of hope for future existence. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others who have no hope." Why, because the soul is immortal? "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "And the dead in Christ shall rise first." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth." "Their works shall follow them."

This passage is not general in its application. The words "from henceforth" limit it to the specified time. "For the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth: they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

I should suppose from such language that this was the opening scene of rewards and punishments. Of a similar character is all the language describing the resurrection and final judgment, "So shall it be at the end of the world, the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just." Who would suppose, from such language, that the mass of them had been separated previously? So in the parable of the sheep and goats: then shall he separate them and shall say, "Come ye blessed," and "Depart ye cursed." This certainly looks like the first and final separation: the opening scene of rewards and punishments. When the Son of man shall come in the glory of the Father, THEN shall he reward every man according to his works. This confirms the previous inference of no reward till the coming of the Son of Man.

In Christ's interview with Mary and Martha, he did not attempt to comfort them as many would in our day, by describing the rapturous joys of a soul in heaven. No intimation of this kind was made. For with all their regrets at losing their brother, we cannot suppose they would consent to have him called from such scenes to the sorrows of earth again. But Christ comforted them by saying: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live again." Martha says, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day" "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." We are not to see Christ as he is till his second appearing. "When Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." We shall shall not appear with him in glory until his second appearing. And not only they, but "we ourselves, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." We have the spirit of adoption whereby we cry, Abba, Father. But the adoption itself does not take place till the body is redeemed. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." We are to be judged only for the deeds done in the body. Yet if the souls of wicked men possess a conscious and intelligent existence, some of them have been sinning for thousands of years.

If the foregoing thoughts are correct the redeemed will owe to the Lord Jesus Christ, not only their eternal felicity, but their eternal existence also. "For the wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

"It cost him death to save our lives;
To buy our souls, it cost his own;
And all the unknown joys he gives,
Were bought with agonies unknown."

"But man dieth and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more they shall not wake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Job 14: 10–12.

"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4.

"Men and brethren, let me speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us to this day. For David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 29–34.—Author Unknown.

Short Prayers.—There were but three words in the petition which Peter gasped out, but they were sufficient for his purpose; they reached the ear of Jesus, and his heart too. Not length, but strength, is desirable. A sense of need is a mighty teacher of brevity. Verbiage is to devotion as chaff to the wheat. Precious things lie in compass, and all that is real in prayer in many a long address might have been uttered in a sentence as short as that which burst from the soul of the sinking apostle.

THE BORROWED JEWELS.

I love to study the old types. There is something rich in following them out and discovering their antitypes. I presume I make some wrong applications, but it does me good to apply some of them right down here, to our circumstances and times. It strengthens and encourages me to still travel on through this wilderness toward the better land.

I was thinking a short time ago, what could be implied in the strange command given to the children of Israel, when about to leave Egypt,—"Let every man borrow of his neighbor, and every woman of her neighbor, jewels of silver and jewels of gold." We read that they did so, "and they spoiled the Egyptians." Was not that a strange command for God to give his people? Well, I have an appetite for every thing which can be made to sustain us in this time of darkness and famine, and am anxious to draw nourishment even from that circumstance. So I mused in this way:

There is a meaning to all of God's commandments, and there must be to this. It seems that among the dross and rubbish of Egypt, there was some good silver and gold; and the Lord wanted the Israelites to take that with them on their journey to the promised land. He said nothing about the onions, the garlic and leeks; these were to be left behind. He did not tell them to take with them some of the sorcerers, the soothsayers, and the Spirit-mediums; no, no; they were not wanted in the congregation of God's people. But the pure gold was wanted, and for an especial purpose. It was wanted to adorn the tabernacle which was to be built in the wilderness for a habitation for the Lord, and was to go with them in all their wanderings, and be placed at last in the temple at Jerusalem, in the land of promise. When the sons of Jacob settled in the land of Goshen, the Egyptians were quite a respectable people. They were acquainted with Joseph, and probably knew something about Joseph's God, and his promise to the seed of Abraham. But after a time, darkness crept in upon them. Sorcery, necromancy, and evil spirits took possession of the nation. Another king arose which knew not Joseph, or Joseph's God, or anything about the promises made to Abraham. His gods were probably the miracle-working demons. Then came a dark day to God's people. Most likely they kept aloof from the Egyptians, and refused to join in their blasphemous foolery, and thus brought down the wrath of the rulers. Heavy burdens were put upon them, grievous to be borne. They were required to make brick, but not allowed materials to make them. They were despised, insulted and oppressed, until their lives were a burden. Living so long in the land of pagans, they too, perhaps, had lost sight of the promise made to their fathers, and had become infected with the old pagan lie, and thought that "death is the gate to endless joy." But God spake from the burning bush, and through Moses reminded them of his promise. When they learned that their inheritance was a land flowing with milk and honey,—a real Canaan, they wished to escape from bondage and task-masters and go to enjoy it. God promised to help them out, and sustain them by the way, and carry them through, if they would leave Egypt, with all its dross and rubbish, and trust entirely in him. But they must take the gold with them,—nothing was to be left worth going back after.

We will not follow the Israelites in their wanderings. We all know how they lusted after things that were left behind which were not gold; how they murmured and complained, and doubted the promises of God,—wished themselves back in Egypt, and accused Moses of bringing them out to die in the wilderness. So they murmured, until God, in his displeasure, took them at their word, and declared they should not see the land of promise; but should die in the wilderness, except Caleb and Joshua, who believed his word and insisted that they were well able to go up and possess the land.

Now for the application. We dwelt for a long time in the land of Egypt. The inhabitants of that land used to know about God and his promises. Our fathers, when they went there to find a home for a time, until a better one was prepared for their reception, carried with them the promise that they should finally, if obedient, possess a land fruitful and good,—a land of rest and peace, secure from all evil, and free from sorrow, pain and death,—a real land,—a literal dwelling-place,—an eternal home. Well, they were suffered to believe this for a while, and fix their faith and hopes on a solid foundation. And though they were sojourners, and tributaries to the powers that were; yet they toiled cheerfully in hope of a better life, and a glorious inheritance.

But there came a change. Other rulers arose "who knew not Joseph." They had pleased themselves with the children of strangers, and listened to the teaching of heathen philosophy and Pagan tradition, until they had become blinded and lost in a fog of error, and were themselves blind leaders of the blind. Then came a darkness which could be felt, for it brought with it a spiritual bondage. And then, unseen, in the darkness, came evil spirits, roaming through the gloom, breathing delusions and blasphemous doctrines in the ears of the people. And the darkness reached even to the people of God. They too, in a measure, lost sight of the inheritance. They were bewildered and stupefied by poisonous tradition, and their faith became mere fancy, and their hopes visionary and ethereal.

At length the voice of God was heard. He would not leave his people in this darkness without reminding them of the promise made to their fathers. He sent his servants to bring them out from the bondage and darkness of Egypt. Some heeded the call and were disposed to come out and seek freedom from an oppression that was too grievous to be borne. Our fathers were permitted to build upon a foundation, and have a reason for their hope; but we, their descendants, were required to have faith and hope without any foundation, and cast our anchor in the sky where there was nothing to hold it. Truly this was worse than making bricks without straw. But with all the dross and rubbish, there was some good gold: some precious truths that were not to be left behind. So we were permitted to borrow what truth they had, and go forth in search of more. All the truth is wanted, wherever it may be found, to adorn the tabernacle of the Most High—the church of the living God, his earthly dwelling place, which is to be placed in the house not made with hands, in the new Jerusalem. But oh! what a commotion there was in the camp of Pharaoh when it was known that we wished to follow and obey the word, even if it led us through the wilderness. But we escaped, thank the Lord! and started on our journey. And we have been sustained. We have had manna from heaven and water from the rock. We have had the cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night. We have had the presence of the Lord in the tabernacle, and his glory has shone around. Still we hear some complaining and finding fault. Brother, sister, what would you have? what do you desire? To be sure we are in the wilderness now, and there are trials by the way; but just yonder lie the green fields of Canaan and the rest that remaineth for the people of God. Would you go back? Ah! we have taken with us all the gold, and there is nothing worth going back after. And we have found some precious jewels by the way, better, far better than even the borrowed gold. The fruit of Egypt has certainly not improved any since we came out. Would you live on onions, and leeks, and garlic, after eating manna, drinking the wine of the kingdom, and partaking of the rich clusters of grapes brought by the Comforter from the promised land? Do you sigh for the flesh-pots, and waters which are turned to blood, after having a view of the tree of life and the crystal river? Can you desire the honors of Pharaoh's house, a Babylonish garment, and the wages of sin; when before you is a robe of righteousness, a crown of glory, and eternal life? No! you say; well, then, press onward.

"The land lies before you, 'tis pleasant to view;
Its fruits are inviting, they're offered to you."

The way may be a little rough at times; the storm may beat; but we have a hiding-place in Jesus the Rock of our salvation. Do not get impatient at a little delay, and say in despair you cannot go up and possess the goodly land; lest God become angry, and declare you shall die in the wilderness. Be like Caleb and Joshua. Stand firm on the promises of God, and say in his name, We are well able, we will go up. Do this; be faithful; and the rest, the glory, the kingdom, and eternal life shall be yours.

DIARY LEAVES.

FROM THE DIARY OF A CONVERTED INFIDEL.

"I will praise thee, O Lord, with all my heart." Why should I praise the Lord? Because "he brought me up out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock"—the rock Christ Jesus. Because he has drawn me from the midnight darkness of infidelity, and caused the light, the glorious light of the gospel, to shine within my heart, chasing away the doubt and gloom and fear that had heretofore reigned within me, filling my heart with peace and love and joy in the Holy Ghost. This is why I praise the Lord. This is why I love to speak of his goodness and his mercy unto me. This is why I keep humbly laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, putting my trust in him, and praying that I might be made the instrument of bringing one lost sheep into his fold.

When I look back upon the last fifteen years of my life, I see nothing but darkness and gloom,—not one ray of light to relieve the eye. All is mystery, darkness and death. I seem to have just awakened out of a fearful dream, with all its horrors deeply impressed upon the memory, without the power of describing them. O how soothing, how comforting to me, have been the words of our Savior, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I have labored in unbelief; I have been laden with the sins of omission and commission, but I thank thee, O Lord, that I have tasted of that rest, and know how sweet, how tranquil, how refreshing it is. Could I raise my voice loud enough to be heard by all those friends whom I have left bound up in the things of this world, I would cry unto them, "O taste and see that the Lord is good." His yoke is easy, and his burden is light.

Since I have sat me down at the feet of Jesus, "clothed and in" my "right mind," I have frequently tried to discover how I became an infidel. There always existed a sort of mystery about this period of my life, so that I never could thoroughly understand how I came to lose my faith. Now I see clearly. The dark cloud which so long hung over my mind has been removed, and I see that all my unbelief originated in my ignorance of the blessed word. Instead of drawing water from the fountain-head, I was content to drink from the ditch by the wayside. I confounded profession with belief. I looked at the outward conduct of professors, and drew my knowledge of christianity from this source, instead of going to the fountain-head of all truth. I observed the walk and conversation of professing christians, and found them so diametrically opposed to my preconceived notions of christian character, that, by a very gradual process, I came to the conclusion that the doctrine taught in the Bible had no influence over man's moral nature; consequently, could not be of divine origin.

How mistaken I have been; and I earnestly pray that through the grace of God I may be kept consistent in walk and conversation, as an humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. The inconsistency in the conduct of christian professors is the great stumbling-block in the path of infidels. They read in the word of truth, "Judge not, that ye be not judged"; and they consequently expect christians to refrain from judging. Do they find it so? Nay, on the contrary, after critically observing the conduct of their christian friends and acquaintances, they find that judging, instead of being an exception, is the rule. They find men who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, setting up standards by which they measure and judge their fellow men, laying aside, or forgetting altogether the above passage. One brother can not sit in fellowship with another brother, because he has done, or said, something which may appear wrong; with another, because he believes a little too much; with another, because he does not believe enough. He can not sit down to the table of the Lord with his brother, because he has not signed certain articles, or does not believe in this, that, or the other creed; with another brother, because he believes in a particular form of church government; with another, because he has, or has not, been immersed in baptism; and so on, judge, judge, judging one another continually; and however minute or non-essential the difference of opinion that exists may be, taking their stand upon that difference, and declaring, with all the emphasis of infallibility, that no man can be of the church of Christ unless he believes just as they do, brings scandal on the cause of Christ, and throws stumbling-blocks in the way of weak brethren.

O Lord, deliver me from such perverted notions of christianity, and give me that lowliness of mind that will enable me to esteem my brother in the Lord better than myself.

CULLED ITEMS FOR THE TIMES.

Blasphemy of the Pope. A French Catholic journal gives the text of a singular reply recently made by the Pope, to an address presented to him, in the name of a vast number of strangers sojourning in Rome. What above all struck his hearers on this occasion was the majestic rebuke to those who have the pretension to offer him advice, or show him the path he ought to pursue.—"I alone, despite my unworthiness, am the successor of the apostles, the Vicar of Jesus Christ. I alone have the mission to guide and direct the bark of St. Peter. I am the way, the truth, and the life."

Along side of this language, let us place the Scriptures. John 14: 6 reads,—"Jesus saith, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life." Now whom shall we believe, the Pope, the Papacy, who has put seventy-five millions to death for believing in the word of God? or Jesus, who states, "I am the resurrection and the life"? Let us believe the word of God, though every man be a liar.

Truth. The British Workman (English paper) says, "At the present time, when some of our greatest scholars are seeking to shake our faith in the 'good old Bible,' it is refreshing to find that there are those amongst the common-sense and hard-handed sons of toil, who can defend the truth with an ability which would not do discredit to many of our divines. A Scotch shepherd has issued a valuable little work, called, 'Truth frae mang the heather' (truth from among the heather), illustrative of the truths of christianity, which we commend to the perusal of all working-men."

"Lovers of pleasures," etc.,—2 Tim 3: 4. The Portland Advertiser says, "Put this and that together"; then quotes from the N. Y. Express,—"Pews in Rev. H. W. Beecher's church.—The sale of choice pews this year amounted to $29,436, nearly $3,000 more than last; this, with the rental—$12,138, makes the pew income $41,594, $400 being paid for choice of pews." Simultaneously with the above announcement, there appeared in "The Boudoir," the ladies' illustrated paper of fashions, the following notice: "The readers of the Boudoir should not fail to peruse every one of the pages this week. Each is filled to its limit with the liveliest reading and gossip of life, the news of fashion, the affairs of the beau monde, and all matters of general interest to ladies. We gave last week the current fashions as displayed at Beecher's church, and in this issue we notice them as displayed at St. Stephen's." Perhaps, by putting this and that together, some idea may be obtained of the reason why high prices are paid for pews, and what some people go to church for.

Value of Christianity. The Independent of a late issue gave editorial prominence to what the editor seemed to think a good joke; which was, that a Sunday School child, being asked "who died for her," replied, "Abraham Lincoln." The Journal of Commerce, commenting on it, regards that as a very strange christian mind, which can see any joke in such a story. We quote: "The Sabbath, the Bible, the church, all the most sacred scenes and associations, have been very much mixed up with the wild passions of human strife; and the world is not any better for it. We have emerged from fierce war into political contests, scarcely less fierce; and now, if ever, is the time to rescue the churches, and the religion of the land, from absolute subjection to the world and its interests. The most fearful illustration possible is given in Missouri, where the law now requires a political oath as the privilege of teaching and preaching the gospel."

World at war. The Portland Advertiser of a late issue, quoting from another paper an article on "The world at war," says:—"The actual condition of Christendom to-day affords a striking commentary upon Stuart Mill's observation, that the remark of the early enemies of the gospel, 'See how these christians love one another,' is not likely to be made by any body now. While the Mohammedan and Pagan nations of the world are getting on peacefully and quietly enough, the christian powers in both continents are in a ferment of war and war's worst passions. * * * The Crescent just now sheds the milder and less baleful light on mankind than the cross. * * To keep the peace of the world in the midst of such chances of strife, is probably a task beyond the reach of diplomacy, and all signs conspire to indicate that Europe is entirely upon another 'battle summer,' not less terrible than the memorable season which earned that dread name, on fields drenched with blood from the Rhine to the Vistula, and from Naples to the Northern sea."

Says the Post of June 18th, 1866, speaking on War, "It is a grave crisis in every point of view; and its end no man can determine."

And with respect to Napoleon's interest in the matter, the New York Journal of Commerce says, "That to the view of most men, Europe is a great automaton, with soldiers in the foreground, and Louis Napoleon behind the scenes, pulling the wires; or, to change the figures, while others shake the trees (do the fighting), he gathers the apples." And this would appear to the very letter, by passing events, at the beginning of the mortal strife a few short weeks ago, when the Prussians and Italians were repulsed. Prussia wished the aid of L. Napoleon, offering him a certain city with other things. Victor Emmanuel also solicited his aid, offering him Sardinia; and now that Austria has met with such a defeat, she has requested L. Napoleon to act as mediator, offering him the coveted prize—Venetia. So whatever turns up in the world, it seems to turn to his advantage.

It appears, by all the signs of the times, that our world is "sadly out of joint," and with no prospect of its being any better. Of the present prospect, says the Illustrated London Hand Book, "$300,000,000 (three hundred millions) dollars are spent in Great Britain in intoxicating liquors; whilst a little more than twenty-five millions of dollars are used by all the Missionary and Bible Societies for spreading the cause of Christ throughout the whole world. With the present rate of income, it would take the Bible Societies six hundred years to supply a copy of the Scriptures to each one of the seven hundred millions in the heathen world."

O hasten the time when we shall have a better earth, a better world.

HAPPINESS.

However diversified the callings and professions of mankind, it is a fact most obvious that the object, end and aim of all is happiness. Notwithstanding this is the case, but very few, comparatively speaking, attain to the object of their pursuit. The reason of this is, a majority of mankind look for happiness where it is never to be found. They expect to find it in the gratification of their sensual appetites. Indeed, happiness is the great desideratum of human life. How strange, then, when such is the fact, that men will mistake the true substance of real joy, and follow so wildly after the shadow. Instead of seeking the way of wisdom for their guide, they seek for those pleasures in the haunts of revelry, or in the bowers of sensual indulgence. Mistaken souls. They look for divine favor where it is never found. Weary, and worn out with the vain search, men are apt to sit down in despair, and exclaim, There is no peace and joy on earth. He beholds the smiling face of nature, the perfect harmony that everywhere exists in all her works, and murmurs, All is cheerful and happy but mortal man. True; but do you not here learn, O man, the secret cause of thy woe? Thou hast not, like nature, walked in the paths of perfect obedience to the laws of thy being. Thou hast rejected heavenly and divine pleasure when it was plainly before you. Obey, then, like nature, the perfect laws of thy Creator, and like her thou shalt move on, and all shall learn of thee the great lesson of happiness.

If, therefore, we would enjoy happiness, we must refrain from every sinful and useless indulgence. We must be chaste in our conversation, exemplary in our conduct, faithful in our promises, just and honorable in our dealings, and, above all, humble and resigned to every dispensation of Providence. If we live and practice in this heaven-born way, we shall not only be exempt from the chidings of a guilty conscience, and a fearful apprehension of the judgment to come; but we shall enjoy that which thousands and thousands are laboring in vain to obtain in "this vale of tears." And besides this, we shall obtain that joy and happiness which is laid up in store for the righteous, in that great and memorable day of Christ's coming.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, let us be faithful in every duty that is incumbent upon us; then we shall receive the crown of life in the kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. J. Elkins.

Injuries.—If a bee stings you, will you go to the hive and destroy it? Would not a thousand come upon you? If you receive a trifling injury, do not go about the streets proclaiming it, and be anxious to avenge it. Let it drop. It is wisdom to say little respecting the injuries you have received.

☞ A crying need of our day is to make God's people feel and act upon the conviction that every one of them is as truly appointed, and relied upon, to do the work of God in this world, as every enlisted soldier in an army is appointed to, and relied upon, for the hard fighting of his campaign.

O, WHEN SHALL I REACH MY HOME?

I'm a wanderer now, no home have I,
No cottage to call my own;
I've wandered long, and am weary oft,
O, when shall I reach my home.

I'm trying to walk in the narrow way,
The path my Savior trod;
The way that leads to the saints' abode,
The beautiful city of God.

But the way looks long, the night is dark,
And clouds my path o'ershadow;
And friends oft chide, and foes deride,
And an enemy's lurking ever.

But I'll travel on, a pilgrim still,
For my Savior's near me ever;
I'll try and conquer all my foes,
And dwell with him forever.

I'll face the storm, I'll stem the tide,
I'll gird the armor round me;
I'll calmly wait till the Master comes,
With the mansion he's prepared me.

We'll not wait long for the promised rest,
Dear pilgrim sister, brother;
"A little while," and "He'll come again,"
Our darling Elder Brother.

BRIEF THOUGHTS

On the Nature of the Soul, Resurrection of the Dead, and the Final Destiny of Man.

From the Scriptures alone can we obtain satisfactory information concerning the nature of the soul. Reason may lead to conjecture, but reason alone cannot give us confidence. The wise men of antiquity have reasoned without the light of Revelation, and remained in unhappy uncertainty. We are shut up to seek light from the Scriptures, shining in a dark place. The first question that presents itself to our mind will be, Is the soul of man a conscious and intelligent existence, when separated from the body, immortal in its nature, and destined to exist forever? My object in the brief thoughts on this subject will not be to examine all the isolated passages which appear to present objections to the views I shall offer on this question; but to inquire what is the current testimony of Scripture; and this, not so much to present all the evidence from the Scriptures that goes to support my views on the subject, as to suggest trains of thought for others, as to what is truth on this subject.

1. I should not think the soul of man an immortal, conscious, and intelligent existence, separate from the body, from the silence of the Scriptures on the subject. The Scriptures speak of the nature of man as plainly as they do of the nature of God; of his mortality, depravity, his perishing condition by nature, yet in this volume, written by prophets and apostles, recording the teachings of Christ, their own teaching and preaching to men of all classes and conditions—yet in all this volume composed by so many writers, under so many different circumstances, and discussing so many subjects, the soul's immortality is never stated as a fact plainly and explicitly, nor the subject discussed. This appears the more strange, supposing the writers to have believed the doctrine, from the fact that religious teachers in our day, who believe the doctrine, often discuss the subject; speak of the soul's immortality in most of their sermons and exhortations, so that no one who hears them, or reads their writings, is in the least doubt as to their real sentiments on the subject.

2. I should not infer the doctrine of the soul's immortality from the terms used in the Scriptures in speaking of it. I shall examine but a few of the most prominent passages on this point, and refer the reader to "Bush on the Soul" for a full examination of this class of passages. The first mention of the soul s, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul," or a living creature.

There is no intimation that what God breathed into man had an intelligent, and conscious existence previous to its entrance into the body, or that it became such after its entrance into the body.

But its entrance into the body made man a rational, and intelligent creature. The Scriptures call it the spirit, the life. By whatever name it is called, it is evidently nothing more nor less that the principle of life, which, before it entered the body, had no conscious and intelligent existence; and after it leaves the body has no conscious and intelligent existence; but, united, makes a rational and accountable being. This is what Paul tells the Athenians, "seeing he giveth to all life and breath;" and what Jesus refers to when he says, "but are not able to kill the soul;" and what Solomon designates when he says, "the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." The breath of life, or the principle of life, that gift of God to man, returns to God who gave it; not as a rational and intelligent existence, but as the principle of life merely. Man cannot destroy it. As Paul says, "your life is hid with Christ in God." "When Christ who is our life shall appear," though our enemies kill this body, yet our life shall not be lost, but shall be restored to the body in its incorruptible state—"and then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—"He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he who loseth his life for my sake shall find it." Though they kill your body, the principle of life shall return to God who gave it. And he shall restore it again, though apparently lost, to your incorruptible body; and thus shall you keep it unto life eternal. "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" The question does not speak of the happiness of the soul, but of the soul itself, as a thing that may be lost, or bartered away. The previous verse calls it life; they mean the same thing. If the soul of man was immortal by nature, it could not be lost or exchanged for something less valuable.

3. From the punishment threatened to the ungodly, I should not infer its immortality, but its destruction and extinction. The first penalty held up to Adam previous to the fall was, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This curse was after the fall explained to Adam: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread till thou return unto the ground, for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." The prospect held before Adam was that he should go back to the dust from whence he was taken, and God would take back the principle of life he had conditionally given to Adam. An extinction of being was the prospect before his mind. If Christ had not come as the resurrection and the life, there would have been no future existence for men. And until he was promised, there was no curse that reached beyond the grave. But there is a second death; and as there was an extinction of being in prospect before Adam, which was only prevented by Christ's coming as the resurrection and the life, the second death will be an entire extinction of being—a destruction for which there is no remedy, being a destruction of both soul and body in hell. The principle of life will be destroyed, and there can be no resurrection from the second death. "I have set before you life and death"—"the soul that sinneth it shall die." "For, behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." "When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed forever." David speaking by the Spirit, says, "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Bless thou the Lord, O my soul." "And gather his wheat into the garner, but will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Will the chaff remain burning yet unconsumed because it is burnt up with unquenchable fire?" "And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." What doom is here threatened? In what does this final, eternal, and everlasting punishment consist? Let the apostle Paul speak: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Then where will the wicked be after their destruction? They must be out of God's universe, or out of existence. "Vessels of wrath fitted to destruction." "Gather ye together first the tares and bind them in bundles to burn them." When burnt do they become extinct? "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy." Not his happiness only shall be destroyed, but himself. "Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly." Not only their happiness is to have an end, but they are to have an end.

The wicked will not rise with immortal bodies. Paul, referring to the resurrection, says, "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Here corruption and life everlasting are placed in contrast. Corruption is the opposite of immortality and incorruption. If the wicked are to reap corruption, they are not to be immortal nor incorruptible; "for corruption doth not inherit incorruption." All whose corruption puts on incorruption, and whose mortal puts on immortality, can sing, "Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

4. I should not suppose the soul to be immortal by nature, from the fact that eternal life, or immortality, is a conditional gift: both these terms express the same idea. God said of Adam in his fallen state, lest he "eat and live forever."

These terms when applied to the righteous, always imply an eternal existence of blessedness. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." "This is that bread which came down from heaven; he that eateth of this bread shall live forever." "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life." Immortality is a thing to be sought for. This does not appear as though all were possessed of it. "And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." If men by nature are immortal, will not those who do not God's will abide forever, or remain forever? "Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." Immortality and life are brought to life, and no immortality but one of life. Death and immortality are nowhere brought to light through the gospel.

5. The future existence of man is predicated on the resurrection of the dead, and not on the immortality of the soul. Christ says, "That I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day." "That every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." "No man can come to me except the Father which sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day."

Paul says, "of the hope and resurrection of the dead, I am called in question." "Because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead." The final judgment is here made to depend on the resurrection of the dead. "And have hope toward God. . . . that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust." The resurrection is the apostle's ground of hope. "If Christ be not raised, ... then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." "If the dead rise not, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." The apostle here makes the resurrection of the dead the ground of hope for future existence. "But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not even as others who have no hope." Why, because the soul is immortal? "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "And the dead in Christ shall rise first." "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord from henceforth." "Their works shall follow them."

This passage is not general in its application. The words "from henceforth" limit it to the specified time. "For the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth: they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."

I should suppose from such language that this was the opening scene of rewards and punishments. Of a similar character is all the language describing the resurrection and final judgment, "So shall it be at the end of the world, the angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just." Who would suppose, from such language, that the mass of them had been separated previously? So in the parable of the sheep and goats: then shall he separate them and shall say, "Come ye blessed," and "Depart ye cursed." This certainly looks like the first and final separation: the opening scene of rewards and punishments. When the Son of man shall come in the glory of the Father, THEN shall he reward every man according to his works. This confirms the previous inference of no reward till the coming of the Son of Man.

In Christ's interview with Mary and Martha, he did not attempt to comfort them as many would in our day, by describing the rapturous joys of a soul in heaven. No intimation of this kind was made. For with all their regrets at losing their brother, we cannot suppose they would consent to have him called from such scenes to the sorrows of earth again. But Christ comforted them by saying: "I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live again." Martha says, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day" "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." We are not to see Christ as he is till his second appearing. "When Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." We shall shall not appear with him in glory until his second appearing. And not only they, but "we ourselves, groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." We have the spirit of adoption whereby we cry, Abba, Father. But the adoption itself does not take place till the body is redeemed. "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." We are to be judged only for the deeds done in the body. Yet if the souls of wicked men possess a conscious and intelligent existence, some of them have been sinning for thousands of years.

If the foregoing thoughts are correct the redeemed will owe to the Lord Jesus Christ, not only their eternal felicity, but their eternal existence also. "For the wages of sin is death: but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

"It cost him death to save our lives;
To buy our souls, it cost his own;
And all the unknown joys he gives,
Were bought with agonies unknown."

"But man dieth and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more they shall not wake, nor be raised out of their sleep." Job 14: 10–12.

"His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4.

"Men and brethren, let me speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us to this day. For David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 29–34.—Author Unknown.

SHORT PRAYERS.—There were but three words in the petition which Peter gasped out, but they were sufficient for his purpose; they reached the ear of Jesus, and his heart too. Not length, but strength, is desirable. A sense of need is a mighty teacher of brevity. Verbiage is to devotion as chaff to the wheat. Precious things lie in compass, and all that is real in prayer in many a long address might have been uttered in a sentence as short as that which burst from the soul of the sinking apostle.

For the World's Crisis.

THE BORROWED JEWELS.

I love to study the old types. There is something rich in following them out and discovering their antitypes. I presume I make some wrong applications, but it does me good to apply some of them right down here, to our circumstances and times. It strengthens and encourages me to still travel on through this wilderness toward the better land.

I was thinking a short time ago, what could be implied in the strange command given to the children of Israel, when about to leave Egypt,—"Let every man borrow of his neighbor, and every woman of her neighbor, jewels of silver and jewels of gold." We read that they did so, "and they spoiled the Egyptians." Was not that a strange command for God to give his people? Well, I have an appetite for every thing which can be made to sustain us in this time of darkness and famine, and am anxious to draw nourishment even from that circumstance. So I mused in this way:

There is a meaning to all of God's commandments, and there must be to this. It seems that among the dross and rubbish of Egypt, there was some good silver and gold; and the Lord wanted the Israelites to take that with them on their journey to the promised land. He said nothing about the onions, the garlic and leeks; these were to be left behind. He did not tell them to take with them some of the sorcerers, the soothsayers, and the Spirit-mediums; no, no; they were not wanted in the congregation of God's people. But the pure gold was wanted, and for an especial purpose. It was wanted to adorn the tabernacle which was to be built in the wilderness for a habitation for the Lord, and was to go with them in all their wanderings, and be placed at last in the temple at Jerusalem, in the land of promise. When the sons of Jacob settled in the land of Goshen, the Egyptians were quite a respectable people. They were acquainted with Joseph, and probably knew something about Joseph's God, and his promise to the seed of Abraham. But after a time, darkness crept in upon them. Sorcery, necromancy, and evil spirits took possession of the nation. Another king arose which knew not Joseph, or Joseph's God, or anything about the promises made to Abraham. His gods were probably the miracle-working demons. Then came a dark day to God's people. Most likely they kept aloof from the Egyptians, and refused to join in their blasphemous foolery, and thus brought down the wrath of the rulers. Heavy burdens were put upon them, grievous to be borne. They were required to make brick, but not allowed materials to make them. They were despised, insulted and oppressed, until their lives were a burden. Living so long in the land of pagans, they too, perhaps, had lost sight of the promise made to their fathers, and had become infected with the old pagan lie, and thought that "death is the gate to endless joy." But God spake from the burning bush, and through Moses reminded them of his promise. When they learned that their inheritance was a land flowing with milk and honey,—a real Canaan, they wished to escape from bondage and task-masters and go to enjoy it. God promised to help them out, and sustain them by the way, and carry them through, if they would leave Egypt, with all its dross and rubbish, and trust entirely in him. But they must take the gold with them,—nothing was to be left worth going back after.

We will not follow the Israelites in their wanderings. We all know how they lusted after things that were left behind which were not gold; how they murmured and complained, and doubted the promises of God,—wished themselves back in Egypt, and accused Moses of bringing them out to die in the wilderness. So they murmured, until God, in his displeasure, took them at their word, and declared they should not see the land of promise; but should die in the wilderness, except Caleb and Joshua, who believed his word and insisted that they were well able to go up and possess the land.

Now for the application. We dwelt for a long time in the land of Egypt. The inhabitants of that land used to know about God and his promises. Our fathers, when they went there to find a home for a time, until a better one was prepared for their reception, carried with them the promise that they should finally, if obedient, possess a land fruitful and good,—a land of rest and peace, secure from all evil, and free from sorrow, pain and death,—a real land,—a literal dwelling-place,—an eternal home. Well, they were suffered to believe this for a while, and fix their faith and hopes on a solid foundation. And though they were sojourners, and tributaries to the powers that were; yet they toiled cheerfully in hope of a better life, and a glorious inheritance.

But there came a change. Other rulers arose "who knew not Joseph." They had pleased themselves with the children of strangers, and listened to the teaching of heathen philosophy and Pagan tradition, until they had become blinded and lost in a fog of error, and were themselves blind leaders of the blind. Then came a darkness which could be felt, for it brought with it a spiritual bondage. And then, unseen, in the darkness, came evil spirits, roaming through the gloom, breathing delusions and blasphemous doctrines in the ears of the people. And the darkness reached even to the people of God. They too, in a measure, lost sight of the inheritance. They were bewildered and stupefied by poisonous tradition, and their faith became mere fancy, and their hopes visionary and ethereal.

At length the voice of God was heard. He would not leave his people in this darkness without reminding them of the promise made to their fathers. He sent his servants to bring them out from the bondage and darkness of Egypt. Some heeded the call and were disposed to come out and seek freedom from an oppression that was too grievous to be borne. Our fathers were permitted to build upon a foundation, and have a reason for their hope; but we, their descendants, were required to have faith and hope without any foundation, and cast our anchor in the sky where there was nothing to hold it. Truly this was worse than making bricks without straw. But with all the dross and rubbish, there was some good gold: some precious truths that were not to be left behind. So we were permitted to borrow what truth they had, and go forth in search of more. All the truth is wanted, wherever it may be found, to adorn the tabernacle of the Most High—the church of the living God, his earthly dwelling place, which is to be placed in the house not made with hands, in the new Jerusalem. But oh! what a commotion there was in the camp of Pharaoh when it was known that we wished to follow and obey the word, even if it led us through the wilderness. But we escaped, thank the Lord! and started on our journey. And we have been sustained. We have had manna from heaven and water from the rock. We have had the cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night. We have had the presence of the Lord in the tabernacle, and his glory has shone around. Still we hear some complaining and finding fault. Brother, sister, what would you have? what do you desire? To be sure we are in the wilderness now, and there are trials by the way; but just yonder lie the green fields of Canaan and the rest that remaineth for the people of God. Would you go back? Ah! we have taken with us all the gold, and there is nothing worth going back after. And we have found some precious jewels by the way, better, far better than even the borrowed gold. The fruit of Egypt has certainly not improved any since we came out. Would you live on onions, and leeks, and garlic, after eating manna, drinking the wine of the kingdom, and partaking of the rich clusters of grapes brought by the Comforter from the promised land? Do you sigh for the flesh-pots, and waters which are turned to blood, after having a view of the tree of life and the crystal river? Can you desire the honors of Pharaoh's house, a Babylonish garment, and the wages of sin; when before you is a robe of righteousness, a crown of glory, and eternal life? No! you say; well, then, press onward.

"The land lies before you, 'tis pleasant to view;
Its fruits are inviting, they're offered to you."

The way may be a little rough at times; the storm may beat; but we have a hiding-place in Jesus the Rock of our salvation. Do not get impatient at a little delay, and say in despair you cannot go up and possess the goodly land; lest God become angry, and declare you shall die in the wilderness. Be like Caleb and Joshua. Stand firm on the promises of God, and say in his name, We are well able, we will go up. Do this; be faithful; and the rest, the glory, the kingdom, and eternal life shall be yours.

DIARY LEAVES.

FROM THE DIARY OF A CONVERTED INFIDEL.

"I will praise thee, O Lord, with all my heart." Why should I praise the Lord? Because "he brought me up out of an horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock"—the rock Christ Jesus. Because he has drawn me from the midnight darkness of infidelity, and caused the light, the glorious light of the gospel, to shine within my heart, chasing away the doubt and gloom and fear that had heretofore reigned within me, filling my heart with peace and love and joy in the Holy Ghost. This is why I praise the Lord. This is why I love to speak of his goodness and his mercy unto me. This is why I keep humbly laboring in the vineyard of the Lord, putting my trust in him, and praying that I might be made the instrument of bringing one lost sheep into his fold.

When I look back upon the last fifteen years of my life, I see nothing but darkness and gloom,—not one ray of light to relieve the eye. All is mystery, darkness and death. I seem to have just awakened out of a fearful dream, with all its horrors deeply impressed upon the memory, without the power of describing them. O how soothing, how comforting to me, have been the words of our Savior, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." I have labored in unbelief; I have been laden with the sins of omission and commission, but I thank thee, O Lord, that I have tasted of that rest, and know how sweet, how tranquil, how refreshing it is. Could I raise my voice loud enough to be heard by all those friends whom I have left bound up in the things of this world, I would cry unto them, "O taste and see that the Lord is good." His yoke is easy, and his burden is light.

Since I have sat me down at the feet of Jesus, "clothed and in" my "right mind," I have frequently tried to discover how I became an infidel. There always existed a sort of mystery about this period of my life, so that I never could thoroughly understand how I came to lose my faith. Now I see clearly. The dark cloud which so long hung over my mind has been removed, and I see that all my unbelief originated in my ignorance of the blessed word. Instead of drawing water from the fountain-head, I was content to drink from the ditch by the wayside. I confounded profession with belief. I looked at the outward conduct of professors, and drew my knowledge of christianity from this source, instead of going to the fountain-head of all truth. I observed the walk and conversation of professing christians, and found them so diametrically opposed to my preconceived notions of christian character, that, by a very gradual process, I came to the conclusion that the doctrine taught in the Bible had no influence over man's moral nature; consequently, could not be of divine origin.

How mistaken I have been; and I earnestly pray that through the grace of God I may be kept consistent in walk and conversation, as an humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. The inconsistency in the conduct of christian professors is the great stumbling-block in the path of infidels. They read in the word of truth, "Judge not, that ye be not judged"; and they consequently expect christians to refrain from judging. Do they find it so? Nay, on the contrary, after critically observing the conduct of their christian friends and acquaintances, they find that judging, instead of being an exception, is the rule. They find men who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, setting up standards by which they measure and judge their fellow men, laying aside, or forgetting altogether the above passage. One brother can not sit in fellowship with another brother, because he has done, or said, something which may appear wrong; with another, because he believes a little too much; with another, because he does not believe enough. He can not sit down to the table of the Lord with his brother, because he has not signed certain articles, or does not believe in this, that, or the other creed; with another brother, because he believes in a particular form of church government; with another, because he has, or has not, been immersed in baptism; and so on, judge, judge, judging one another continually; and however minute or non-essential the difference of opinion that exists may be, taking their stand upon that difference, and declaring, with all the emphasis of infallibility, that no man can be of the church of Christ unless he believes just as they do, brings scandal on the cause of Christ, and throws stumbling-blocks in the way of weak brethren.

O Lord, deliver me from such perverted notions of christianity, and give me that lowliness of mind that will enable me to esteem my brother in the Lord better than myself.

CULLED ITEMS FOR THE TIMES.

Blasphemy of the Pope. A French Catholic journal gives the text of a singular reply recently made by the Pope, to an address presented to him, in the name of a vast number of strangers sojourning in Rome. What above all struck his hearers on this occasion was the majestic rebuke to those who have the pretension to offer him advice, or show him the path he ought to pursue.—"I alone, despite my unworthiness, am the successor of the apostles, the Vicar of Jesus Christ. I alone have the mission to guide and direct the bark of St. Peter. I am the way, the truth, and the life."

Along side of this language, let us place the Scriptures. John 14: 6 reads,—"Jesus saith, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life." Now whom shall we believe, the Pope, the Papacy, who has put seventy-five millions to death for believing in the word of God? or Jesus, who states, "I am the resurrection and the life"? Let us believe the word of God, though every man be a liar.

TRUTH. The British Workman (English paper) says, "At the present time, when some of our greatest scholars are seeking to shake our faith in the 'good old Bible,' it is refreshing to find that there are those amongst the common-sense and hard-handed sons of toil, who can defend the truth with an ability which would not do discredit to many of our divines. A Scotch shepherd has issued a valuable little work, called, 'Truth frae mang the heather' (truth from among the heather), illustrative of the truths of christianity, which we commend to the perusal of all working-men."

"LOVERS OF PLEASURES," etc.,—2 Tim 3: 4. The Portland Advertiser says, "Put this and that together"; then quotes from the N. Y. Express,—"Pews in Rev. H. W. Beecher's church.—The sale of choice pews this year amounted to $29,436, nearly $3,000 more than last; this, with the rental—$12,158, makes the pew income $41,594, $400 being paid for choice of pews." Simultaneously with the above announcement, there appeared in "The Boudoir," the ladies' illustrated paper of fashions, the following notice: "The readers of the Boudoir should not fail to peruse every one of the pages this week. Each is filled to its limit with the liveliest reading and gossip of life, the news of fashion, the affairs of the beau monde, and all matters of general interest to ladies. We gave last week the current fashions as displayed at Beecher's church, and in this issue we notice them as displayed at St. Stephen's." Perhaps, by putting this and that together, some idea may be obtained of the reason why high prices are paid for pews, and what some people go to church for.

VALUE OF CHRISTIANITY. The Independent of a late issue gave editorial prominence to what the editor seemed to think a good joke; which was, that a Sunday School child, being asked "who died for her," replied, "Abraham Lincoln." The Journal of Commerce, commenting on it, regards that as a very strange christian mind, which can see any joke in such a story. We quote: "The Sabbath, the Bible, the church, all the most sacred scenes and associations, have been very much mixed up with the wild passions of human strife; and the world is not any better for it. We have emerged from fierce war into political contests, scarcely less fierce; and now, if ever, is the time to rescue the churches, and the religion of the land, from absolute subjection to the world and its interests. The most fearful illustration possible is given in Missouri, where the law now requires a political oath as the privilege of teaching and preaching the gospel."

WORLD AT WAR. The Portland Advertiser of a late issue, quoting from another paper an article on "The world at war," says:—"The actual condition of Christendom to-day affords a striking commentary upon Stuart Mill's observation, that the remark of the early enemies of the gospel, 'See how these christians love one another,' is not likely to be made by any body now. While the Mohammedan and Pagan nations of the world are getting on peacefully and quietly enough, the christian powers in both continents are in a ferment of war and war's worst passions. * * * The Crescent just now sheds the milder and less baleful light on mankind than the cross. * * To keep the peace of the world in the midst of such chances of strife, is probably a task beyond the reach of diplomacy, and all signs conspire to indicate that Europe is entirely upon another 'battle summer,' not less terrible than the memorable season which earned that dread name, on fields drenched with blood from the Rhine to the Vistula, and from Naples to the Northern sea."

Says the Post of June 18th, 1866, speaking on War, "It is a grave crisis in every point of view; and its end no man can determine."

And with respect to Napoleon's interest in the matter, the New York Journal of Commerce says, "That to the view of most men, Europe is a great automaton, with soldiers in the foreground, and Louis Napoleon behind the scenes, pulling the wires; or, to change the figures, while others shake the trees (do the fighting), he gathers the apples." And this would appear to the very letter, by passing events, at the beginning of the mortal strife a few short weeks ago, when the Prussians and Italians were repulsed. Prussia wished the aid of L. Napoleon, offering him a certain city with other things. Victor Emmanuel also solicited his aid, offering him Sardinia; and now that Austria has met with such a defeat, she has requested L. Napoleon to act as mediator, offering him the coveted prize—Venetia. So whatever turns up in the world, it seems to turn to his advantage.

It appears, by all the signs of the times, that our world is "sadly out of joint," and with no prospect of its being any better. Of the present prospect, says the Illustrated London Hand Book, "$300,000,000 (three hundred millions) dollars are spent in Great Britain in intoxicating liquors; whilst a little more than twenty-five millions of dollars are used by all the Missionary and Bible Societies for spreading the cause of Christ throughout the whole world. With the present rate of income, it would take the Bible Societies six hundred years to supply a copy of the Scriptures to each one of the seven hundred millions in the heathen world."

O hasten the time when we shall have a better earth, a better world.

HAPPINESS.

However diversified the callings and professions of mankind, it is a fact most obvious that the object, end and aim of all is happiness. Notwithstanding this is the case, but very few, comparatively speaking, attain to the object of their pursuit. The reason of this is, a majority of mankind look for happiness where it is never to be found. They expect to find it in the gratification of their sensual appetites. Indeed, happiness is the great desideratum of human life. How strange, then, when such is the fact, that men will mistake the true substance of real joy, and follow so wildly after the shadow. Instead of seeking the way of wisdom for their guide, they seek for those pleasures in the haunts of revelry, or in the bowers of sensual indulgence. Mistaken souls. They look for divine favor where it is never found. Weary, and worn out with the vain search, men are apt to sit down in despair, and exclaim, There is no peace and joy on earth. He beholds the smiling face of nature, the perfect harmony that everywhere exists in all her works, and murmurs, All is cheerful and happy but mortal man. True; but do you not here learn, O man, the secret cause of thy woe? Thou hast not, like nature, walked in the paths of perfect obedience to the laws of thy being. Thou hast rejected heavenly and divine pleasure when it was plainly before you. Obey, then, like nature, the perfect laws of thy Creator, and like her thou shalt move on, and all shall learn of thee the great lesson of happiness.

If, therefore, we would enjoy happiness, we must refrain from every sinful and useless indulgence. We must be chaste in our conversation, exemplary in our conduct, faithful in our promises, just and honorable in our dealings, and, above all, humble and resigned to every dispensation of Providence. If we live and practice in this heaven-born way, we shall not only be exempt from the chidings of a guilty conscience, and a fearful apprehension of the judgment to come; but we shall enjoy that which thousands and thousands are laboring in vain to obtain in "this vale of tears." And besides this, we shall obtain that joy and happiness which is laid up in store for the righteous, in that great and memorable day of Christ's coming.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, let us be faithful in every duty that is incumbent upon us; then we shall receive the crown of life in the kingdom of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. J. ELKINS.

INJURIES.—If a bee stings you, will you go to the hive and destroy it? Would not a thousand come upon you? If you receive a trifling injury, do not go about the streets proclaiming it, and be anxious to avenge it. Let it drop. It is wisdom to say little respecting the injuries you have received.

☞ A crying need of our day is to make God's people feel and act upon the conviction that every one of them is as truly appointed, and relied upon, to do the work of God in this world, as every enlisted soldier in an army is appointed to, and relied upon, for the hard fighting of his campaign.

For the World's Crisis.

A QUESTION.

A number of suggestions have been made about closing our campmeeting at Wilbraham on Saturday, on account of such a rush on Sunday. The brethren should look at it from the right stand-point. The Wilbraham meeting is not a local one, but a general one, for doing important business, that must be done. Recollect our yearly convention business is all done at this meeting, and saves at least five hundred dollars to us as a people, as all know that take a general survey of the thing. All the officers are chosen for managing business matters for the following year; and any one can see, or could, if they will do so, that four days would not be time enough. It would take Monday to get there, and Saturday to get home. Then Sunday must be employed by some to clear up, or leave things to the mercy of the people over Sunday, which none of you would do with your own effects; and as the committee are only agents for the body, they feel it a duty to save your property. Those that can leave and go home know but little about four tons of dirty dishes, etc., to be washed and packed and drawn off; ten stoves to be cleaned and moved; lumber and tents gathered up; straw and water barrels removed; strangers' tents to be taken down, done up, and sent home; lost articles picked up, etc., etc. You had better try it one year, and you would know more about getting the bell upon the cat. It is not expedient to try the experiment at this great general gathering. At a local campmeeting it would do.

Another suggestion is to begin Tuesday or Wednesday, and break up the next week, holding over one Sunday. That would be worse on some accounts, and no better on any. There would be the same rush on Sunday, for it would be known. It is much easier to suggest than to perform. As these suggestions have been made, I have written this that you may all have time to look at the thing in the proper and general light.

Your committee are not controllers of this thing, only your servants. But of this I am sure, neither plan suggested will work as well as it does now.

It has been thought by some that no good is done Sunday. This is a mistake, I know. If some hundreds do travel around peaceably, hundreds more sit and hear on Sunday that would n't any other day.

A word about victualing on Sunday. What can we do? The people must eat. The suggestions are weak on this point. Luxuries I think might be left off; but what some call luxuries, others call food. What can suit this generation? Well, we will do our duty, as well as we can, and hope for good results.

BRO. WELLCOME'S TRACT ON CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.

I wish to call the attention of the brethren to Bro. Wellcome's work on "Christian Baptism—Its Duty and Object," as a work that ought to be in the hands of every christian. It certainly should be in the hands of every new convert. It is in a cheap form, and full of interesting selections from writers of all ages, who give the history of the ordinance of baptism. It is the only book that expresses with clearness the views of those who believe in the immediate personal advent of Jesus to this earth; and the only one I have ever seen in which the Bible truth that baptism is a double symbol, is clearly taught. Some hold it as a symbol simply of the resurrection of the dead; and some as an outward sign of an inward work; while the Bible teaches that sin is symbolized by the corruptible, mortal body; and christian holiness by the resurrected body; so that, with an eye on this symbol, Paul calls putting off sin, putting off the old man with his deeds; and putting on holiness, putting on the new man; like as at the resurrection of the dead, the corruptible body is laid aside, and the incorruptible one takes its place. Baptism stands between the two events,—the moral change and the physical, to illustrate both. So, as a man when he dies is buried, the man is "buried . . . by baptism" in water; and as the Bible teaches a resurrection from the dead, so the candidate in the faith of a resurrection is raised out of the water, showing that as his life in this world depends on his coming out of the water; so his future life depends on the resurrection of the dead. For this reason he is buried with "Christ into death" "through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him [Christ] from the dead."

As the sinful nature is called the "old man," and is symbolized by the mortal, corruptible body; when that "old man" is dead, he must be buried symbolically; i. e., by a symbol his death must be announced, and also the life of the morally "incorruptible," "new man;" hence the old man's funeral ceremony is attended, and by baptism he is represented buried; and by raising the candidate out of the water, the resurrection of the "new man" is announced, so that the baptized christian, as a "new man" in Christ, while waiting for the redemption of his body, lives a life symbolical of life in the kingdom. So he, (the "old man") is dead, and his life (the "new man") "is hid with Christ in God." As the christian by "faith of the operation of God" is risen with Christ; so he must set his affections "on things above." His future life is therefore secured by this inner life being thus hidden; for, by the resurrection of Christ from the dead, the pledge of the christian's literal resurrection is given.

These views are advocated by Bro. Wellcome; and as his is the only book that makes baptism what the Bible makes it, we recommend it to all who want to get the most concise, clear and useful book on the subject. Buy it, brethren and sisters; read it yourselves; lend it to candidates for baptism, and then they will understand better the duty of being baptized; for they will better know what the ordinance teaches. It ought to have an extensive circulation. Send in your orders to the "Crisis Office, Boston," or "Voice of the West, Buchanan, Michigan."

Czechowski's Thrilling Narrative.

A small edition of this work has been printed in paper covers, to be disposed of for the benefit of the European Mission. The book will be sent post-paid to every one who contributes $1.00 or more to the aid of the Mission. Bro. Czechowski is in need of help. Let the friends take this means to aid him, and receive an interesting book in return. The book will be sent to those only who order it.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, Aug. 15, 1866.

☞ Take Notice!

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable IN ADVANCE, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

☞ Please Remember!

All remittances to this office, in the form of drafts, bank-checks and postal money-orders, should be made payable to the BUSINESS AGENT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

☞ Good Fractional Currency.

In sending postal currency, be careful to see that it is good before sending it. Very much of this fractional currency now in circulation is counterfeit, and every week we are receiving worthless notes of this description, which we are obliged to return to the sender.

APPOINTMENTS.—Those who wish appointments inserted in the next paper should have them at the office as early as Monday morning, as we purpose to send the paper to press earlier than usual.

TO OUR CONTRIBUTORS.

A correspondent inquires if we request our contributors to write only on one side of the paper? We are not particular. It is sometimes more convenient for our compositors; but we do not urge the matter. The reason why it is requested by some publishers that the articles should be written on only one side of the paper is that the same article may be distributed among different compositors, giving each a page at the same time.

While on this subject, there are a few things we would like our contributors to observe as special favors in our behalf.

1. Write with good ink. 2. Write coarsely, because those who set the type are obliged to read their manuscript at some distance from the eyes. 3. Do not have your lines any nearer together than on common ruled paper. It is much more difficult to set up a piece that is finely written, than one that is written coarsely. 4. Write all proper names very plainly. We are often very much perplexed to make out names; and after doing our best, with the aid of others, we have to guess at it finally. Be particular to write your own address in a very plain manner.

Please remember and observe these things, and we shall feel very thankful.

NAMES.—After all that has been said on the subject, we frequently receive articles with only the initials of the writer's name. How would such like to be introduced to their Brn. and Srs. as Bro. J. T., or Sr. P. B., etc.? Those who do not send us their names must not expect to see their articles in the paper.

"PLEASE COPY."—Not unfrequently we find a request in our exchanges as follows: "Crisis please copy." As we have said once before, we wish to say again: it frequently happens that we do not find time to read these exchanges till several weeks, or even months, after they are received; hence it will be very uncertain whether such requests will be seen in season to accomplish the object desired.

THE NEW HYMN BOOK.—Many have inquired, When will the new hymn book be done? To all interested, we would say, it is purposed to have it ready for the Wilbraham Campmeeting.

WRONG NAME.—We learn that a piece of poetry, recently published in the Crisis, entitled "Life in the Future," had the wrong signature. It was originally written by Sr. L. R. K. Bishop.

THE SECRET.

The following is from a private correspondent. The writer is one of the best contributors to "our paper," and his manuscript comes very accurately prepared. We understand he is connected with the Earnest Christian. We trust he will excuse us for giving publicity to the following, for the purpose of giving the secret of writing such good articles as we receive from his pen. It will be found in the paragraph beginning with the words,—"Whatever I write," etc. We hope all will adopt the same rule, because it will be pleasing to Lord.

"DEAR BRO. GRANT:—The contributions which I have occasionally sent for your columns, have not been the product of a cultivated mind. I am no classic scholar. Left, at an early age, an orphan in the world, I never had even the advantage of a district school education. But I learned early to serve the Lord. And through his assistance, and the grey light of the early morn, and the faint glimmer of the lamp late at night, I have learned something, and God forbid that what little I have learned should ever be used for anything but his glory. I can do nothing of myself. I place myself a humble instrument in his hands. . . .

Whatever I write, I do it entirely for the glory of God. Every idea is submitted on his altar. I commence an article in prayer; thus consecrated, I submit it to those who can use it as seemeth most for the good of his cause. This is the only way which I can consent to write for the press. If I can do anything for the Crisis in this humble way, I am at your service; provided, however, that you will take the timber in the rough, and cut and hew it into shape, or cast aside, as in your judgment will glorify God most. I well know my insufficiency, but I trust in God. I can do nothing without an effort, and in his strength I am willing to make an effort. I have have an interest in the Crisis, for it is doing a great work for God. Praise the Lord!

I cannot shake off the deep impression on my mind, that fearful days of tribulation are before us, as a people. I fear they are near at hand—nearer than many anticipate. I will try and furnish an article every week, if I can get time to prepare it. I am preparing a small pamphlet on 'Romanism a Conspiracy.' I intend, by the assistance of God, to make this a live tract. You might consider it too lengthy for a single article in the Crisis. I will submit it for your opinion when finished. I am trying to get ready to come down to the Wilbraham campmeeting. I will come if I can. May God bless you abundantly. Praise the Lord for so brave a heart to proclaim and defend God's truth. We need brave hearts in these days. Pray for me! Yours in the faith."

CERTIFICATES.

It should be remembered that all delegates sent to the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, should be provided with certificates from the churches who send them. The following may answer as a form:—

"This is to certify that —— was duly appointed by the church in —— as a delegate to the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, to be held at Wilbraham campmeeting, at 4 P. M., Aug. 21, 1866.

Every church can send one delegate, and for every fifty members above the first twenty-five, they can send another; i. e., if they have seventy-five members, they can send two; one hundred twenty-five, three; one hundred seventy-five, four.

By a church is meant any company of believers met together for the worship of God. As important business is to be transacted relating to the spiritual welfare of many thousands, we hope all churches will send their delegates.

All preachers co-operating with the association are considered as members, and need no certificates.

☞ FARE REDUCED.

Bangor and intermediate places to Boston, for Wilbraham Campmeeting.

We have arranged with the Agent of the Steamer Katahdin, so that the brethren and sisters in Maine, who wish to attend the Wilbraham meeting, can come and return on the boat for one fare—half price. Call for Wilbraham Campmeeting tickets (good Aug. 16 to 28 inclusive), with return Check, to be endorsed by Geo. T. Adams, at the campmeeting or in Boston. The steamer leaves Bangor Aug. 16th and 20th.

IS SATAN BOUND?

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to make a few inquiries respecting the 20th chapter of Revelation.

1. Who is the angel? 2. Has Satan been bound, or is he yet to be bound? 3. Who are the souls of them that were beheaded for the word of God, and in what sense do they reign with Christ, spiritually or literally? 4. What is the first resurrection, and how long between the two?

S. W. D.

1. We are not able to tell what particular angel is meant; but it is the one commissioned to do that special work. 2. We do not see any evidence that Satan is bound yet; but on the contrary we have reason to believe that he is more than usually free among the children of men at the present time.

3. The souls beheaded we understand to be those referred to in Rev. 6: 9–11, who "were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held." They are the ones martyred by the direction of the power symbolized by the woman, whom John saw riding upon a scarlet-colored beast.

We understand that they will reign literally "WITH Christ" after his second coming. If that reign is past, they reigned without Christ, instead of "with him," as the prophecy declares.

4. We understand the first resurrection to be literal, and at the coming of Christ; and that it consists in the resurrection of all the dead that will be saved in the kingdom.

The word of the Lord says the time between the two resurrections is a thousand years." Rev. 20: 5.* "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God, of Christ, and shall reign WITH him a thousand years. Rev. 20: 6. This language is so plain, we see no chance to misunderstand it, if we let it mean what it says.

But suppose this resurrection is not literal, but figurative, and in the past, as must be the case, if the thousand years are in the past. The living and reigning with Christ, to fulfill this prophecy, begins with the thousand years at the first resurrection. It is certain that this has not been literally fulfilled, because Christ has not yet returned, so that if any have reigned in the past, it has been without him instead of "with him," if it is a literal resurrection and reign. Besides no one has lived a thousand years" in the past to reign with Christ, even if he had been here personally for that length of time.

As it seems to be settled beyond all controversy that none have yet been raised from the dead to reign literally with Christ a thousand in the past; then, it follows that this scripture must have been fulfilled spiritually, if at all.

If we take the latter view, the inquiry comes, what would constitute a spiritual resurrection? We can think of but one consistent answer to this inquiry, and that is, to to become a christian, or be converted, and follow Jesus, and thus be raised from the mire and filth of sin to a state of holiness. But we have yet to learn that the word resurrection is used in the Bible in any sense but the literal; or, in other words, that conversion is any where called a resurrection.

Again, if "the first resurrection" mentioned in Rev. 20: 5, 6, is a moral one, or conversion, which took place more than a thousand years ago, then there must have been a period of a thousand years following that great revival, when none were converted, or resurrected; for "the rest of the dead (the unconverted) lived not again till the thousand years were finished." Hence, it would follow that those who were not converted in the revival at the beginning of the thousand years, would remain in an unconverted state "till the thousand years were finished." But the converts at the beginning of the thousand years did not live one hundred and fifty years afterwards; hence, by the end of the first one hundred fifty years after the beginning of the thousand years, every one who had [illegible] in the first resurrection or was [illegible] the commencement of this millennium, would be dead, and they would not have been a christian left on earth! Is there a historic record of such a state as this during the past eighteen hundred years?

What shall be done with the word "AGAIN" in ver. 5?—"The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Does not the word "again" imply that they had lived once before the thousand years began? And if this resurrection is a moral one, then it follows that they were converted before the thousand years commenced, and then backslid and lived in that state for a thousand years, and were then converted over "again!"

All can see the absurdity of endeavoring to prove that the resurrection in Rev. 20: 5–6, is a moral one and in the past.

This scripture certainly has not been fulfilled literally in the past; if it has, where is the record to prove it? We have no knowledge that any resurrected saints have been living and reigning on the earth "with Christ a thousand years," or any other time since our Savior ascended to his Father. They have not reigned with him in heaven, for he said to his disciples, "whither I go ye cannot come." John 13: 33.

This passage in Rev. 20: 4–6, cannot refer to the resurrection of "Christ the first fruits" (1 Cor. 15: 23), or those who "came out of the graves after his resurrection" (Matt. 27: 53), because "they lived and reigned" not "with Christ a thousand years." If they had thus reigned during the thousand years after the resurrection of Christ, then at the end of that period, eight hundred and thirty-two years since, "the rest of the dead" should have lived.

Still further, let it be observed, that among those who "lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years," were those who "were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands."—Rev. 20: 4. But those martyrs for Jesus, and those who would not worship "the beast, neither his image," were unborn at the time when Jesus rose from the dead, hence they were not in the company that "came out of the graves after his resurrection." The beast had not then begun to kill the saints. "The woman" that rode "upon a scarlet-colored beast," and became "drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus," did not begin her work till the early part of the sixth century; and from that time onward for 1260 years the saints were to be given unto her hand. Then, after all that, "they (those who "were beheaded" by her authority "for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God,") "lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."

* It has been intimated by some that this last passage is not genuine; but is found in the oldest manuscripts.

GOOD TIDINGS.

BRO. H. S. CHAPMAN, Charlestown, Mass., writes:—"Since I saw you, I have had a severe fight with the devil—with evil spirits. I have been utterly prostrated in mind and body. But I have found anew the Lord, the blessed Savior. I am now clear forever from Spiritualism; and I can say with all my heart and soul, great and marvelous is the mercy of God. I feel now that the Lord's will is my will. I am willing to preach,—to do any thing,—to be a door-keeper in the house of the Lord."

Press on, Bro. Chapman, that is the only right road to eternal life,—doing all to the glory of God.

Our readers will recollect two interesting articles in the Crisis from Bro. Chapman, entitled "Spiritualism—what is it? Christ, or anti-Christ?" The first was published June 13th, the second June 27th, in which he gives some of his sad experience among the Spiritualists. He dove deeply into its mire, and is now prepared to speak experimentally of its effects. We expect to hear from him again soon.

BENEFIT OF AFFLICTIONS.

It is often a great wonder to some why afflictions should be suffered to come on good people, as well as on those who are not. They do not yet feel like saying as did David, "It is good for me that I have been afflicted, that I might learn thy statutes." "Before I was afflicted I went astray.

Some seem to think that afflictions always show that those who suffer them are receiving them because they have done wrong. So Job's friends tried to make him think; but in this they were mistaken. If this were the only reason then it would prove that the apostles and martyrs were wicked people, and Jesus also. Yet it is clear, from the teaching of the Bible, that afflictions are often permitted, for our special good, and have really proved to be our richest blessings, though at the time they were not "joyous, but grievous." But very few, if any, can bear continual prosperity in this world, without being lifted up in heart; hence it is often necessary that our brightest schemes be blasted, and we be humbled in the dust, and learn more fully than ever, that all our help must come from the Lord.

Afflictions often save us from more bitter things, or deliver us from the snare of Satan. These thoughts have been suggested by reading the following:—

Two painters were employed to fresco the walls of a magnificent cathedral; both stood on a rude scaffolding constructed for the purpose some eighty feet from the floor.

One of them was so intent upon his work that he became wholly absorbed, and in admiration stood off from the picture, gazing at it with delight. Forgetting where he was, he moved backward slowly, surveying critically the work of his pencil, until he had neared the end of the plank upon which he stood.

At this critical moment, his companion turned suddenly, and, almost frozen with horror, beheld his imminent peril; another instant, and the unfortunate should be precipitated upon the pavement beneath; if he spoke to him it was death—if he held his peace, death was equally sure. Suddenly he regained his presence of mind, and seizing a wet brush, flung it against the wall, spattering the beautiful picture with unsightly blotches of coloring. The painter flew forward, and turned upon his friend with fierce imprecations; but startled at his ghastly face, he listened to the recital of danger, looked suddenly over the dread space below, and with tears of gratitude blessed the hand that saved him.

So, said a preacher, we sometimes get absorbed in looking upon the pictures of this world, and in contemplating them, step backward, unconscious of our peril; when the Almighty dashes out the beautiful images, and we spring forward to lament their destruction—into the outstretched arms of mercy, and are saved!"

HO FOR THE CAMPMEETING.

Next Saturday, the 18th inst., we expect to see a lively interest again at Camp Wilbraham; and by the middle of the next week a scene of christian joyfulness rarely witnessed in the world. One can afford to go a long distance for the sake of seeing the happy greetings of dear friends in Jesus. It affords one a lively idea of what will be witnessed in the coming kingdom. Shall we have the pleasure of seeing the reader there to help praise our coming King?

SOUTHERN FEELING.

Although the rebellion in the form of active war is over for the present, the same feeling remains now, in a large degree, as was exhibited two years since. The following is from a leading editorial in the Norfolk Virginian, of July 2nd:—

"The negro 'school marms' are either gone, going, or to go, and we don't much care which, where to, or how—whether it be to the more frigid regions of the northern zone, or to a still more torrid climate; indeed, we may say that we care very little what land they are borne to, so not again to 'our'n' even though it be that bourne whence no traveler returns.

Our only fear is that their departure will not be eternal, and like other birds of prey they may return to us in season, and again take shelter, with their brood of black-birds, under the protecting wings of that all-gobbling and foulest of old fowls, the well-known buzzard yclept Freedmen's Bureau.

In all seriousness, however, we congratulate our citizens upon a 'good riddance of bad baggage' in the reported departure of these impudent missionaries. Of all the insults to which the Southern people have been subjected, this was the heaviest to bear. It was the refinement of torture."

The following is from the Memphis Avalanch:—

"Another lesson has been taught the white fanatics. It is that we want none of their 'school-marms' among any of our population, white or black. It is said they have all left in a great fight. A happy riddance we have. They were nuisances. Women, who could come down South to teach negroes, are unfit for any but negro society. The South never learnt anything from New England. The Pharisaical religion, the morals, the 'isms' of that land of Hickory, hams, and wooden nutmegs, have never obtained foothold among us, and never will. These 'isms' are sprouts to be planted among us by these 'school-marms,' and the South will rejoice when the last one has left us."

SUPREMACY OF REASON.

The spirits and their followers are urging the supremacy of reason over the revelation of truth in the Bible. The war against the word of the Lord is growing more in earnest, and the feeling of its opponents more and more bitter. It stands directly across their pathway, and all their efforts to make it favor Spiritualism will be no more successful than an attempt to make the sun rise in the west. There is no harmony between the two; hence the war of the spirits and Spiritualists against the Scriptures. We think no fact in morals can be more clearly shown than that the entire system of Spiritualism is anti-christian. This will be more apparent as we approach the end of this dispensation.

At the Spiritualist's Festival, held in Middle Granville, N. Y., June 15th, 16th, 17th, 1866, Mr. J. S. Loveland said, according to the report published in the Banner of Light, "Spiritualism annihilates the religious systems of the past, for it shows the absurdity of their foundations, and rejects their Bibles as authority."

Another speaker, Mr. E. Sprague, is reported to have said,—"The claims that a revelation has been given from an infinite Being are entirely unfounded."

The following resolution was presented:—

"Resolved, That Spiritualism is a universal eclecticism, a universal harmonizer of all past conflicts, and therefore worthy of all acceptation." Mr. J. S. Loveland when speaking on the resolution said:—"It approaches the rationalist, and extends the hand of love and says, You are right in asserting the supremacy of reason."

The following, is another preamble and resolution presented at the same meeting:—

"Whereas, The universe comprises all being, and is controlled by inherent, eternal and immutable laws; therefore,

Resolved, That all ideas of the existence of a Being above those laws are unfounded assumptions, and all prayers addressed to such an imaginary Being are but reiterations of the idolatrous notions of the past.

HIGHWAYS AND HEDGES.

The following sums have been received for the mission work in Philadelphia, in addition to what has already been reported:—$3.00 from B. H. S., River Point, R. I.; through G. T. Adams, $3.00 from Emily L. Marsh, and $5.00 from Rufus Pike; $1.00 from G. B. Martin, Goldfield, Iowa; $5.00 from a sister in Byron, Me.; and $2.00 from M. E. S., New Durham, N. H. A portion of these sums have been sent for the "Home," and the rest for the benefit of the mission generally.

Since my last article was written, I have prepared sixty bottles of diarrhea and cholera medicine for free distribution among the poor. A three-ounce bottle of the diarrhea remedy, and a two-ounce bottle of the cholera remedy, with printed directions for the treatment of these diseases, were supplied to about forty families. In some tenements there were small families, and in such cases two small families could be supplied with one set of remedies. We believe they have already been the means of saving life. These remedies are from the recipes of Dr. Hamlin, missionary to Constantinople, and used by him with great success there. If I had $100.00 for this purpose, a vast amount of good could be accomplished. I buy the ingredients at the wholesale prices, and prepare them myself.

Last week there were forty-seven deaths from Cholera, an increase of twenty-nine over the week previous. Sr. Sarah Bussier, one of our "surprise party," has just recovered from a severe attack of Asiatic Cholera. Nearly all of our little band have had the symptoms; but prompt treatment, through the blessing of the Lord, has saved us. The disease has found its way into our school, but no deaths have yet occurred.

The Lord is still at work here. Recently, a number have been brought to Christ. Pray for us. Yours looking for salvation,

Phila., Aug. 8th. F. H. BURBANK.

For the World's Crisis.

ESPECIALLY SIGNIFICANT.

The watching ones will be especially reminded of the immediate proximity of an intensely important event that must transpire, if we have not mistaken the prophets and apostles and Jesus. The "man of sin" about to be abandoned; the papacy to be left out in the cold (or go into a great heat, "shall be utterly burned with fire"); Babylon to sink to rise no more; the "close of the Catholic cycle" is imminent,—and what follows? The "Ancient of Days" is to come, and the "judgment is to be given to the saints of the Most High." Are not these things immediately to take place? The conviction to my mind is strong that the hope of the church is about to be realized. The following extract will be read with interest by the waiting ones:—

"In some quarters deep fear is felt that the military reverses in Austria will react on the Papal power with damaging effect. The Monde, a Roman Catholic journal, discourses as follows:

If Austria succumbs, there will be no State depending upon the Vicar of Jesus Christ. All will have abjured the official character of the Catholic faith. There will be numerically Catholic peoples; the Protestants will dare to call themselves a Protestant nation. England and Prussia will make a show of their pretended orthodoxy, and the mass of the Catholics in France, Spain, and Germany, will let fall the throne of Pius IX.—that visible sign of the Catholicity of the nations. Remaining faithful to their great cause, Austria testifies to it by her defeats. If she is irremediably vanquished she will have all the honor of the combat. She will close the Catholic cycle of modern peoples. The church and the world will enter upon new struggles, the struggles full of obscurity, the conditions of which it is impossible to determine."

The last hills of difficulty are about ascended—the tops of Canaan's heights are almost in sight; the weary pilgrim near the rest that is entered by faith. With quickened pace he will soon enter the city of God. It would seem, if the angels are to set the tables for the wedding supper, that they are about to commence. May we all be called to enjoy the company of those we have loved here.

"So let it be! let this system end,
This ruinous earth and skies!
The New Jerusalem descend,
The new creation rise;
Thy power omnipotent assume,
Thy brightest majesty,
And when thou dost in glory come,
My Lord, remember me!"

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Knepper.

BRO. GRANT:—I am a so-called home made minister, and German at that. I have studied the Bible from my youth up, and twenty-five years ago I did not believe that the torment of the wicked would consist in literal fire, though I believed they had an immortal soul, suffering from remorse of conscience. Christ's personal advent the second time, and reign upon earth with his people, instead of taking them to a place no man knows where, called heaven, I have believed for the last twenty years.

From three to five years ago, I had views different from anything that I had heard or read on Matt. 6: 33, Acts 3: 19, 2 Cor. 5: 17, Heb. 10: 26, Rev. 3: 20, and 22: 17. It is also five or six years since I came to the conclusion that Nicodemus was an office seeker desiring an office in the kingdom of Christ before death, and that Christ taught him that the resurrection from the dead would be the new birth that could bring him into his kingdom; and consequently he had to be born again by the resurrection of the body before he could see the kingdom he was to establish, because his kingdom was not of this world.

Now I am really astonished that, amongst the new ideas I find in the Crisis and tracts from your establishment, I find so many points that agree precisely with the ideas I held different from any I had heard before. True, the doctrine that man had no immortal soul, that would live after the body is dead, was new unto me, until I read the Crisis, but now it is all clear to mind. That death and destruction were threatened to the wicked, at the day of reward, I had long seen; but the immortal soul was still in my way. Hence, with the light I received from the Crisis on several points, it seems to me I see what the Scriptures teach about death and man's future destiny.

B. KNEPPER.

From Bro. W. M. Ingham.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to give a short account of my travels. My last left me in Halifax. From thence I went to Truro, and had a few more meetings there. A few were interested. Next to Old Barn's, and had one meeting. Some interest there. Thence to Windsor, in company with Bro. J. B. Fitch, and held four meetings in halls. Some wished to hear more, but the great mass paid but little regard to the alarm. At Falmouth two evenings; one at the Baptist meeting-house. There was good attention. The other was at a school-house. But few were out to hear. Next to Chester, on the Atlantic shore. One meeting at the Town House, and quite good attention. At Mahoon Bay we had three meetings at the Union meeting-house. There was a good turn-out to hear, and excellent attention. Some took part in the meetings. We had one meeting at North West, at the Baptist meeting-house. Next to Bridgewater, and held one meeting at Temperance Hall, as the meeting-house was not to be obtained to speak in on the fulfillment of prophecy. At Broad Cove we had one meeting,—short notice, yet about forty were out at a school-house, and gave good attention. At Mill Village we met with an accident. The horse ran away with the wagon, threw off the top, and left the wheels and connection on a rock between three and four feet high, bottom side up. No special harm, only the carriage was badly broken. We both happened to be out.

We had three meetings at Mill Village, in the Temperance Hall, as the meeting-houses were not free. Quite a good number were out to hear. Some were quite anxious, as I heard, to hear more. Next to Port Medway, and had meetings at the Baptist house. Quite a decent number were present, and paid good attention. At Liverpool I held two meetings in Temperance Hall. Quite a good attendance. One Baptist minister was present. Found one Adventist in the place,—Bro. Sherry, who embraced the Advent doctrine five years ago by reading the Bible. Since that time he has taken the paper, and bought many books. It is cheering to find here and there a pilgrim and stranger on the journey.

Next to Milton. We asked for the Disciples' meeting-house, but did not get it; hired the Temperance Hall. It was rainy; but notwithstanding the opposition, some two or three hundred were out. Next to Lock's Island, where I expected to have a meeting; but there was a Baptist meeting appointed by a new minister. I attended. He invited me to take a seat with him, and take a part in the meeting.

At Shelburne next. I arrived Saturday evening, having sent an appointment for Sunday. They did not receive the letter till I arrived. The Baptists had no preacher for Sunday morning, so the deacon kindly invited me to preach. I had a good meeting. Their minister preached in the afternoon, and invited me to take a seat with him and take a part in the meeting, and likewise to preach in the evening. He took part. Had five meetings in all there, and they were good ones. Quite a number present. Some took part. There was a revival interest. I had one meeting at Sand Point. A good many were out, and gave excellent attention. At Jordan Bay I had one meeting, and then went back to Shelburne, and put up at car old friend Swansburg's, where I was kindly entertained by him and wife.

Next to Port Latour, by invitation from Bro. Smith, an Adventist, where I was kindly entertained by him and family, and helped on the way. Had two meetings there. Some were interested to hear. Thence to Cape Island. Some of the people were anxious that we should have a meeting in the Freewill Baptist meeting-house, but their minister was opposed; so I had the meeting at a private house. I had a little company out, and good attention. Had some conversation with Dr. Clark, of the place. He signed for the Crisis. Called on Eld. Oram Aygyle, Freewill Baptist. He treated me kindly, and told me that I could have the meeting-house where he preached. He also signed for the paper. Next to Yarmouth, but there was no meeting house to be obtained in which to speak on the fulfillment of prophecy, and the soon coming of Christ; so we hired a hall. I requested the ministers to give notice of my meeting, but they did not see fit to do it. But few were out to hear, except a few believers in the soon coming of the Lord.

Arrived at home after an absence of about twelve weeks, during which I had some good hard times in sounding the alarm of the judgment at hand. Some believed and some believed not. In most of the places they never heard but little of our views. I traveled some nine hundred miles. Expenses in hiring halls, notices of meetings, and stopping at public houses, $25.00. What I received in collections and otherwise, $31.00 for three months, leaving $6.00 to support my family. Bro. J. B. Fitch carried me free of traveling expense with his team about seven hundred miles. May the Lord reward him. Hope that some good was done in the name of Jesus. The alarm should be sounded all over this province. It will cost something. Who will pay the expense? What is done must be done quickly. WM. M. INGHAM.

Clementsport, N. S., July 28th. 1866.

P. S.—I am now in hopes of being at the campmeeting, if I can get something to go with. Money is scarce here. W. M. I.

From Sr. M. H. Morrison.

BRO. GRANT:—After an absence of four weeks, we arrived at home, on the third of April. The following day I visited Sr. Fleck, and found her near the gates of death. She survived until the 12th, when she quietly fell asleep in Jesus. About twenty-six years ago, she was baptized into Jesus Christ by my husband; and it fell to his lot to preach her funeral sermon also. She was a native of Ayrshire, Scotland. She was eighty-one years of age. Forty-five years ago, she came to Canada with her husband and family. The first visit of cholera to Montreal claimed her husband for one of its victims; leaving her a poor widow with a small family. Some years after, the misfortune of fire left her houseless. So, like many others, she had her perplexities and troubles. But amidst them all, she trusted in the God of Jacob, who has promised to be "a father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widow." It is due to her memory, to say she took much interest in teaching and instructing the young. I would have written the above sooner, but sickness prevented.

New Glasgow, C. E. M. H. MORRISON.

BRO. J. H. H. VAN SPANCKEREN writes from Pella, Iowa:—"I wonder that none of your traveling preachers never come in this direction, as Pella and the surrounding country would be a good field to work in."

Obituaries.

CHAMBERS. Died June 2d, 1866, at Carlisle, England, Thomas Chambers, aged forty-three years and seven months.

The subject of this notice was converted to Christ, and our faith, in Roxbury, Mass., (where he lived) about fifteen years since. From the time of his espousal of the cause of Jesus Christ, it has been his meat and drink to do the will of God. He was always ready to confess his faith in meeting and out of meeting; in short, he was a living christian at home, in the shop, and among his neighbors.

December 24th, 1865, he was attacked with paralysis, which affected his mind, and prostrated him entirely. By the request of his relatives in Europe, and the advice of his physician and friends here, he took passage in a steamer from New York the 31st of March last; reached Liverpool on the 11th of May, 1866. On his arrival among his relatives, with medical assistance, he seemed to rally, and all were encouraged; but it was only to be disappointed. Death had marked his victim, and on June 2d he fell asleep in Jesus.

"Blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

He has left a beloved companion, with six young children, in needy circumstances, to mourn and weep for one they loved dearly, and on whom they depended for support. May the blessing of the Lord rest upon them, fulfilling that promise, "I will be the widow's God and a Father to the fatherless."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool July 28th, Queenstown 29th.

The Liverpool correspondent of the Associated Press says the Atlantic cable was completed from shore to shore on the 27th. The line was reported working well and with increased speed between Ireland and Newfoundland.

The Italie of Florence states that the negotiations for the conclusion of an armistice have led to the result of satisfying the dignity and interest of Italy.

The same paper says France has recognised the right of the inhabitants of Venetia to dispose of their own destiny.

Austria is said to have withdrawn her demands in reference to intervention on the part of the Catholic powers in the Roman question. The question of the Tyrol is also reported to be satisfactorily settled.

The peace negotiations will take place directly between Italy, Austria and Prussia.

London, July 29. The following is given as the basis of an arrangement by which the armistice has been prolonged: The territorial integrity of Austria shall be maintained, except Venetia. Austria accepts the formation of the Northern confederation under Prussia. Saxony and the Southern States preserve their territories and will be a free group by themselves according to their pleasure. Austria pays Prussia an indemnity of seventy-five million francs. Schleswig is to be ceded to Prussia and Holstein pays part of the expenses.

It is stated that the Prussians bombarded Wurtzburg on the 27th and were repulsed with a loss of sixteen guns. The town suffered little damage.

The Patrie states that the French iron-clad Doulon was ordered to get ready for sea immediately, destination unknown.

Rumors are current that if Frankfort does not pay the forced contribution immediately that the town will be entirely closed and no one allowed to enter or depart.

BY THE CABLE.

London, Aug. 5. Before the armistice had been extended to Bavaria the Prussian army had moved rapidly and secured a good footing. They are forcing a paper currency upon the people. By the agreement the Prussians are to occupy Wurtzburg, but the Bavarians are to retain the Fortress of Mentz. The Baden troops left it yesterday, and the Wurtemburg troops will leave it on the 8th instant.

The river Rhine is re-opened.

During the last three days the Austrians have been pouring into the Tyrol via Bavaria to the number of about forty thousand.

The Italian Navy is to be reconstructed.

A new Italian loan of three hundred and fifty million lira has been ordered since the signing of the truce.

The cholera is increasing in England.

London, Aug. 7. Prussia has positively declined the proposals of Russia for a Congress of the Powers which signed the treaty of Vienna.

Vienna, Aug. 6. It is expected that a definitive treaty of peace will soon be signed by the Austrian and Prussian plenipotentiaries at Prague. Italy is not included. If the difficulty relative to the armistice with Italy is not arranged, in a few days hostilities will be resumed.

France takes no part in the pending armistice. Austria and Italy, if it can be arranged, will hold a separate peace conference, with the concurrence of France, and it will probably meet at Paris.

London, Aug. 8. The relations between the governments of Austria and Italy are assuming a threatening attitude.

London, 9. There is great exitement here this evening at a supposed attempt to blow up both Houses of Parliament. Ten packages of gunpowder with a fuse partially burned were found near the entrance to the Lord Chamberlain's office in the House of Lords. The members of Parliament have visions of another Guy Fawkes gunpowder plot.

London, Aug. 10th. Napoleon has asked from Prussia an extension of the frontier of France.

London, Aug. 9. The war in Europe is probably not ended. The military and naval preparations of France point to hostile intentions on the part of Napoleon if his demands for the extension of the frontier of France to the Rhine are not peacefully complied with.

Authentic information from private sources confirm the following, just received:

Paris, Aug. 9. The French cabinet has addressed a note to the Prussian government pointing out that the great changes in the political organization of Germany render it necessary that the French frontier should be rectified by an accession of territory to France. The French Cabinet made yesterday a further communication to the Cabinet at Berlin demanding a restoration of the frontier as it existed in 1814.

Florence, Aug. 9. The suspension of hostilities between Italy and Austria, it is expected, will expire on the 11th inst., at 4 P. M.

A perfect understanding exists between Italy and France with reference to the cession of Venetia.

A Berlin dispatch of the 10th says there is great excitement there in consequence of the demand of France on Prussia. M. Benedetti left Berlin for Paris on the evening of the 9th.

A Royal decree has been published promulgating the Italian Constitution in Venetia and terminating the concord between Austria and the Holy See.

London, Aug. 13, Noon. The armistice between Italy and Austria, which expired on Saturday, has been renewed four weeks.

The official Berlin paper opposes the claim of France for an extension of its frontier.

The Czar of Russia has visited the United States squadron at Cronstadt.

DOMESTIC.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 6. Some twenty cases of cholera are reported to the Board of Health since Saturday, mainly persons from the South. Several deaths have occurred.

Cincinnati, Aug. 7. Twenty-nine deaths from cholera were reported at the office of the Board of Health yesterday. The total number of deaths from cholera since August 1 is 79.

New York, Aug. 7. Nineteen cases and four deaths by cholera were reported yesterday in this city. Another cholera hospital is to be opened up town.

Cincinnati, Aug. 9. There were 27 deaths from cholera yesterday.

New Orleans, Aug. 11. There were 25 deaths from cholera in this city for the twenty-four hours ending at 6 A. M. to-day.

Physicians pronounce it the Asiatic cholera in its worst form. The disease is principally confined to the negroes who live in the uncleanly parts of the city.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 11. Twenty-six cases of cholera were reported by the Board of Health for the twenty-four hours ending at noon, six of which proved fatal.

Philadelphia, Aug. 12. The report of the Board of Health shows 43 cases of cholera and 9 deaths for the week ending yesterday. The disease has almost entirely disappeared within the last two days.

New York, Aug. 12. The official returns of the Board of Health for yesterday, show a gratifying decrease of the cholera in this city. Only three new cases were reported. The mortality report for the week, it is believed, will not exceed 800 deaths from the same cause. There had been no deaths for the 24 hours preceding at the public institutions from cholera. Twenty-eight cases and 11 deaths were reported in Brooklyn for the same period, with a slight increase in the number of the sick on Governor's Island. The health of the troops on David's Island is excellent.

Cincinnati, Aug. 10. There were 81 deaths in this city yesterday, 49 being from cholera.

A Beaufort correspondent writes that up to last Wednesday there were over 200 deaths from cholera out of 490 soldiers on Tybee Island, and two cases in Savannah.

New York, Aug. 10. Gen. John H. Gleason, Capt. Condon and Major Comerford, have arrived from Ireland. The two former were released by the British Government on condition of leaving at once for America. While confined they had correspondence with Mr. West, United States Consul at Dublin, who admitted that they were American citizens, but stated that the Lord Lieutenant would deal with them the same as ordinary subjects. Major Comerford comes as an envoy to Mr. Stephens, and says the numerical strength and hopes of the Fenians in Ireland are better now than when Mr. Stephens left; that the people are determined to fight, aid or no aid from America; that their confidence in Mr. Stephens is unabated; and that they condemn the conduct of the factions in America.

James Stevens, the Head Centre of Fenianism, is to start on a Western tour during the present week. An unusual degree of activity has prevailed among his wing of the brotherhood lately, but nothing has been furnished for publication.

New York, Aug. 7. An Ottawa (Canada) dispatch says another Fenian invasion is expected, and preparations to meet it are actively making.

ASPY BAY, N. S., Aug. 12—5.30 P. M. The cable across the Gulf of St. Lawrence was again picked up at nine o'clock this morning, the weather being fine. The splice was made by Mr. Charlton and the steamer headed for the shore. The cable will be landed at eight o'clock this evening, when communication via the Atlantic cable will be almost instantaneous between the United States and Europe.

Aug. 12.—9 P. M. The cable across the Gulf of St. Lawrence is in complete working order.

A SWARM OF LOCUSTS.—The Holy Land is again visited this year with a plague of locusts. A letter writer says: "The valley of Urtas was first attacked, and has now become a desolate wilderness. The olive-yards of Bethlehem, Beitjalah, and Jerusalem were next covered until the trees became a dull red color. They are now barked white. But yesterday (June 1) will be a day long remembered. From early morning till near sunset the locusts passed over the city in countless hosts, as though all the world were let loose, and the whirl of their wings was as the sound of chariots. At times they appeared in the air like some great snowdrift, obscuring the sun, and casting a shadow upon the earth. Man stood in the streets and looked up, and their faces 'gathered blackness.' At intervals those which were tired or hungry descended on the little gardens in the city, and in an incredibly short time all that was green disappeared. They ran up the walls, they sought out every blade of grass or weed growing between the stones, and after eating to satiety, they gathered in their ranks along the ground or on the tops of the houses. It is no marvel that as Pharaoh looked at them he called them 'this death.' To-day (June 2) the locusts still continue their work of destruction. One locust has been found near Bethlehem measuring more than five inches in length. It is covered with a hard shell, and has a tail like a scorpion."

AUSTRIA FINESSING.—A London correspondent of a New York paper says he has heard the opinion expressed by persons closely connected with the Austrian Embassy, and in a position to form an accurate judgment of the policy likely to be pursued by the Emperor Francis Joseph, that the signature of an armistice is only a pretext to gain time, and that during the interregnum preparations will be made to resume hostilities, with an immense army concentrated in the north and fully armed with the famous "needle-gun," to which Prussia is said to be indebted for her splendid victories.—Boston Journal.

☞ Jefferson Davis is said to be gradually going down to the grave in a deep decline. A writer in a Memphis journal observes; "Mark my prediction! The only trial that Mr. Davis will ever have will be at the bar of Eternal Justice."

THE SECRET OF THE NEEDLE GUN DISCOVERED.—The peculiarity of the gun is a secret preparation for igniting the powder next the ball, instead of at the rear of the powder, by which the powder is all consumed and the greatest possible force is given to the charge. It is said, also, that only one person is in possession of the secret, and he is constantly guarded by a force of twelve men from the regular Prussian army, to keep him from imparting it to others.

GARIBALDI'S HEALTH FAILING.—A Paris paper states that the health of Garibaldi is very bad. His legs are so thin and weak that it is painful to see them. He is pale, and bears on his countenance the traces of suffering. His rheumatic pains have returned at the very time he got his second wound. He can only move about in a carriage and is only sustained by the energy of his will.

SOCIETY IN KENTUCKY.—A Kentucky letter says:—"We cannot pick up a Kentucky paper but what we see an account of some terrible affray with pistols or knives. The city of Louisville alone will average a murder a day, and in twelve country towns it is just as bad. Now, what is to be done? We venture to say that eight out of ten of the young men of Kentucky carry weapons, and use them when there is an opportunity, too. As a Kentuckian it is a source of much mortification that this state of affairs exists. Where it will end God only knows. We hope our next Legislature will take some strict action in this matter for the credit of the State."

ITEMS.

☞ A violent epidemic, resembling yellow fever, has made its appearance in the department of of Santa Cruz de la Sierra, and if report be true, has caused frightful ravages among the sparse population of that distant mountain region. It is affirmed that, without any exaggeration, in less than sixty days about 400 persons have died out of a population barely 12,000, from the terrible disease.

☞ The physicians in England have organised a society, which consists of members of all societies, and which has for its object to warn persons against the use of tobacco as an immoral habit.

☞ Just as the Calvary Church of Washington was concluding service last Sunday morning, a woman arose and proclaimed in a loud voice, "that in February 1869, the world would be destroyed and Satan bound." She then modestly retired.

☞ Medicinal herbs for family use should be saved just as they are coming well into bloom. Cut them when not wet with rain or dew, and cure them in the shade where there is a good circulation of air. When sufficiently dry, pack them away in paper or muslin bags, with labels of the name of the plant and the year of gathering.

☞ The Tycoon of Japan has sent a valuable present to Napoleon, consisting of 15,000 cases of silkworms, more prized, inasmuch as it has been clearly proved that Japanese silkworms produce a superior quality of silk, and are less liable to the diseases which have of late years caused so much distress to the silkgrowers of the South of France.

☞ To start a balky horse, fill his mouth with dirt, or gravel, from the road, and he'll go. Now do not laugh at this, but try it. The plain philosophy of the thing is—it gives him something else to think of. We have seen it tried a hundred times, and it never failed.

☞ Sir Matthew Hale, as upright a judge as England ever had, in his letters to his children said, "If I omit praying and reading a portion of God's blessed word in the morning, nothing goes well with me all the day."

☞ At St. Amant, France, a boy was playing in a farm yard, when he fell headforemost into a water cask. A colt, three years old, which he had been in the habit of feeding, was seen to take the boy's clothes in his mouth, and lift him out.

☞ A German living in Boston has perfected a method of lighting the street lamps by electricity. All can be lighted at one instant or separately.

☞ One of the milestones erected by Benjamin Franklin, when he was Postmaster General, and was measuring the stage road between Philadelphia and Boston, is still standing in Stratford, Connecticut.

☞ An exchange relates a Shaker discovery, that washing the head with cold black tea once or twice a week will keep the hair from falling off, prevent its growing gray, and give it a fine, lively lustre.

☞ A wide awake minister, who found his congregation going to sleep one Sunday before he had fairly commenced, suddenly stopped and exclaimed. "Brethren, this isn't fair; it isn't giving a man half a chance. Wait till I get along a piece, and then if I ain't worth listening to, go to sleep; but don't go before I get commenced; give a man a chance."

Advent Christian Association.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of this Society will be held at Wilbraham, commencing Tuesday, Aug. 21st, 1866, at 4 o'clock P. M.

The business to be transacted at these meetings has now become too well understood to need explanation, and the importance of a general attendance sufficiently felt without a word of exhortation.

Each church shall be allowed one delegate, and one additional delegate, for every fifty members above the number of twenty-five members.

H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

American Advent Mission Society.

The Second Annual Meeting of the American Advent Mission Society, for the election of officers, and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before them, will be held on Wilbraham Camp-ground, Thursday, Aug. 23d, 1866, at 4 o'clock P. M.

All delegates to, and officers of, the Advent Christian Associations, East and West, and all ministers in good standing, co-operating with, and are members of the Mission Society, and entitled to a voice in its proceedings. A general attendance of ministers and delegates is required.

Come, brethren, with a spirit of earnest prayer for God's blessing upon our mission work.

WM. B. IZERMAN, Secretary.

Alton Bay Campmeeting.

Providence permitting, a general campmeeting will commence at Alton Bay, N. H., Saturday, Aug. 25th, holding through the week, and over the following Sunday. Ample accommodations will be provided for board and horsekeeping. Board at 60 cents per day; single meal, breakfast or supper 25 cents, dinner 35 cents. The boarding department and general lunch stand will be under the charge of Bro. J. S. Moulton.

Arrangements have been made with the railroad and steamboat companies as follows: Passengers from Boston, and on the line of the Boston and Maine R. R., by taking trains that leave Boston at 7.30 A. M., 12 M., or 3 P. M., via. Dover and Winnipiseogee R. R., will go through to Alton Bay without change of cars. Half fare from Lawrence. We are sorry to say that we have been unable to get a reduction of fare from Boston to Lawrence; so our friends should be particular on every train to make themselves known to each other, and arrange with some Bro. to take the number of tickets wanted, and have him, on the arrival of the train at Lawrence, procure all the tickets, as there will not be time for each one to purchase for themselves. Passengers from Newburyport will take trains leaving there at 7.30 A. M., or 11 A. M., half price. Passengers from Great Falls will take trains leaving there at 8.40 A. M., or 3 A. M., half fare. Passengers from Portland, and on the line of the P. S. and P. R. R., will take the trains leaving Portland at 8.40 A. M., or 2.50 P. M., and change cars at Dover. Fare reduced one third.

On the Concord and Nashua, and Concord and Portsmouth roads, they are to have tickets at Nashua, Manchester, and all stations on the Portsmouth road, at a reduction of one third from the regular fare. Parties may go to Newmarket Junction or Concord as they prefer. Trains leave Portsmouth at 6.30 A. M., and 4.40 P. M. Trains leave Manchester at 8.15 A. M., and connect at Newmarket Junction.

We have had encouragement that the fare would be reduced on the Boston, Concord, and Montreal R. R., but have been unable to get an answer in season for this week's notice, but shall expect to get one that it is reduced so as to inform you next week.

Arrangements have been made with the Steamers to carry to the meeting for half fare. Capt. Sanborn will carry all from the Wier's Saturday, Aug. 25th, Monday 27th, and Tuesday 28th, that wish to go, direct to Alton Bay; and come, and take all that wish to return Saturday, Sept. 1st, and Monday, Sept. 3d. An extra train will run during the meeting from Dover to Alton Bay, leaving Dover at 8.15 A. M., and return directly after preaching in the afternoon. For the committee,

J. G. SMITH.

Proposed Tent Meetings in Ohio.

At a conference held at Norwalk, Ohio, on the 2nd and 3rd of June, 1866, among other things it was unanimously voted, "That we recognize Bro. Jonas Wendall, of Edinboro, Pa., as an Evangelist for Ohio, and that we concur in the proposed arrangement for Brs. Wendall and Brown to hold a series of tent meetings in this part of the State the present season, and will co-operate with, and render them all the aid we consistently can in carrying out that object; and that we commend them to the favorable consideration of the brethren and the public generally, as worthy of support."

Notice.

The "Advent Tabernacle" will be pitched at Monroe, Wis., or Brodhead, Wis. (as Eld. Hitchcock shall decide), Aug. 18th, and meetings continue several days. WM. SHELDON.

Notice.

I did not know until last week, that there was a quiet country tavern in Boston. I heard no swearing, saw no drinking, had a good room and bed for 50 cents a day, and paid for what I ate, which was about 60 cents a day. This is just the place for our people, coming to Boston to stop one day, or longer. Only $1 to $1.25 a day, and just as good fare for a christian as a genteel house, where you will pay from $3 to $6 a day. This is the Marshall House, near the Crisis office.

HIRAM MUNGER.

For the World's Crisis.

LIFE.

I often times grow weary
Amid earth's gathering gloom,
And the world looks dark and dreary,
And I long for the new earth's bloom.

Here pain and death surround us,
And sin is everywhere;
And our hearts are oftened saddened
With watching, strife and care.

And footsteps oft go halting
Along life's rugged way;
We feel like pilgrims weary,
Who for thy coming pray.

For in the Eden fair restored,
No pain or death may come
To mar the fields of light
Where God's redeemed shall roam.

No tears shall dim our eyes
For loved ones lying low;
Death, ever banished from the place,
No longer is our foe.

Oh, may we all be faithful,
And watching unto prayer,
That when our Savior cometh,
We may his kingdom share.

Big Patch, Wis. SUSAN A. ISBELL.

For the World's Crisis.

THE DESIRE OF MAN.

Man was made for happiness; and the desire for it is universal among all mankind. Man is capable of happiness, but how can it be obtained? Is there anything to be derived from the world that will supply this longing desire of our nature? If worldly amusement could supply this desire, the present generation could justly claim to enjoy it to a degree greater than obtained by any previous people since the beginning of time. Theatres, drinking saloons, watering places, minstrels, concerts, and gambling dens, were never as numerous as now. The large cities are thronged with pleasure-seekers. The Lord's day is turned into a day of amusement; and pleasure-seekers flock to every place of resort on that day. The rich and poor are all hungering, with an insatiable desire for pleasure, forgetting that life is like a vapor that vanishes before the morning sun. Who ever saw a pleasure-seeker that was satisfied? Go ask the actor,—who delights the people every night, and draws crowds to the foot of his throne,—if he possesses all the happiness he desires, and he will quickly answer in the negative. A noted French comedian, who amused crowds nightly with his beautiful comic delineations, was himself a stranger to happiness. He was so depressed that life itself became intolerable. At last he visited a physician to seek relief. The doctor told him to go and see Reveille play, assuring him if he did not derive benefit from that, his case was hopeless. "Alas!" exclaimed the actor, "I am he!"

All this goes to show clearly the insufficiency of worldly things to satisfy the prevailing desire for happiness. Lord Byron, at the very pinnacle of his fame, was not satisfied with his portion of happiness. He can answer for himself:

"In vain my lyre would lightly breathe
The smile that sorrow fain would wear;
But mocks the woe that lurks beneath,
Like roses o'er a sepulchre.

Though gay my companions o'er the bowl
Dispel awhile the sense of ill;
Though pleasures fire the maddening soul,
The heart, the heart, is lonely still."

Any quantity of proof could be adduced to show the insufficiency of the things of this world to satisfy the desires of the heart. All this corroborates the declaration of the prophet, "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked"; but they are "like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." If the things of this world cannot allay the desire of the heart, where shall we look for it? Thank the Lord, we are not left in darkness.

Did you ever conceive what perfect happiness our forefathers possessed in their innocence, before the tempter entered Eden's bowers? They stood there in all their blessedness, a little lower than the angels in heaven. Nothing but love divine filled their being, and their supreme enjoyment consisted in communion with God. But the prince of darkness prevailed upon them, by his cunningly devised reasoning, to partake of the forbidden fruit; and by that single act of disobedience their glory departed from them, and their happiness vanished like a dream. But God had compassion upon mankind. He sent his only begotten Son, who took upon himself the nature of man, and suffered anguish and death, to present the gospel scheme of salvation, to restore the happiness forfeited by the fall. When he was about to take his departure from his sorrowing disciples, he consoled them with the assurance that the Comforter would be sent to abide with them. On the day of Pentecost, they realized the fulfillment of that promise. They were made partakers of such happiness as the world never saw since the transgression. All true believers received the pentecostal baptism; the love of God shed abroad in their hearts, and made to rejoice with joy unspeakable. All possessing this joy of the Holy Spirit are enabled to rejoice in every condition of life. Paul and Silas, with their feet made fast in the stocks in the inner prison, could rejoice in the Comforter, and sing praises to God. In the secret recesses of the Catacombs, the early christians could assemble and rejoice with far more happiness than did their persecutors, who engaged in the festivities of their banqueting halls. The martyrs, possessing this joy of the Comforter, could march boldly to the stake, and praise God amid the flames. In this we see the affirmations of the Psalmist confirmed,—"Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God"; "yea, happy is that people whose God is the Lord."

Beloved reader, are you a possessor of this happiness? Have you the joy in your heart that will enable you to march fearlessly to the martyr's stake, and sing praises to God amid the seething flames? Have you the love of God that will enable you to rejoice in every tribulation of these perilous times? If you have not, you will need it. The black, fearful cloud is gathering that will try the hearts of men. The days are not far distant that will test the faith of God's people. They will come. Nothing can hide you from their surging waves. Ah! if you but have the joy and faith of Paul and Silas, all will be well. You can welcome the tribulations with joy in the Lord; and be willing to suffer in prison or at the stake for his glory.

If you have not this joy, this fulness of redemption, oh! for the love of all that is dear to life and eternity, flee from the wrath that is treasured up. Continue no longer to hew out for yourselves "cisterns, broken cisterns, which hold no water." Flee to Jesus, and seek the fulness of salvation. Place thyself upon the altar, a living sacrifice, and the altar will sanctify the gift. Then shall "thy peace be as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea." WM. H. SIMMONS.

For the World's Crisis.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

Thank the Lord, that the Sunday School subject is still agitated. Let this agitation be kept up, until we shall have Sunday Schools where Jesus is held up as the source of immortality, all over the land. A few things are necessary. 1st. A place of meeting. A little shop, a room in a private house, a small hall, or a chapel, will serve the purpose. 2nd. Scholars. Two scholars are enough for a Sunday School, if you can not find more who will attend. 3d. Teachers. There is more difficulty experienced in getting teachers, than in gathering in scholars. But there must be teachers. 4th. A missionary spirit. Every one who loves our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, has more or less of this spirit. This will lead you out into the nooks and corners, into the highways and by-ways, into the garrets and cellars, into the sheds and shanties, and into the hedges. 5th. Faithful, persistent prayer and effort, which will be found to avail much. 6th. A love for the perishing, that will set us to work to win souls to Christ. 7th. Self-denial. By which we can give up that extra Sunday nap, and spend one full day in the service of the Lord. Others might be added, but this may suffice.

Since this subject has been agitated, some new schools have sprung up. Difficulties have been surmounted, and obstacles removed. Who in the fear of God will start the next? Some large churches have been destitute of Sunday Schools at times, for want of interest in the adult portion of these societies. Children have thus got discouraged, and left for other schools, where they received kind attention and instruction. I would suggest that, as a help in this direction, missionary societies be formed. There need not be much machinery about them. The simpler the arrangements, the better will be their operation. In every village, town, and city, where there is a body of believers who are looking for the Lord Jesus Christ from heaven, one of these societies may be formed.

Any number of persons from two, or one if you please, and upwards, who love Christ, may comprise this society. All must be active members. If your school room or hall is not in the neighborhood where the poor chiefly reside, then rent a little place in the neighborhood where they live. Then go singly, or in couples, among these poor families, and learn whether their children go to Sunday School or not. Gather in those who do not attend school anywhere. Have a weekly meeting to report progress. Have a Sunday School fund to pay rent and other necessary expenses. Supply the school with the "Young Pilgrim." Visit the scholars at their homes as often as once in two weeks. Gather together cast-off clothing etc., to cover the little ones. Appoint your Superintendent and teachers from your midst. Let the weekly meetings abound in prayer for the direction of the Holy Spirit. Success will surely follow such efforts. May the Lord help his children to do more for the perishing. We reach many mothers and fathers through the children. "Time is short." "The Lord is at hand." "The night cometh when no man can work." The Devil is in earnest; let us be earnest too. I trust that we shall soon hear of twenty new Sunday Schools. May God bless all who engage, and those who are engaged in this heavenly work.

"Open wide the garden gate,
Let the little wanderers in;
Let them now no longer wait,
Though their lives are soiled by sin.
There is room enough for them
In the perfume laden bowers;
Room for many a sparkling gem
'Mid the gardener's living flowers.

"Take them from the sin-tossed flood,
Moor them at the Eden isle;
Sprinkled with atoning blood,
Theirs shall be an angel smile.
Shield them from the world's stern care;
Guide their little footsteps right;
Let them breathe the heavenly air;
Let them see its living light.

"Suffer them to come to Him,
Shepherd of the cherub band;
He can light the valley dim,
Leading from this desert land.
Nurtured with a kindly care,
All the weeds of sin kept down,
Precious fruit their lives shall bear,
Till they win the sparkling crown.

"And with golden harps in hand,
Glad'ning all that blest abode,
They shall shine, a star-gemmed band,
In the coronal of God.
Open then the garden gate,
Let the little wanderers in;
See the blessed Savior wait,—
Wait to save their souls from sin."

THE PROSPECT.

My heart was somewhat depressed last evening on reading the foreign news,—"War virtually begun," because this war, from all our means of judging, must break the world's peace, must rush Rome to its final ruin. If so, it must close up the times of the Gentiles, and usher in "His times, . . . who is the blessed and only Potentate." Glory to his great name! Glory to his blessed coming kingdom, forever and ever, amen! Well, as I read the programme of these glorious scenes, given in the sure word of prophecy, I see that Michael must first stand up; and so the "time of trouble" FOLLOWS.—Dan. 12: 1. Synchronous with that event, we have "the seventh trump," Rev. 11: 15; and the time of wrath FOLLOWING. This seventh trump is "the last trump." It is the close of the only Scriptural series of trumpets, and hence this seventh is the only one that can be the "the last." Just as the beginning of this series was by the first angel sounding the first trumpet; so the last trumpet is sounded by "the seventh angel." Rev. 8: 6-7; 11: 15; 1 Cor. 15: 52. Then the dead in Christ will be raised!

Then, again, the war impending is the war (more than a battle, as there may be many battles in this war) of "that great day of God Almighty."—Rev. 16: 14; 17: 14; 19: 11; 19: 17. But this great day of God has not yet come; for we are still in man's day. 1 Cor. 4: 3 (see Greek and margin.) Well, "that great and notable (appearing) day of the Lord" (Acts 2: 20) has its "day star," and "day dawn,"—its proper and divine introduction, its signal tokens, and its foretold sign in heaven, great and marvelous. The plagues, and wonders of the judgment day FOLLOW. You see the point. The war seems about to begin, while yet the signal from on high is held in abeyance. This occasions me surprise.

On reflection, I felt reproved for my momentary suspicion. All is working out God's plans revealed. There is time enough for God to justify his word. "The Scripture can not be broken." The conclusion to which we are compelled by all the evidence is, that "the first resurrection" may come in God's order, at any moment; in which, as by the lightning's flash, "we shall all be changed,"—"put on immortality,"—"bear the image of the heavenly," and enter on the endless, boundless scenes of the kingdom. Amen.

TO THE BRN. AND SRS.

Dear brethren and sisters:—As the time of our great annual gathering draws nigh, I feel there is great need of supplicating the throne of grace, with one heart and mind, for the Spirit of God to be with us; that God's children may gain the victory over the almost prevailing lethargy that benumbs our best efforts; a proof that Satan knoweth that his time is short. Let us be earnest also on behalf of those who care for none of these things, that some may be aroused to cast off the works of darkness and look for our Lord from heaven. I hope we shall hear from the brethren who preach on prophecy and the signs of the times, and that God will assist them to give the trumpet a certain sound, that all may learn their whereabouts in this world's history and prepare for the next great event. It seems to me if dispensational truth, accompanied with the Holy Spirit, will not arouse the slumbering virgins, awaken dead sinners, and comfort living, obedient children, nothing will.

O blessed, glad tidings! Do we realize that the probability is great, almost to a certainty, that we are living in the (1335th) thirteen hundredth and thirty-fifth year, and soon Daniel will stand in his lot, and all the sleeping saints awake, and with us be made immortal? What if Jesus should tarry so little longer, and this prove to be our last great gathering on this groaning earth! Let us double our diligence, lest our work be not all done, and we be found wanting when the Master comes. Will not some, who have a sufficiency of means, like Job search out the poor, and help to Wilbraham a poor brother or sister, who lack the means to go, that their spiritual strength may be renewed, instead of their hearts aching with bitter disappointment? Jesus will say, As ye have done to one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done to me. Let us do good unto all as we have opportunity, especially unto those who are of the household of faith; and persuade as many as possible of our friends and neighbors to go with us.

And here let me say a few words to my sisters, on whose shoulders the burden of making preparations will fall. It is displeasing to the Lord, and a great inconsistency (for Second Adventists especially), to prepare rich and expensive food and luxuries, to eat at campmeeting, and costly clothing to appear in, when we meet to receive God's blessing. But let us be clothed with humility, for God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble. If you pay no regard to your health, be temperate in all things, as becometh those who profess to have put off the works of darkness, and not walk after the flesh.

Who among us will draw back to perdition? O let us by prayer continually obtain wisdom and grace to walk consistently to the end; earnestly coveting more faith in God's sure word; then whether we are awake or asleep when Jesus comes, all will be well with us, and we will be happy subjects of that glorious kingdom which will be under the whole heavens. Your sister, ANNA HOUGH.

HOW TO BECOME MIGHTY IN THE SCRIPTURES.

"Source of wisdom—thou dost show
The debt of love to God I owe;
In thee my duty I may see,
And what kind heaven's done for me."

Friends beloved, do you wish to become powerful in God's truth, giants in holiness, strong in the Lord and in the power of his might?

1\. Study the Bible with prayer for enlightenment, for the quickening, sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit. We may read the Bible till gray, without that wisdom which cometh from above, and it will still be a dead letter. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is light, there is liberty.

"When . . . the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth."—John 16: 13.

2\. Read the Bible regularly. A good man of old says: "I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food." This is the true idea. The Bible is daily bread, to be taken regularly, that the seed may grow thereby.

3\. Read the Bible attentively. The meaning of the Bible is the Bible. Unless he that reads gets the meaning, it will not do him any good. Every word means something—every thought inspired is infinitely momentous. The Bible, in this respect, differs widely from all other books. In human authors there are imperfections, redundancies, things unmeaning, unimportant,—frequently erroneous. Not so of God's Book: every word has its appropriate, definite, and important meaning. "The words of the Lord are pure words: as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times."—Ps. 12: 6. In this holy book there is not a word too many, not a word too few; and consequences of infinite moment, touching our present and future welfare, hang on every syllable of God's truth. A fearful curse is denounced on every one who shall take from or add to this blessed volume. Beware, friends, in reading the Bible, how you read it—in what manner, with what spirit, with what motives. Read it for your life—your eternal life. Pass not over a single line, a single word, lightly or thoughtlessly. Stop! stop! think, meditate, pray; raise your heart to the Holy One; ask God to give you light, his Holy Spirit, wisdom from on high; open the eyes of your understanding, that you may behold glorious things, mighty things; know what he speaks, how he speaks, to whom he speaks. Bow the listening ear; hear for eternity, for life everlasting. Departing from this word, or placing wrong constructions upon a single passage, may lead to error, fatal, irretrievable!

The Bible is sufficient, amply, by taking heed thereto, to keep us safely in the path of every duty, make us wise unto salvation, perfect us in every good word and work, and finally land us safely on the banks of eternal deliverance, there to sing glory on glory forever and forever! We entreat you, dear readers, young and old, when you open this sacred volume, beware how you read, how you hear. Be sure to ask counsel of God, that every word may do its office work—be quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword. Ask God to strengthen your memory, your intellectual faculties, that these blessed truths of inspiration may find permanent lodgment, prove a lamp to your feet and a light to your path, that you may be able to exclaim with the Psalmist—"Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage forever; for they are the rejoicing of my heart. I have inclined mine heart to perform thy statutes alway, even unto the end. . . . Therefore I love thy commandments above gold, yea, above fine gold." Again, David says,—"Thy testimonies are wonderful: therefore doth my soul keep them." "Great peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them."

Readers, make yourselves mighty in the Scriptures. You do not know, you cannot know, till you have experienced it, what mines of comfort and consolation for every want, every condition, every circumstance, every trial in life, are to be found in these blessed pages. They have proved the support and joy of hundreds of thousands of saints in life and in death; and they will be the joy and the solace of millions more. Study, then, the sacred word; make it the man of your counsel. You will find it a great help if you can have the parallel passages before you; and if you can obtain a good CONCORDANCE, like Cruden's, or, better still, the Analytical Concordance of Eadie, in which the whole Bible is arranged under particular topics, you will be enabled to bring together the testimony of God on any of the great doctrines of the gospel more completely than you could otherwise do by weeks of study. "It is incredible," says Bishop Horsley, "to any one who has not made the experiment, what a proficiency may be made in that knowledge which maketh wise unto salvation, by studying the Scriptures in this manner (comparing text with text), without any other commentary or exposition than what the different parts of the Sacred Volume may mutually furnish each other."

"Father of mercies, in thy word
What endless glory shines;
Forever be thy name adored
For these celestial lines.
O may these heavenly pages be
My ever dear delight,
And still new beauties may I see,
And still increasing light."

A GENERAL LETTER TO THE PREACHING SISTERS, OF ALL DENOMINATIONS AND COLORS.

My dear Christian Sisters:—I send you this greeting,
As I cannot be with you at your conference meeting;
Peace be unto you, with mercy and favor,
And faith that's unfeigned from Jesus our Savior.
I'd gladly be with you if so it could be,
Your voices to hear, your faces to see;
I'm with you in heart, and for you will pray,
As you sit together in love for a day.
I hope you will gather (America's daughters)
From the East, and the West, and all other quarters,
To the Female Conference, to preach and to pray,
And lead precious souls to Jesus straightway.
No distinction of color, of Church, or of State,
Come, ye with dark faces, God's love to relate;
And ye who a visage more pale can present,
Come up to the feast and show yourselves sent.
Each one of your mission there make a "full proof,
And from all disunion, I pray stand aloof.

Please bring up no "hobbies," contention or pride,
Preach Jesus, the Lord, and him crucified.
Let the welfare of souls lie close to each heart,
From envy and scorn forever depart.
O that you may gather by dozens and scores,
Your voices unite on these earthly shores.
I bid you God speed in preaching salvation,
Oo speak of his love in the great congregation.
Invite ye the poor, the halt and the blind,
The gospel is free, pray leave none behind;
The rich, they may come, and as freely the slave,
And all have a crown who wisely behave.

The harvest is near, the trumpet will sound,
The dead will arise who sleep in the ground,
Red lightnings will flash, loud thunders will roll,
The heavens depart, wound up as a scroll.
Christ's kingdom is coming, it's now close at hand,
Proclaim it, my sisters, all over the land;
For sinners must die when the judgment shall come,
Persuade, O persuade them to seek them a home.
Yea, tell them of peace, of splendor and gold,
And the beautiful land of which prophets have told.
Of palm leaves of victory, and robes of pure white,
Of beauty and glory, and honor and light.
O come to the conference from the north and the South,
From the East and the West, with God's word in your mouth.

Yea, come, my dear sisters; come, dear Sister Mansfield,
Sisters Seymour and Higgins,* Mussey and Canfield;
Sisters Jennings and Warren, Sober and Rowell,
Anna E. Smith, Boyd, Benson and Powell;
Sisters Livingston, Henry, and Ougley and Munn,
M'Culloch and Saulpaugh, Weaver, Parker and Stone;
Sisters Wellcome and Brown, and Lincoln and Lee,
Manzer, Eldridge and Curry, we hope them to see.
Come ye to the meeting, Sisters Prescott and Crumb,
Sisters Leonard and Terry, (pray let none be dumb);
And dear Sister Whiteby,† may she come right along,
And give us a cheer with sermon or song.
Sisters Holdridge and Stalker, Carpenter, White,
Palmer and Heckney, and Howard and Bright;
Sisters Jane N. Smith, and Hamilton, Hay,
Sisters Iron and Carney, meet with us, I pray.
Mary R. Otis, (and her sister-in-law),
With Lucy her sister, whose face I once saw.
Sisters Duning and Brown,‡ Latham, Trusty also,
Andrews, Mather and Willard, whose hearts feel the "woe,"
(The woe of the gospel, as saith Saint Paul),
Sisters Hoxie and Gilbert, whom Jesus doth call.
Sister Adaline B. Smith, who lives in Lepoer,
And dear Sister Hitchcock, may she also appear.
Sisters Cooly and Fisk, who live in York State,
May they also be there, God's love to relate.
Sisters Chapman and Wheeler, come up to the feast,
Sister Morrison too, from Canada East.
Sister Robertson dear, from Scotland she came,
She "loveth our nation," and preaches Christ's name;
In preaching the Word, she'll tell us of "life
Only in Christ"; but 'twill gender no strife,
If we live to the Lord as near as we ought,
Who with his own blood redemption hath bought.
There are still many more whose faces are sable,
Whose names at this time to tell I'm not able.
The names I have given are some I collected
From nine different sects, as might be expected.
As pure christian UNION is the kind that I LOVE,
'Tis angel-like, Christ-like, and comes from above;
And leads us to bear each one with the other,
And look upon each as sister or mother;
Though in some points of doctrine we differ 'tis true,
And each to the line will feel they must hue.

Yours, LUCINDA A. MIRICK.

DELIGHTFUL MUSIC.

As the sound of music reaches my ear from a house near by, I think how much sweeter music will be heard when this old world shall have passed away, and the new earth is prepared for the everlasting home of the saints. I am getting somewhat more weaned from this world; for I see it is fast fading, and I believe it will soon pass away and be found no more. I do pray for grace to help me to be ready for that blessed day, when death shall be swallowed up in victory, and pain and care and poverty oppress no more. May we then join in the sweet songs of the redeemed, and meet with all the saints to part no more.

TO THE SCATTERED ONES.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say to the brothers and sisters, through the Crisis, that I am still in the straight and narrow way that leads to life. I have the confidence to tell them that the many prayers they have offered for me have not been offered in vain. What a true and blessed promise, that our labor shall not be in vain in the Lord. I am anxiously waiting for the time to come when I shall greet all God's children, never to be separated from them. I do feel that I love them, for I know that the Lord loves them. How hungry I am to hear something pertaining to our blessed hope, and how encouraged I should be. It is almost three months since I have heard a sermon that I considered worth hearing, or that has done me any good. How afraid the ministers are in these days, of preaching about the coming of the Lord. I should think they would accidentally speak of it, but not a word do I hear.

I hope soon to see Jesus. I long for the wickedness of the wicked to cease. I am weary of hearing his name reviled, one that I love so well, because he has done so much for me, who said to me, Thy sins which were many, I freely forgive. Blessed be his name forever! I am not discouraged. The time is too near for us to be weary of well doing. Brothers and sisters, do let us be faithful. I do not know that I shall have the privilege of meeting with you here again, and I must meet you there. How often I think of the happy seasons I have enjoyed with you; but alas! those days are passed and gone, never to return, and were it not for the hope of these trials ending soon, I should give up in despair. I rejoice to-day that this world allures me no longer. I never felt more like giving up all and consecrating myself wholly to the Lord than at the present.

I thank the Lord that I can have the privilege of calling upon him, and receiving his approbation, and none can hinder; and I can believe that he will come soon, even if I am obliged to keep the belief to myself. I shed tears now while writing this, that opposition should be my lot, but the Lord knows what is best for me. I must not complain. There are better days coming. Pray for me, that I may faithfully discharge my duty, and be ready at a moment's warning to answer when the Master calls for me. Your sister in the Lord. EMILY BOLLES.

CONSIDER IT WELL.

Have you attentively considered the great crowning truth, that Jesus is soon coming? Are you prepared for the great and terrible events which are about to transpire? Are you a half-hearted professor? If so, your christianity will soon fail you. It is the pure in heart that shall see God; the meek that shall inherit the earth; the willing and obedient that shall eat of the good of the land, and none others. God grant that you may not reap the fearful consequences of this lukewarmness in the service of God, but that you may lay all upon the altar, and become wholly consecrated to his cause.

Are you one that trembles at the thought of God's approaching day of wrath? See! there is Christ, who died for you. Confess your guilt, turn from the error of your ways, throw yourself unreservedly upon his mercy, and trust him alone for salvation. He will in no wise cast you out. Fear not; confess him now before the world, and he will confess you before the Father and the angels. O, make haste! delay not a moment, lest thou be destroyed with the ungodly, for their destruction is certain and inevitable. Come and be reconciled to God while it is an accepted time, and a day of salvation. God is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance.

"Oh, prepare to meet thy God!" The great and notable day of the Lord is at hand. This generation must witness the coming of our Savior. Any moment he may come. Is the bride prepared to receive him? Consider it well. O man! O woman! consider it well.—Prophetic Times.

CHRIST'S DEATH WARRANT.

The following is said to be a copy of the sentence against Christ, pronounced by Pontius Pilate.

This sentence was engraved on a Hebrew medal and sent to each tribe. It was discovered in 1280 in the city of Aquila, in the kingdom of Naples, and remained there until it was found by the commissaries of art who followed the French armies. It is now kept in the chapel of Caserta. The following is a literal copy of the sentence:

Sentence pronounced by Pontius Pilate intendant of the Province of Lower Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death by the cross.

In the seventeenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius, and on the 25th day of the month of March, in the most holy city of Jerusalem, during the pontificate of Annas and Caiaphas.

Pontius Pilate, intendant of the province of Lower Galilee, sitting in judgment in the presidential seat of the prætor, sentences Jesus of Nazareth to death on the cross, between two robbers, as the numerous and notorious testimonies of the people prove:

1. Jesus is a misleader.
2. He has excited the people to sedition.
3. He is an enemy to the laws.
4. He calls himself the Son of God.
5. He calls himself falsely the King of Israel.
6. He went into the temple, followed by a multitude carrying palms in their hands.

Orders the first centurion, Quirillus Cornelius, to bring him to the place of execution.

Forbids all persons, rich or poor, to prevent the execution of Jesus.

The witnesses who have signed the execution against Jesus are—

1. Daniel Robani, Pharisee.
2. John Zorobabel.
3. Rapahael Robani.
4. Capet.

MEN WANTED.

The great want of this age is men. Men who are not for sale. Men who are honest, sound from centre to circumference, true to the heart's core. Men who fear the Lord and hate covetousness. Men who will condemn wrong in friend or foe, in themselves as well as in others. Men whose consciences are steady as the needle to the pole. Men who will stand for the right if the heavens totter and the earth reels. Men who can tell the truth, and look the world and the devil right in the eye. Men that neither brag nor run, that will not swagger nor flinch. Men who can have courage without whistling for it and joy without shouting to bring it. Men in whom the current of everlasting life runs still, and deep, and strong. Men careful of God's honor and careless of men's applause. Men too large for sectarian limits, and too strong for sectarian bands. Men who do not strive, nor cry, nor cause their voices to be heard in the streets, but who will not fail nor be discouraged, till judgment be set in the earth. Men who know their message and tell it. Men who know their duty and do it. Men who know their place and fill it. Men who mind their own business. Men who will not lie. Men who are not too lazy to work, nor too proud to be poor. Men who are willing to eat what they have paid for. Men who know in whom they have believed. Men whose feet are on the everlasting rock. Men who are not ashamed of their hope. Men who are strong with divine strength, wise with the wisdom that cometh from above, and loving with the love of Christ. Men of God!—Ex.

TO PRESERVE HERBS.—All kinds of herbs should be gathered on a dry day, just before or while in blossom. Tie them in bundles, and suspend them in a dry, airy place, with the blossoms downward. When perfectly dry, wrap the medicinal ones in paper and keep them from the air. Pick off the leaves of those which are to be used in cooking, pound and sift them fine, and keep the powder in bottles, corked up tight. Dr. Page of Washington D. C., says that herbs should be bruised or crushed while in the green state, and then dried. When so treated they retain their color and odor for a great length of time.

PRUNING FRUIT TREES.—From now till October is a good time to prune fruit trees. We can better see what limbs are decaying than when the leaves are off. It is by far the best time to trim young trees, as you can often nip a shoot growing in the wrong direction and set it right towards the next year's growth. Plum and pear trees should now be headed in of their present year's growth, in order to develop fruit buds for the next year. Cut down old sickly trees with an unsparing hand.—Maine Farmer, Aug. 2.

For the World's Crisis.

CANCERS CAN BE CURED.

For the benefit of those who may be afflicted with that dreadful disease,-cancer, I wish to give some of the particulars respecting my own case of cancer; also of the means used which effected a cure. About the middle of last October, a singular looking sore made its appearance on my right thigh, quite small at first, but increasing quite rapidly in size, with red fibres running from it half way round my leg. As many felt alarmed about it, I was advised to have it attended to at once, which I did, applying to Dr. Solomon Lombard, of Standish, Me., who had had an experience of twenty-six years in doctoring cancers. He pronounced it the most stubborn kind (a fungus cancer.) Yet he thought it might be drawn out if attended to strictly, as I had taken it so soon after it made its appearance. I was confined at home about twelve weeks, and in about sixteen weeks was able to attend my meetings as usual.

His medicine effected a cure, and my object in giving the particulars with regard to my own case, is, that I hope it may save the life of many others, as I believe, with the blessing of God, it has saved mine. Dr. L. refuses to advertise, as there is so much spurious medicine advertised. The medicine he uses is wholly vegetable. It takes from five to ten days to extract a common cancer, and extreme cases as many weeks. The application he makes acts chemically upon diseased tissues, destroys the vitality of the cancer, and separates it from the surrounding parts. It causes an opening through the integuments for the escape of the tumor, if the ulcerated process has not commenced; or if it has, will occasion a sloughing of the tumor, and in either case will soon restore the parts to a sound and healthy state, when the constitution of the patient is not broken down by old age, or chronic disease.

Any persons wishing any information, can have it by addressing Dr. Solomon Lombard, North Windham, Me. J. T. JORDAN.

W. Poland Me.

DIPHTHERIA.

First give the patient a thorough warm bath, either by immersing the body in water heated to ninety-five degrees, in a common bathing-tub, or, where this is not at hand, have plenty of water in a large wash-tub, and, putting the patient in, let one or two attendants rub rapidly and thoroughly the entire surface for five or ten minutes; then wipe dry, using a great deal of friction, and put the patient immediately in bed, with hot bottles, or bricks, or sticks of wood to the feet and sides; these should be prepared beforehand, as it is essential to make the sufferer perspire as quickly as possible.

Next take a yard-square of flannel folded three or four thicknesses and place it across the bed, under the back of the neck; fold a large, soft towel so that it will cover the neck and upper part of the chest as far as the breasts, letting it come well around upon the sides of the neck; wet this in cold water and wring out very dry; place it upon the neck, and cover with a large dry towel, doubled to fit; then draw the flannel around so as to cover the whole in front; re-wet the towel as often as it becomes heated; keep a piece of ice in the patient's mouth all the time; this should be held as far back in the throat as possible, and allowed to remain there till it melts.

If there is much fever, a tepid wet-sheet pack should be given; wrap well in blankets and quilts, and place hot bottles or bricks around to induce perspiration; if the patient lies comfortable, let him remain two hours, or even more, feeding him with ice all the time and keeping cool cloths on the head. When the pack is removed, the patient should be thoroughly rubbed in a full tepid bath, or, what is quite effectual, a vigorous towel-bath may be administered. In this latter, a part of the body—say the chest and arms—should be unfolded, thoroughly rubbed with a wet towel till the effete matter is entirely removed from the surface, then dried and covered before another portion of the body is exposed. Proceed in this manner till the whole person shall have been thoroughly cleansed, then place him in a clean bed, with the wet cloths applied to the throat. The packs may be repeated as often as required, two or three times in a day being sometimes advantageous.

The hot hip-bath may be given for ten minutes from ninety-five degrees to one hundred and ten degrees, accompanied by a hot foot-bath; the patient should be entirely covered by a blanket, with an attendant rubbing the back, hips and abdomen during the bath.

If the inflammation of the throat is severe, the towel should be wrung out of ice-water, or pounded ice may be enveloped in it and applied, or in severe cases a piece of rubber-cloth may be spread upon the bed, with a large blanket over it, and towels filled with ice kept constantly on the throat, having it completely packed in ice. Whenever ice is applied in this way, warm blankets, hot bottles, etc., must be kept to the feet, legs and body, to keep them warm; the ice applications may be alternated with hot fomentations to the throat if there is a tendency to chilliness. Wash the whole body often, using friction enough to keep the circulation well to the surface; free injections should be given the first two or three days to clear the bowels thoroughly, and no food at all should be allowed till the inflammation subsides, and then only some light gruel or juice of fruits.

The object of this treatment is to keep the blood in other parts of the body, and by applying ice to the throat, keep down the local inflammation and swelling, and prevent the formation of the false membrane, until the poison can be worked out of the system through the skin, bowels and kidneys.

Above all things, avoid drugs! There is one poison already in the system, and beware of putting in another to make matters worse; let the vital force be directed to ridding the system of the diphtheritic poison, and not be expended in striving to rid itself of drugs.

I have known cases to recover under the above treatment after having been given up by drug physicians. If treated in this way from the first there would be but few fatal cases.—Herald of Health.

SLEEP NORTH AND SOUTH.

A learned German, in a recent work, says: "In sleep any position except north and south is disagreeable, but that from east to west almost intolerable, at least in our hemisphere. Probably in the southern hemisphere it is otherwise. The cause of this phenomenon can obviously be found only in that great magnet which is formed by the earth with its atmosphere—i. e., terrestrial magnetism. The terrestrial magnetism exerts on certain persons, both hearty and otherwise, who are sensitive, a peculiar influence wonderful enough to disturb their rest; and, in the case of diseased persons, disturbing the circulation, the nervous functions, and the equilibrium of the mental powers.

There are persons whom I know, the head of whose bed is to the north, and who, in order to wake early, will reverse their usual position in bed, but without knowing the reason why, beyond 'that they could always wake earlier,' the rest (sleep) being more broken. I have had it related to me that, at a military hospital in Russia, there were some sick patients of highly sensitive natures, and who were rapidly recovering. When necessity compelled them to be removed to another wing of the building they did not get on so well; in fact, prostration seemed to be setting in, and it was found advisable to get them back to their former wards as quickly as possible, where the heads of the beds were to the north. I have heard of horses going blind through changing their position from north to south to that of west to east."

THE CHEWER.

The worst form in which tobacco is employed is in chewing. This vegetable is one of the most powerful of narcotics; a very small portion of it, say a couple of drachms or less, received into the stomach, might prove fatal. When it is taken into the mouth in smaller portions, and there retained some time, an absorption into the system of part of it takes place, which has a most debilitating effect. If we wished to reduce our physical powers in a slow but certain way, we could not adopt a more convenient process. Who, among the chewers of tobacco, has not felt that deadly sickness which it occasionally produces? Those who have experienced these effects will not, I think, deny its great power of relaxing the animal system.

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.—The Leipsic (German) Journal publishes the following antidote for the bite of a mad dog, which it says was an exclusive secret with a Saxon forester, but who, growing old, was unwilling to let it die with him, and therefore procured its publication. He is said to have used it for fifteen years, and rescued many human beings from the fearful death of hydrophobia. The antidote:—Take immediately warm vinegar or tepid water; wash the wound clean therewith, and then dry it; then pour upon the wound a few drops of dydrochorlic acid, because mineral acids destroy the poison of the salava, by which means the latter is neutralized.

CURE FOR THE TOOTH ACHE.—Our little three year old girl had been almost distracted for several days and nights with toothache, when it occurred to us that we had heard of salt and alum being a certain cure. We at once made the application, a little pulverized alum mixed with an equal quantity of salt, a little placed on the end of the finger and applied directly to the diseased tooth. The effect was instantaneous, and the little one again restored to comfort, and since that time we have not heard the distressing cry, "Oh, my tooth aches."—M., in Farm Journal.

CURE FOR CANCER.—Take the juice of poke-weed berries, and dry it in the sun on a pewter platter. This dried juice will draw out the cancer by the roots. Then put on a healing plaster. It is now about time to gather the berries. The berries are dark purple, and hang in bunches some like grapes. The plant is also called cocum, garget, pigeon-berry, poke, and pocan. E. W. HALL.

TO CURE A FELON.—Shave the finger so as to nearly start the blood, then apply a poultice made of linseed oil and white lead. It will kill the felon within twenty-four hours, without the additional pain caused by other remedies.—Rural New Yorker.

SONG FOR WILBRAHAM CAMP-GROUND, 1866.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

AIR.—"We're tenting to-night," etc.

We're tenting to-night on the old camp-ground,
Singing our hymns of cheer;
And waiting ones are gath'ring 'round,
And friends we love so dear.

CHORUS.—Many dear saints are weary to-night,
As 'round the earth they roam;
Many are the hearts looking for the right,
Wishing the Lord to come.

Dear ones who knelt here in other years,
Will greet us here no more;
Jesus will wipe away the tears
Soon on the brighter shore.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

We're thinking to-night of the white robed band,
Who'll meet Him in the sky;
And live and reign in the better land,—
'Tis coming by and by.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

Shout! brothers, shout! on the old camp-ground,
Press toward the Eden bowers;
Soon with the Lamb on the sea of glass,
Victory will be ours.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

We'll fight for our King on the old camp-ground,
Rally, brothers, and pray;
The pure in heart will have the crown,
And reign in endless day.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

We're tenting to-night on the old camp-ground,
Singing our hymns of cheer;
And waiting ones are gath'ring 'round,
And friends we love so dear.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

"SIGNS OF THE TIMES."

The following is a sketch of some of the many reasons we have for believing that the second coming of our Lord is near, even at the doors.

1st. The gospel of the kingdom is acknowledged to have been "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations."—Matt. 24 : 14.

2nd. The great and leading events spoken of in Matt. 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21, preceding his coming, are in the past.

3d. The great tribulation of papal persecution during 1260 years, from about A. D. 532, bringing us down to the time of the darkening of the sun A. D. 1780, May 19th; also of the moon; and the falling of the stars, A. D. 1833, Nov. 13th, have all been wonderfully fulfilled.—Matt. 24.

4th. The fulfilling also of the prophecy of Joel, confirmed by Peter,—"And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke; the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come."—Joel 2; Acts 2: Ezek, 37 : 7; Rev. 6 : 12–17.

5th. The following signs recorded by Luke being fulfilled, bring us near to the time of his coming: "And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven." "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring. Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."—Luke 21 : 11, 25, 26.

6th. The fulfillment also of the events connected with the opening seals of Rev. 6: 12, 13. "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." This refers to one and the same class of events spoken of by the prophets, and confirmed by our Lord and his apostles, and all were fulfilled in their regular order. Luke 21 : 31.

7th. The chronology of the world (allowing Paul's time of the Judges to be 450 years,) brings us down near the six thousandth year, when, according to the united voice of the church for centuries past, the millennial day, or morning of the first resurrection, would be ushered in by the return of our long absent Lord, to establish the "everlasting kingdom" promised to the "little flock," and for which he taught his disciples to pray. Matt. 6 : 10, Luke 12 : 32, Dan. 2 : 7, Isa. 2 : 2–4, 11 : 35, 66, Ps. 72, 98 : 9, 100 : 101, 102.

8th. Being at the termination of the last of the four great universal monarchies of earth; and in the divided state of the ten kingdoms, where the image is smitten and becomes like the chaff, and the stone becomes a great mountain, and fills the whole earth; "but it (that kingdom) shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2 : 7, Rev. 11 : 15.

9th. The seven mystic times of Daniel fourth, typifying the fulfillment of Gentile times, embracing a period of 2520 years, and terminating at the present time. Dan. 4 : 23 : 25, Luke 21 : 24.

10th. A jubilee of jubilees from 651 B. C., Josiah's 18th year, terminating near the present time. 2 Chron. 35 : 18, 19.

11th. The fulfillment of the period of the 2300 years, from the renewal of sacrifices, 434 B. C., to the complete cleansing of the holy land, terminating at the present time. Dan. 8 : 13, 14; Neh. 12 : 13.

12th. The ending in A. D. about 1792 of the "time, and times, and the dividing of time," or 1260 years from near 532, when the saints were given into the hands of the Papal power; and being now at the very terminating point, or time of the end. Dan. 7 : 25, 26.

13th. The condition of the Papacy during the past seventy-five years most strikingly verifies the prediction,—"But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."

14th. The 1335 days, or years, from the setting up of "the abomination that maketh desolate," near 532, when the Papacy was established in power, terminating also at the present time. Dan. 12 : 11, 12; Matt. 24 : 15–30; Rev. 17 : 4–7.

15th. The secondary fulfillment of the forty-two months, or 1260 years from A. D. 606, when Pope Boniface was constituted head of the western church, apparently terminating also at the present time. Rev. 11 : 2, 13 : 5.

16th. The united declarations of the apostles and evangelists, that they had already entered on, or were already then in, the last days; and the next great event they looked forward to was the day of the Lord,—the coming of Christ. Heb. 1 : 2, 10 : 25, 37; Acts 2 : 16–20; 1 Pet. 4 : 7; 2 Pet. 3 : 3–17.

17th. The going forth to meet the Bridegroom, the different watches, and the midnight cry, so universally observed, proclaimed, and developed for the last twenty-five years.—Matt. 25 : 1–7; Mark 13 : 35; Luke 12 : 38.

18th. The professed servants being at ease, putting far away the evil day; who, instead of giving to the people dispensational truths, or "meat in due season," now are saying, "My lord delayeth his coming," and in carnal warfare smite their fellow servants; and also in numerous festivals, fairs, public suppers, etc., are eating and drinking with the drunken.—Matt. 24 : 44.

19th. The unparalleled increase of crime and wickedness, pride and selfishness, for the last few years, the world over, now most emphatically corrupt, and filled with violence, as it would be in the last days. 2 Tim. 3; Matt. 24 : 37, 39.

20th. The multitude of scoffers, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? . . . All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—2 Pet. 3 : 3, 4.

21st. The pride, worldly conformity, and lukewarm condition of the mass of the churches, at the present time; not discerning "the signs of the times," but appearing "willingly ignorant" of the same; and their almost entire rejection of the literal Bible doctrine of the personal return of Christ to reign on the earth. Ezek. 21 : 26, 27; Ps. 22 : 28.

22d. The universal time of peace and quietness, proclaimed some few years since, when no more war need be apprehended; but the world's conversion, and dawning of the latter-day glory was then beginning to be consummated. 1 Thess. 5 : 1–3.

23d. "The spirits of devils working miracles (wonderfully developed for the last few years), which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Immediately following in connection it is declared, "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth."—Rev. 16 : 13–15.

24th. The unsettled condition of things, and universal strife and commotion among the nations of earth, and their waking up and preparing for war on a greater scale than ever known in the past. Joel 3; Rev. 11 : 18, 14 : 15–20.

25th. It is stated as a remarkable fact that there is a general impression abroad in the world that the end of the present order of things is at hand. "This feeling is growing deeper and wider in all directions, among both Christians and Pagans." This increased rapidity of event following event, and apparent convergency of all things to a crisis or terminating point. Zeph. 1 : 14, 15; Heb. 2 : 1–3.

26th. The prophet Daniel (in connection with the time of the end) declares, "The wise shall understand." Our Savior, in referring to Daniel's declaration, says, "Whoso readeth let him understand."—Matt. 24 : 15; Dan. 12 : 10–13.

27th. The united belief and testimony of thousands at the present time, in this and other countries, and the universal declaration of those who have searched the Scriptures, and taken heed to the sure word of prophecy, that the great prophetic periods of Daniel and John are near, or at their termination. Dan., John, Rev.

28th. The signs in the physical, mental, and moral world; together with the unparalleled phenomena in the heavens, witnessed by this present generation; the darkening of the sun and moon; the moon turning to blood, and the falling of the stars; all occurring in the order given in the inspired Word, evidently bringing us down to the time of "distress of nations, with perplexity," or the "shaking of the powers of the heavens," when will "appear the sign of the Son of man"; all now proclaim in trumpet tones to a slumbering church, and sleeping world, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." The day is near, "the time is at hand."—Rev. 1 : 1–7. "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, KNOW that it (he) is near even at the doors."—Matt. 24 : 33; Rev. 6 : 12–17.

Dear brethren and friends, in what a solemn period of the world's history do we live! What other period can compare with this? Words fail to express the momentous interests pending on the decisions of an hour. What eternal consequences, hang on the improvement or misimprovement of this point of time, and the intervening space between us and the judgment. Is it not a solemn consideration that of those numbered with the of followers Jesus, even of those who will trim their lamps and go forth to meet the Bridegroom, only one half were ready and prepared for the event? There was but one thing lacking, and that was enough to exclude them from the marriage feast. Had they presumptuously entered with the rest, like the man who neglected a wedding garment, it would have availed them not. We want faith—true faith; that faith which works by love and purifies the heart. This requires closet work; yes, prayer and fasting also, it may be, to secure the blessing. Entire consecration of all to Christ, and being found in the position spoken of in Luke 12 : 32–40, will secure the prize. "And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you. To the end he may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints."—1 Thess. 3 : 12, 13. Brethren and sisters, who will be ready for the marriage supper? Will you? S. L. MANLEY.

THE SECRET OF EFFECTUAL SERVICE TO GOD.

Above all things, see to it that your souls are happy in the Lord. Other things may press upon you; the Lord's work, even, may have urgent claims upon your attention; but I deliberately repeat, it is of supreme and paramount importance that you should seek, above all other things, to have your souls truly happy in God himself. Day by day seek to make this the most important business of your life. This has been my firm and settled conviction for the last five-and-thirty years. For the first four years after my conversion I knew not its vast importance; but now, after much experience, I specially commend this point to the notice of my younger brethren and sisters in Christ. The secret of all true effectual service is—joy in God, and having experimental acquaintance and fellowship with God himself.

But in what way shall we attain to this settled happiness of soul? How shall we learn to enjoy God? how obtain such an all-sufficient, soul-satisfying portion in him as shall enable us to let go the things of this world as vain and worthless in comparison? I answer, this happiness is to be obtained through the study of the Holy Scriptures. God has therein revealed himself to us in the face of Jesus Christ.

In the Scriptures, by the power of the Holy Ghost, he makes himself known unto our souls. Remember, it is not a god of our own thoughts, or our own imaginations, that we need to be acquainted with; but the God of the Bible, our Father, who has given the blessed Jesus to die for us. Him should we seek intimately to know, according to the revelation he has made of himself in his own most precious word.

The way in which we study this word is a matter of the deepest moment. The very earliest portion of the day we can command should be devoted to meditation on the Scriptures. Our souls should feed upon the word. We should read it—not for others, but for ourselves; all the promises, the encouragements, the warnings, the exhortations, the rebukes, should be taken home to our own bosoms. Especially let us remember, not to neglect any portion of the Bible: it should be read regularly through. To read favorite portions of the Scriptures, to the exclusion of other parts, is a habit to be avoided. The whole divine volume is inspired, and by degrees should be read regularly through. But to read the Bible thus is not enough; we must seek to become intimately and experimentally acquainted with him whom the Scriptures reveal—with the blessed Jesus who has given himself to die in our room and stead. Oh! what an abiding, soul-satisfying portion do we possess in him!

But another point here needs especially to be noticed: it is that we seek habitually to carry out what we know—to act up to the light that we have received—then more will assuredly be given. But if we fail to do this, our light will be turned into darkness. It is of the deepest moment that we walk with a sincere, honest, upright heart before the Lord. If evil be practised, or harbored and connived at, the channel of communication between our souls and God (for the time being) will be cut off. It is all-important to remember this. Infirmities and weaknesses will cleave to us, as long as we remain in the body; but this is a different thing from willingly allowing evil. I must be able, with a true, honest, upright heart, to look my heavenly Father in the face—to say: "Here I am, blessed Lord; do with me as thou wilt."

Then let us remember that we are his stewards. Our time, our health, our strength, our talents, our all, are his, and his alone. Let us seek to remember this, and carry it out this year, and then what happy christians shall we be! It is a divine principle, "To him that hath shall more be given;" and as assuredly as we seek to make good use of that which is confided to us, more will be imparted. We shall be used of the Lord, and shall become increasingly happy in his own most blessed service. Brethren! we have only one life—one brief life; let us seek, with renewed purpose of heart, to consecrate that one life wholly to the Lord—day by day to live for God, and to serve him with our body, soul, and spirit, which are his.

Let it be our unceasing prayer, that as we grow older, we may not grow colder in the ways of God. As we advance in years, let us not decline in spiritual power, but let us see to it that an increase of spiritual vigor and energy be found in us, that our last days may be our best days.

Our holy faith does not consist in talking. "Reality, reality, reality," is what we want. Let us have heart-work; let us be genuine. Brethren! we should live so as to be missed—missed both in the church and in the world, when we are removed. Oh! how rapidly is time hastening on! We should live in such a manner as that, if we were called home, our dear brethren and sisters might feel our loss, and from their inmost souls exclaim: "Oh! that such an one were in our midst again!" We ought to be missed even by the world. Worldly persons should be constrained to say of us: "If ever there was a christian upon earth, that man was one."

But to revert to the Scriptures. In them, through the teaching of the Holy Ghost, we become acquainted with the character of God. Our eyes are divinely opened to see what a lovely being God is! and this good, gracious, loving, heavenly Father is ours—our portion for time and for eternity; and our adorable Lord Jesus, who gave himself for us, is that blessed One to whose image and likeness we shall be conformed; and to serve him should be our greatest joy and privilege as long as we remain on earth.

But then, when trial and affliction come—when God deals with us as though he were not the lovely, kind, and gracious Being presented to us in his word, shall we murmur and despond? Ah! no. Beloved in Christ, let us trust our heavenly Father; let us, like little children, hang entirely on him, reposing in the sweet assurance of his unchangeable, eternal love. Let us remember how he acted toward his saints of old—what his dealings were with them; let us remember what is recorded concerning their history; for now, as he ever has done, God will most surely act according to his word.

This intimate experimental acquaintance with him will make us truly happy. Nothing else will. If we are not happy christians (I speak deliberately—I speak advisedly,) there is something wrong. If we did not close the past year in a happy frame of spirit, the fault is ours, and ours alone.

In God our Father and the blessed Lord Jesus our souls have a rich, divine, imperishable, eternal treasure. Let us enter into practical possession of these true riches; yea, let the remaining days of our earthly pilgrimage be spent in an ever-increasing, devoted, earnest consecration of our souls to him.—George Muller.

O HOW I LONG, DEAR SAVIOR.

BY LOUISA L. SMITH.

O how I long, dear Savior, to dwell in heavenly rest,
Where not one wave of sorrow will e'er disturb my breast;
Where foes will ne'er my hope deride, where nothing false will be—
O how I long, dear Savior, to live and reign with thee.

Where saints will meet to part no more, and range those plains of light,
Breathe that pure and holy air, and walk with thee in white;
By faith I view the promised land; with patience may I wait,
Till thou, my Great Deliverer, shall all things new create.

My tried and tempted brethren, that holy clime is near,
And our great and glorious Captain will quell each rising fear;
While in this scene of conflict oh, keep your armor on,
And soon with all the faithful we'll join the holy throng.

That day is hasting greatly! aye, keep your armor on;
Soon with the shining ransomed we'll sing the new-born song;
And saints that now are sleeping in the cold and silent grave,
Will triumph o'er the monster Death, when Jesus comes to save.

PARADISE PROMISED TO THE PENITENT THIEF.

BRO. GRANT:—In the article entitled, "The Thief on the Cross has no promise of Paradise," from the Prophetic Watchman, published in Crisis of Aug. 1st, the reply of Jesus to the request of the thief is represented as a question: "Shalt thou be with me in Paradise?"

In the Greek language, as in the English, when a question is asked, some intimation of that fact is given, as you and many of your readers are aware. Sometimes the intimation is found in the preceding words; as, "Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews?" Luke 23 : 3. At other times an interrogative word is contained in the question itself; as, "What evil hath he done?" Verse 22.

In our language, the placing of the verb, or the auxiliary part of it, before its nominative, indicates a question; as, "Shalt thou be with me in paradise?" But the Greek does not follow this rule; because the meaning of a sentence is not so dependant, as it is with us, on the order of the words; but is sufficiently indicated by their flexible terminations; and the termination of the verb also renders it unnecessary to write the pronoun, except where emphatic.

If this passage were intended to be read as a question, it would contain, in the Greek, a small word used for the purpose, called by grammarians a particle. For example: Luke 18 : 8,—"Shall he find faith on the earth?" Ara heuresei tean pistin? Here the interrogative particle is ara. See also Acts 8 : 30, Gal. 2 : 17, Luke 22 : 49,—"Shall we smite with the sword?" Ei pataxomen en machaira? Here the interrogation particle is ei. See also Luke 13 : 23; and 14 : 3.

But in Christ's reply to the thief, no such interrogative particle is found in the Greek text; and nothing in the preceding words implies an interrogative. The passage therefore can not be read as a question; but must be read, omitting "to-day," as in the Revised New Testament, "Thou shalt be with me in Paradise." It is then—is it not?—a blessed promise to a penitent believer.

IS IT AN ERROR?

Is it an error to believe that "the first man is of the earth earthy"; and that "as is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy"?—1 Cor. 15 : 47, 48.

Is it an error to believe that "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul"?—Gen. 2 : 7.

Is it an error to believe that when man sinned, it is said of him, "Now, lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever; therefore the Lord God . . . drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden cherubims, and a flaming sword that turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life"?—Gen. 3 : 22, 24.

Is it an error to believe that "the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God . . is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality"?—1 Tim. 1 : 17; 6 : 17.

Is it an error to believe that Christ "hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel"?—2 Tim. 1 : 10.

Is it an error to believe that God "will render to . . . them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life"?—Rom. 2 : 7.

Is it an error to believe that "the dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence"? that "the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth"? that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave [sheol] whither thou goest"?—Ps. 115 : 17; Isa. 38 : 18; Eccl. 9 : 10.

Is it an error to believe that, "as the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep"?—Job 14 : 11, 12.

Is it an error to believe that Christ took part of flesh and blood, "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil"? (Heb. 2 : 14); that "he will swallow up death in victory"? (Isa. 25 : 8); that "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death"?—1 Cor. 15 : 26.

Is it an error to believe what Jesus told his disciples,—"Whither I go, ye cannot come"? and that "no man hath ascended up to heaven but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven"? and that "David is not ascended into the heavens"?—John 13 : 33; John 3 : 13; Acts 2 : 34.

Is it an error to believe that "this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner, as ye have seen him go into heaven"?

Is it an error to believe that "the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, and then shall he reward every man according to his works"?—Matt. 16 : 27.

Is it an error to believe that "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout"? and that "the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind"? 1 Thess. 3 : 16; Isa. 66 : 15.

Is it an error to believe that "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord"?—Rom. 6 : 23.

Is it an error to believe that "even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, . . . are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire"; so the wicked shall depart "into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels"?—Jude 1 : 7; Matt. 25 : 41.

Is it an error to believe that "the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment," and "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe"?—Matt. 25 : 46; 2 Thess. 1 : 9, 10.

Is it an error to believe that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die"?—Ezek. 18 : 20.

Is it an error to believe that "the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch; but unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts"?—Mal. 4 : 1–3.

Is it an error to believe that "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son"?—1 John 5 : 11.

Is it an error to believe that "the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death"?—Rev. 21 : 8.

Is it an error to believe that God's kingdom shall come, and his "will be done in earth as it is in heaven"?—Matt. 6 : 10.

Is it an error to believe that "the God of heaven" shall "set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed"? and that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom"? Dan. 2 : 44, 7 : 27.

Is it an error to believe that "the wickedness of the wicked" shall "come to an end"? that "the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it"?—Ps. 7 : 9; Prov. 2 : 22.

Is it an error to believe that "the kingdoms of this world are" to "become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever"?—Rev. 11 : 15.

Is it an error to believe that "all things shall be subdued unto him, . . . that God may be all and in all"?—that there shall be "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness"?—that the earth is "given to the children of men," and that "the meek shall inherit" it? that "the righteous shall be recompensed in" it, also "the wicked and the sinner"?—1 Cor. 15 : 28; Rev. 5 : 10; Ps. 37 : 11; Prov. 11 : 31; 10 : 30; Matt. 5 : 5; 2 Pet. 3 : 13.

Is it an error to believe that which Jesus spake when he said, "Thy word is truth"?—John 17 : 17.

Is it an error to believe that "the kingdom of God is so nigh at hand?—that "the great day of the Lord is near, ... and hasteth greatly"?—that we are living "in the last days"?—that "perilous times shall come"?—that "men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection"?—Zeph. 1 : 14; Ezek. 30 : 3; Luke 21 : 25–31; 2 Tim. 3 : 1–6; 2 Pet. 3.

Is it an error to believe that "yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry"?—Heb. 10 : 37.

If this be an error, or heresy, then "this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." Acts 24 : 14.

DO WE GROW IN GRACE?

Nearly a year has rolled away since I last wrote a line for the consideration of the readers of the Crisis. I feel to thank God I have been "getting up the grade" the past year, although it often seemed to me I was running down it. I thank God my own feelings are not a suitable criterion by which to judge of my growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. There is but one direction brought to view for christians to run, and one pilot will direct us in that, if we but really desire it, our feelings to the contrary notwithstanding.

I feel more than ever the importance of growth and higher attainment in the divine life. It seems certain we cannot be to-day "about the same" as yesterday, as last week, as a year ago. We are better christians, or not as good; enjoying more, or less; are drawing nearer to God and he nearer to us, or the breach between us and him is widening. Our hearts are being more and more filled with the Spirit, or there is less and less room in our hearts for the Spirit to fill. We have great peace from loving the law of God, or we have little peace because we do not love it. Our faith in God is stronger and clearer, from frequent exercise; or weaker and more dim from inactivity. Although the change may not be so apparent from day to day, yet there is a change nevertheless. We do not observe the change daily in the grass, the trees, the cattle, the children; still, no one would deny there was a continual change for the better or worse. And I often wonder how professing christians can content themselves to remain "about so-so." I feel there is no such place for me. Am I growing up into Christ my living head in all things? is my capacity being enlarged? Do I love the mercy seat better? Do I frequent its hallowed atmosphere oftener? Do I retire from its communion with a greater burden for souls? Does my mind most kindly take to worldly subjects of conversation, of reading, of enjoyment? or are those of a spiritual character the most enjoyed? I shall love most to think, read and speak of those subjects which occupy my mind the most, if my heart be interested in them. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh"; and "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Hence if I speak with greater fluency and frequency of houses, lands, merchandise, etc., than of the things pertaining to the everlasting kingdom of God's dear Son, I may well tremble for myself; for I suppose neither death, nor the coming of Jesus, will essentially change my mental development.

True, we shall be "changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," but that is a physical change; one from corruption to incorruption; from a mortal to an immortal state. My mind will not be essentially affected by the above change. Its habits, its preferences, will not materially change. For if it has been unclean, it will be unclean still; or if holy, holy still. I can have no valid reason for believing I shall by any means attain that state, unless fully prepared here, by the grace of God, for its enjoyment. True, I may have gloomy doubts and fears in my preparatory state; but they will all be cleared away in good season; for if I sleep in Jesus, his rod and his staff will comfort me; and it is for me to fear no evil, for he will be with me. And can it be I shall be translated, and fail to receive beforehand "this testimony, that he pleased God"? Is it not incumbent upon me to live to-day the life I now live by faith on the Son of God, and feel there is constantly being developed in me "the power of an endless life"? actually know (by faith) I am accepted through the Beloved; am saved to-day?

It seems to me this is the true position for me to occupy; and if it be not for me, is it not for each one of us? I do not regard it a position from which there is no danger of falling, am only kept by "the power of God." That alone is sufficient; but it will never be removed from me, if faithful to my covenant obligations, nor unless I will it. "For if" I "sin wilfully after that" I "have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin; but a certain fearful looking for of judgment," etc. But "there is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." And "if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God"; but if that condemns to-day, and every subsequent day of my life, have I any reason to expect God will reverse the sentence thus passed upon my own voluntary acts? Nay, verily.

"How careful then ought I to live,
With what religious fear,
Who such a strict account must give
For my behavior here."

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

Down deep in the hearts of men, there is a conviction,—a belief and expectation that a day is coming, in which "every one of us shall give account of himself to GOD." Wicked men have this conviction, though they try to stifle or conceal it. But when some great terror siezes them, they reveal the secret, and acknowledge their belief in a coming day of judgment. When the land was covered with "a horror of great darkness" in May 1780, people acknowledged their belief in the coming of that day. Proceeding on the supposition that all who read this fully believe that such a day will come, I need not try to prove and acknowledge truth, but offer in simple style what I have to say on this sublime subject.

I come to this great tribunal just as though I was the only creature in the whole universe that is to be tried. The great multitude that no man can number, is nothing to me. I only see the JUDGE who is to decide my case. And of one thing I am fully assured; there will be plenty of time to attend to the case in all its bearings. Time enough for me to recall any act or thought, and every idle word. I shall not escape because there are so many cases to dispose of that there is no time to attend to mine. I have seen a computation of the time required to judge every individual of the human race, and the statement that it would be impossible to attend to each case separately, because it would take too much time! A very convenient way to escape the judgment, because there is not time to attend to each individual case. But if any one has such an idea, he will find he has embraced an error.

Perhaps I have swung to the opposite extreme, but it will do no harm for me to say that each case will be attended to individually, and even if each person required a thousand years there will surely be plenty of time to attend to every one. The writer to whom I have referred made his calculation, allowing only ten minutes for each case, and said it would be impossible to devote so much time as that to each individual case. Can a camel go through the eye of a needle? "With GOD all things are possible." Let us be cautious when speaking of what may seem impossible to us, for it may not be so to him. Allowing the largest imaginable space of time for the disposal of each individual case, how great a proportion would be taken away from the morning of ETERNITY! (The word time is used for want of a better, but it seems to be out of place when it has been declared that "time shall be no longer.") What idea have we of the duration of eternity?

Behold that great multitude that no man can number! Draw near to one of them and converse with that person alone for a thousand years, and then do the same with another, till you have passed a thousand years with each one of the countless multitude; and then if you understand the transposition of numbers, you may do the same again as many times as this vast number can be differently arranged, and when all this is done millions of times over, no perceptible diminution will be made of that "eternal day." With this imperfect view of eternity before us, we say again, there will be plenty of time for each person to be judged, and each one will receive as impartial a hearing, as though he was the only culprit in existence.

But it was not imperative (speaking after the manner of men) that one should wait while others are being judged. Who doubts the ability of the Judge to pass judgment upon the whole assembly at once? To them on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed," and to those on his left, "Depart, ye cursed." All things are possible with God. And all things will there be done in order. No confusion, as is sometimes the case in earthly courts, no delay, and NO MISTAKES.

The decision of this court is final. From this decision there can be no appeal. And there is no way of escape from the penalty imposed. The condemned culprit will have no power or skill to escape from the guard or prison. "Agree with thine adversary quickly, while thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing."—Matt. 5 : 25, 26.

To the true and faithful christian, the great day should have no terrors. He is pardoned, and there is no law out against him. The Judge is his Advocate, and will plead his cause effectually and successfully. Reader, are you a true and faithful christian?

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

☞ Patrick Henry left in his will the following important passage: "I have now disposed of all my property to my family. There is one thing more I wish I could leave them, and that is the christian religion. If they had that, and I had not given them one shilling, they would be rich; and if they had not that, and I had given them all the world, they would be poor."

☞ A lady applied to Reynolds, the philanthropist, in behalf of an orphan. After he had given very liberally, she said: "When he is old enough, I will teach him to name and thank his benefactor." "Stop," said the good man, "thou art mistaken; we do not thank the clouds for rain. Teach him to look higher, and thank Him who giveth the clouds and the rain."

SONG FOR WILBRAHAM CAMP-GROUND, 1866.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

AIR.—"We're tenting to-night," etc.

We're tenting to-night on the old camp-ground,
Singing our hymns of cheer;
And waiting ones are gath'ring 'round,
And friends we love so dear.

CHORUS.—Many dear saints are weary to-night,
As 'round the earth they roam;
Many are the hearts looking for the right,
Wishing the Lord to come.

Dear ones who knelt here in other years,
Will greet us here no more;
Jesus will wipe away the tears
Soon on the brighter shore.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

We're thinking to-night of the white robed band,
Who'll meet Him in the sky;
And live and reign in the better land,—
'Tis coming by and by.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

Shout! brothers, shout! on the old camp-ground,
Press toward the Eden bowers;
Soon with the Lamb on the sea of glass,
Victory will be ours.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

We'll fight for our King on the old camp-ground,
Rally, brothers, and pray;
The pure in heart will have the crown,
And reign in endless day.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

We're tenting to-night on the old camp-ground,
Singing our hymns of cheer;
And waiting ones are gath'ring 'round,
And friends we love so dear.
CHO.—Many dear saints, etc.

"SIGNS OF THE TIMES."

The following is a sketch of some of the many reasons we have for believing that the second coming of our Lord is near, even at the doors.

1st. The gospel of the kingdom is acknowledged to have been "preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations."—Matt. 24 : 14.

2nd. The great and leading events spoken of in Matt. 24, Mark 13, and Luke 21, preceding his coming, are in the past.

3d. The great tribulation of papal persecution during 1260 years, from about A. D. 532, bringing us down to the time of the darkening of the sun A. D. 1780, May 19th; also of the moon; and the falling of the stars, A. D. 1833, Nov. 13th, have all been wonderfully fulfilled.—Matt. 24.

4th. The fulfilling also of the prophecy of Joel, confirmed by Peter,—"And I will show wonders in heaven above, and signs in the earth beneath; blood, and fire, and vapor of smoke; the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before that great and notable day of the Lord come."—Joel 2; Acts 2; Ezek, 37 : 7; Rev. 6 : 12–17.

5th. The following signs recorded by Luke being fulfilled, bring us near to the time of his coming: "And great earthquakes shall be in divers places, and famines, and pestilences; and fearful sights and great signs shall there be from heaven." "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring. Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."—Luke 21 : 11, 25, 26.

6th. The fulfillment also of the events connected with the opening seals of Rev. 6 : 12, 13. "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind." This refers to one and the same class of events spoken of by the prophets, and confirmed by our Lord and his apostles, and all were fulfilled in their regular order. Luke 21 : 31.

7th. The chronology of the world (allowing Paul's time of the Judges to be 450 years,) brings us down near the six thousandth year, when, according to the united voice of the church for centuries past, the millennial day, or morning of the first resurrection, would be ushered in by the return of our long absent Lord, to establish the "everlasting kingdom" promised to the "little flock," and for which he taught his disciples to pray. Matt. 6 : 10, Luke 12 : 32, Dan. 2 : 7, Isa. 2 : 2–4, 11 : 35, 66, Ps. 72, 98 : 9, 100 : 101, 102.

8th. Being at the termination of the last of the four great universal monarchies of earth; and in the divided state of the ten kingdoms, where the image is smitten and becomes like the chaff, and the stone becomes a great mountain, and fills the whole earth; "but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2 : 7, Rev. 11 : 15.

9th. The seven mystic times of Daniel fourth, typifying the fulfillment of Gentile times, embracing a period of 2520 years, and terminating at the present time. Dan. 4 : 23–25, Luke 21 : 24.

10th. A jubilee of jubilees from 631 B. C., Josiah's 18th year, terminating near the present time. 2 Chron. 35 : 18, 19.

11th. The fulfillment of the period of the 2300 years, from the renewal of sacrifices, 484 B. C., to the complete cleansing of the holy land, terminating at the present time. Dan. 8 : 13, 14; Neh. 12 : 13.

12th. The ending in A. D. about 1792 of the "time, and times, and the dividing of time," or 1260 years from near 532, when the saints were given into the hands of the Papal power; and being now at the very terminating point, or time of the end. Dan. 7 : 25, 26.

13th. The condition of the Papacy during the past seventy-five years most strikingly verifies the prediction,—"But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end."

14th. The 1335 days, or years, from the setting up of "the abomination that maketh desolate," near 532, when the Papacy was established in power, terminating also at the present time. Dan. 12 : 11, 12; Matt. 24 : 15–30; Rev. 17 : 4–7.

15th. The secondary fulfillment of the forty-two months, or 1260 years from A. D. 606, when Pope Boniface was constituted head of the western church, apparently terminating also at the present time. Rev. 11 : 2, 13 : 5.

16th. The united declarations of the apostles and evangelists, that they had already entered on, or were already then in, the last days; and the next great event they looked forward to was the day of the Lord,—the coming of Christ. Heb. 1 : 2, 10 : 25, 37; Acts 2 : 16–20; 1 Pet. 4 : 7; 2 Pet. 3 : 3–17.

17th. The going forth to meet the Bridegroom, the different watches, and the midnight cry, so universally observed, proclaimed, and developed for the last twenty-five years.—Matt. 25 : 1–7; Mark 13 : 35; Luke 12 : 38.

18th. The professed servants being at ease, putting far away the evil day; who, instead of giving to the people dispensational truths, or "meat in due season," now are saying, "My lord delayeth his coming," and in carnal warfare smite their fellow servants; and also in numerous festivals, fairs, public suppers, etc., are eating and drinking with the drunken.—Matt. 24 : 44.

19th. The unparalleled increase of crime and wickedness, pride and selfishness, for the last few years, the world over, now most emphatically corrupt, and filled with violence, as it would be in the last days. 2 Tim. 3; Matt. 24 : 37, 39.

20th. The multitude of scoffers, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming? . . . All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—2 Pet. 3 : 3, 4.

21st. The pride, worldly conformity, and lukewarm condition of the mass of the churches, at the present time; not discerning "the signs of the times," but appearing "willingly ignorant" of the same; and their almost entire rejection of the literal Bible doctrine of the personal return of Christ to reign on the earth. Ezek. 21 : 26, 27; Ps. 22 : 28.

22d. The universal time of peace and quietness, proclaimed some few years since, when no more war need be apprehended; but the world's conversion, and dawning of the latter-day glory was then beginning to be consummated. 1 Thess. 5 : 1–3.

23d. "The spirits of devils working miracles (wonderfully developed for the last few years), which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." Immediately following in connection it is declared, "Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth."—Rev. 16 : 13–15.

24th. The unsettled condition of things, and universal strife and commotion among the nations of earth, and their waking up and preparing for war on a greater scale than ever known in the past. Joel 3; Rev. 11 : 18, 14 : 15–20.

25th. It is stated as a remarkable fact that there is a general impression abroad in the world that the end of the present order of things is at hand. "This feeling is growing deeper and wider in all directions, among both Christians and Pagans." This increased rapidity of event following event, and apparent convergency of all things to a crisis or terminating point. Zeph. 1 : 14, 15; Heb. 2 : 1–3.

26th. The prophet Daniel (in connection with the time of the end) declares, "The wise shall understand." Our Savior, in referring to Daniel's declaration, says, "Whoso readeth let him understand."—Matt. 24 : 15; Dan. 12 : 10–13.

27th. The united belief and testimony of thousands at the present time, in this and other countries, and the universal declaration of those who have searched the Scriptures, and taken heed to the sure word of prophecy, that the great prophetic periods of Daniel and John are near, or at their termination. Dan., John, Rev.

28th. The signs in the physical, mental, and moral world; together with the unparalleled phenomena in the heavens, witnessed by this present generation; the darkening of the sun and moon; the moon turning to blood, and the falling of the stars; all occurring in the order given in the inspired Word, evidently bringing us down to the time of "distress of nations, with perplexity," or the "shaking of the powers of the heavens," when will "appear the sign of the Son of man"; all now proclaim in trumpet tones to a slumbering church, and sleeping world, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." The day is near, "the time is at hand."—Rev. 1 : 1–7. "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, KNOW that it (he) is near even at the doors.—Matt. 24 : 33; Rev. 6 : 12–17.

Dear brethren and friends, in what a solemn period of the world's history do we live! What other period can compare with this? Words fail to express the momentous interests pending on the decisions of an hour. What eternal consequences, hang on the improvement or misimprovement of this point of time, and the intervening space between us and the judgment. Is it not a solemn consideration that of those numbered with the of followers Jesus, even of those who will trim their lamps and go forth to meet the Bridegroom, only one half were ready and prepared for the event? There was but one thing lacking, and that was enough to exclude them from the marriage feast. Had they presumptuously entered with the rest, like the man who neglected a wedding garment, it would have availed them not. We want faith—true faith; that faith which works by love and purifies the heart. This requires closet work; yes, prayer and fasting also, it may be, to secure the blessing. Entire consecration of all to Christ, and being found in the position spoken of in Luke 12 : 32–40, will secure the prize. "And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you. To the end he may stablish your hearts unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints."—1 Thess. 3 : 12, 13. Brethren and sisters, who will be ready for the marriage supper? Will you?

S. L. MANLEY.

Palmyra, N. Y.

THE SECRET OF EFFECTUAL SERVICE TO GOD.

Above all things, see to it that your souls are happy in the Lord. Other things may press upon you; the Lord's work, even, may have urgent claims upon your attention; but I deliberately repeat, it is of supreme and paramount importance that you should seek, above all other things, to have your souls truly happy in God himself. Day by day seek to make this the most important business of your life. This has been my firm and settled conviction for the last five-and-thirty years. For the first four years after my conversion I knew n t its vast importance; but now, after much experience, I specially commend this point to the notice of my younger brethren and sisters in Christ. The secret of all t ue effectual service is—joy in God, and having experimental acquaintance and fellowship with God himself.

But in what way shall we attain to this settled happiness of soul? How shall we learn to enjoy God? how obtain such an all-sufficient, soul-satisfying portion in him as shall enable us to let go the things of this world as vain and worthless in comparison? I answer, this happiness is to be obtained through the study of the Holy Scriptures. God has therein revealed himself to us in the face of Jesus Christ.

In the Scriptures, by the power of the Holy Ghost, he makes himself known unto our souls. Remember, it is not a god of our own thoughts, or our own imaginations, that we need to be acquainted with; but the God of the Bible, our Father, who has given the blessed Jesus to die for us. Him should we seek intimately to know, according to the revelation he has made of himself in his own most precious word.

The way in which we study this word is a matter of the deepest moment. The very earliest portion of the day we can command should be devoted to meditation on the Scriptures. Our souls should feed upon the word. We should read it—not for others, but for ourselves; all the promises, the encouragements, the warnings, the exhortations, the rebukes, should be taken home to our own bosoms. Especially let us remember, not to neglect any portion of the Bible: it should be read regularly through. To read favorite portions of the Scriptures, to the exclusion of other parts, is a habit to be avoided. The whole divine volume is inspired, and by degrees should be read regularly through. But to read the Bible thus is not enough; we must seek to become intimately and experimentally acquainted with him whom the Scriptures reveal—with the blessed Jesus who has given himself to die in our room and st ad. Oh! what an abiding, soul-satisfying portion do we possess in him!

But another point here needs especially to be noticed: it is that we seek habitually to carry out what we know—to act up to the light that we have received—then more will assuredly be given. But if we fail to do this, our light will be turned into darkness. It is of the deepest moment that we walk with a sincere, honest, upright heart before the Lord. If evil be practised, or harbored and connived at, the channel of communication between our souls and God (for the time being) will be cut off. It is all-important to remember this. Infirmities and weaknesses will cleave to us, as long as we remain in the body; but this is a different thing from willingly allowing evil. I must be able, with a true, honest, upright heart, to look my heavenly Father in the face—to say: "Here I am, blessed Lord; do with me as thou wilt."

Then let us remember that we are his stewards. Our time, our health, our strength, our talents, our all, are his, and his alone. Let us seek to remember this, and carry it out this year, and then what happy christians shall we be! It is a divine principle, "To him that hath shall more be given;" and as assuredly as we seek to make good use of that which is confided to us, more will be imparted. We shall be used of the Lord, and shall become increasingly happy in his own most blessed service. Brethren! we have only one life—one brief life; let us seek, with renewed purpose of heart, to consecrate that one life wholly to the Lord—day by day to live for God, and to serve him with our body, soul, and spirit, which are his.

Let it be our unceasing prayer, that as we grow older, we may not grow colder in the ways of God. As we advance in years, let us not decline in spiritual power, but let us see to it that an increase of spiritual vigor and energy be found in us, that our last days may be our best days.

Our holy faith does not consist in talking. "Reality, reality, reality," is what we want. Let us have heart-work; let us be genuine. Brethren! we should live so as to be missed—missed both in the church and in the world, when we are removed. Oh! how rapidly is time hastening on! We should live in such a manner as that, if we were called home, our dear brethren and sisters might feel our loss, and from their inmost souls exclaim: "Oh! that such an one were in our midst again!" We ought to be missed even by the world. Worldly persons should be constrained to say of us: "If ever there was a christian upon earth, that man was one."

But to revert to the Scriptures. In them, through the teaching of the Holy Ghost, we become acquainted with the character of God. Our eyes are divinely opened to see what a lovely being God is! and this good, gracious, loving, heavenly Father is ours—our portion for time and for eternity; and our adorable Lord Jesus, who gave himself for us, is that blessed One to whose image and likeness we shall be conformed; and to serve him should be our greatest joy and privilege as long as we remain on earth.

But then, when trial and affliction come—when God deals with us as though he were not the lovely, kind, and gracious Being presented to us in his word, shall we murmur and despond? Ah! no. Beloved in Christ, let us trust our heavenly Father; let us, like little children, hang entirely on him, reposing in the sweet assurance of his unchangeable, eternal love. Let us remember how he acted toward his saints of old—what his dealings were with them; let us remember what is recorded concerning their history; for now, as he ever has done, God will most surely act according to his word.

This intimate experimental acquaintance with him will make us truly happy. Nothing else will. If we are not happy christians (I speak deliberately—I speak advisedly,) there is something wrong. If we did not close the past year in a happy frame of spirit, the fault is ours, and ours alone.

In God our Father and the blessed Lord Jesus our souls have a rich, divine, imperishable, eternal treasure. Let us enter into practical possession of these true riches; yea, let the remaining days of our earthly pilgrimage be spent in an ever-increasing, devoted, earnest consecration of our souls to him.—George Muller.

O HOW I LONG, DEAR SAVIOR.

BY LOUISA L. SMITH.

O how I long, dear Savior, to dwell in heavenly rest,
Where not one wave of sorrow will e'er disturb my breast;
Where foes will ne'er my hope deride, where nothing false will be—
O how I long, dear Savior, to live and reign with thee.

Where saints will meet to part no more, and range those plains of light,
Breathe that pure and holy air, and walk with thee in white;
By faith I view the promised land; with patience may I wait,
Till thou, my Great Deliverer, shall all things new create.

My tried and tempted brethren, that holy clime is near,
And our great and glorious Captain will quell each rising fear;
While in this scene of conflict oh, keep your armor on,
And soon with all the faithful we'll join the holy throng.

That day is hasting greatly! aye, keep your armor on;
Soon with the shining ransomed we'll sing the new-born song;
And saints that now are sleeping in the cold and silent grave,
Will triumph o'er the monster Death, when Jesus comes to save.

PARADISE PROMISED TO THE PENITENT THIEF.

BRO. GRANT:—In the article entitled, "The Thief on the Cross has no promise of Paradise," from the Prophetic Watchman, published in Crisis of Aug. 1st, the reply of Jesus to the request of the thief is represented as a question: "Shalt thou be with me in Paradise?"

In the Greek language, as in the English, when a question is asked, some intimation of that fact is given, as you and many of your readers are aware. Sometimes the intimation is found in the preceding words; as, "Pilate asked him, saying, Art thou the King of the Jews?" Luke 23 : 3. At other times an interrogative word is contained in the question itself; as, "What evil hath he done?" Verse 22.

In our language, the placing of the verb, or the auxiliary part of it, before its nominative, indicates a question; as, "Shalt thou be with me in paradise?" But the Greek does not follow this rule; because the meaning of a sentence is not so dependant, as it is with us, on the order of the words; but is sufficiently indicated by their flexible terminations; and the termination of the verb also renders it unnecessary to write the pronoun, except where emphatic.

If this passage were intended to be read as a question, it would contain, in the Greek, a small word used for the purpose, called by grammarians a particle. For example: Luke 18 : 8,—"Shall he find faith on the earth?" Ara heuresei tem pistin? Here the interrogative particle is ara. See also Acts 8 : 30, Gal. 2 : 17, Luke 22 : 49,—"Shall we smite with the sword?" Ei pataxomen en machaira? Here the interrogation particle is ei. See also Luke 13 : 23; and 14 : 3.

But in Christ's reply to the thief, no such interrogative particle is found in the Greek text; and nothing in the preceding words implies an interrogative. The passage therefore can not be read as a question; but must be read, omitting "to-day," as in the Revised New Testament, "Thou shalt be with me in Paradise." It is then—is it not?—a blessed promise to a penitent believer.

Is it an error to believe that "the kingdom of God is so nigh at hand"?—that "the great day of the Lord is near, ... and hasteth greatly"?—that we are living "in the last days"?—that "perilous times shall come"?—that "men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection"?—Zeph. 1 : 14; Ezek. 30 : 3; Luke 21 : 25–31; 2 Tim. 3 : 1–8; 2 Pet. 3.

Is it an error to believe that "yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry"?—Heb. 10 : 37.

If this be an error, or heresy, then "this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." Acts 24 : 14.

DO WE GROW IN GRACE?

Nearly a year has rolled away since I last wrote a line for the consideration of the readers of the Crisis. I feel to thank God I have been "getting up the grade" the past year, although it often seemed to me I was running down it. I thank God my own feelings are not a suitable criterion by which to judge of my growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. There is but one direction brought to view for christians to run, and one pilot will direct us in that, if we but really desire it, our feelings to the contrary notwithstanding.

I feel more than ever the importance of growth and higher attainment in the divine life. It seems certain we cannot be to-day "about the same" as yesterday, as last week, as a year ago. We are better christians, or not as good; enjoying more, or less; are drawing nearer to God and he nearer to us, or the breach between us and him is widening. Our hearts are being more and more filled with the Spirit, or there is less and less room in our hearts for the Spirit to fill. We have great peace from loving the law of God, or we have little peace because we do not love it. Our faith in God is stronger and clearer, from frequent exercise; or weaker and more dim from inactivity. Although the change may not be so apparent from day to day, yet there is a change nevertheless. We do not observe the change daily in the grass, the trees, the cattle, the children; still, no one would deny there was a continual change for the better or worse. And I often wonder how professing christians can content themselves to remain "about so-so." I feel there is no such place for me. Am I growing up into Christ my living head in all things? Is my capacity being enlarged? Do I love the mercy seat better? Do I frequent its hallowed atmosphere oftener? Do I retire from its communion with a greater burden for souls? Does my mind most kindly take to worldly subjects of conversation, of reading, of enjoyment? or are those of a spiritual character the most enjoyed? I shall love most to think, read and speak of those subjects which occupy my mind the most, if my heart be interested in them. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh"; and "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." Hence if I speak with greater fluency and frequency of houses, lands, merchandise, etc., than of the things pertaining to the everlasting kingdom of God's dear Son, I may well tremble for myself; for I suppose neither death, nor the coming of Jesus, will essentially change my mental development.

True, we shall be "changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," but that is a physical change; one from corruption to incorruption; from a mortal to an immortal state. My mind will not be essentially affected by the above change. Its habits, its preferences, will not materially change. For if it has been unclean, it will be unclean still; or if holy, holy still. I can have no valid reason for believing I shall by any means attain that state, unless fully prepared here, by the grace of God, for its enjoyment. True, I may have gloomy doubts and fears in my preparatory state; but they will all be cleared away in good season; for if I sleep in Jesus, his rod and his staff will comfort me; and it is for me to fear no evil, for he will be with me. And can it be I shall be translated, and fail to receive beforehand "this testimony, that he pleased God"? Is it not incumbent upon me to live to-day the life I now live by faith on the Son of God, and feel there is constantly being developed in me "the power of an endless life"? actually know (by faith) I am accepted through the Beloved; am saved to-day? It seems to me this is the true position for me to occupy; and if it be the one for me, is it not for each one of us? I do not regard it a position from which there is no danger of falling, as only kept by "the power of God." That alone is sufficient; but it will never be removed, from me, if faithful to my covenant obligations, nor unless I will it. "For if I" sin wilfully after that" I "have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin; but a certain fearful looking for of judgment," etc. But "there is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." And "if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God"; but if that condemns to-day, and every subsequent day of my life, have I any reason to expect God will reverse the sentence thus passed upon my own voluntary acts? Nay, verily.

"How careful then ought I to live,
With what religious fear,
Who such a strict account must give
For my behavior here."

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

Down deep in the hearts of men, there is a conviction,—a belief and expectation that a day is coming, in which "every one of us shall give account of himself to GOD." Wicked men have this conviction, though they try to stifle or conceal it. But when some great terror siezes them, they reveal the secret, and acknowledge their belief in a coming day of judgment. When the land was covered with "a horror of great darkness" in May 1780, people acknowledged their belief in the coming of that day. Proceeding on the supposition that all who read this fully believe that such a day will come, I need not try to prove and acknowledge truth, but offer in simple style what I have to say on this sublime subject.

I come to this great tribunal just as though I was the only creature in the whole universe that is to be tried. The great multitude that no man can number, is nothing to me. I only see the JUDGE who is to decide my case. And of one thing I am fully assured; there will be plenty of time to attend to the case in all its bearings. Time enough for me to recall any act or thought, and every idle word. I shall not escape because there are so many cases to dispose of that there is no time to attend to mine. I have seen a computation of the time required to judge every individual of the human race, and the statement that it would be impossible to attend to each case separately, because it would take too much time! A very convenient way to escape the judgment, because there is not time to attend to each individual case. But if any one has such an idea, he will find he has embraced an error.

Perhaps I have swung to the opposite extreme, but it will do no harm for me to say that each case will be attended to individually, and even if each person required a thousand years there will surely be plenty of time to attend to every one. The writer to whom I have referred made his calculation, allowing only ten minutes for each case, and said it would be impossible to devote so much time as that to each individual case. Can a camel go through the eye of a needle? "With GOD all things are possible." Let us be cautious when speaking of what may seem impossible to us, for it may not be so to him. Allowing the largest imaginable space of time for the disposal of each individual case, how great a proportion would be taken away from the morning of ETERNITY! (The word time is used for want of a better, but it seems to be out of place when it has been declared that "time shall be no longer.") What idea have we of the duration of eternity?

Behold that great multitude that no man can number! Draw near to one of them and converse with that person alone for a thousand years, and then do the same with another, till you have passed a thousand years with each one of the countless multitude; and then if you understand the transposition of numbers, you may do the same again as many times as this vast number can be differently arranged, and when all this is done millions of times over, no perceptible diminution will be made of that "eternal day." With this imperfect view of eternity before us, we say again, there will be plenty of time for each person to be judged, and each one will receive as impartial a hearing, as though he was the only culprit in existence.

But it was not imperative (speaking after the manner of men) that one should wait while others are being judged. Who doubts the ability of the Judge to pass judgment upon the whole assembly at once? To them on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed," and to those on his left, "Depart, ye cursed." All things are possible with God. And all things will there be done in order. No confusion, as is sometimes the case in earthly courts, no delay, and NO MISTAKES.

The decision of this court is final. From this decision there can be no appeal. And there is no way of escape from the penalty imposed. The condemned culprit will have no power or skill to escape from the guard or prison. "Agree with thine adversary quickly, while thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing."—Matt. 5 : 25, 26.

To the true and faithful christian, the great day should have no terrors. He is pardoned, and there is no law but against him. The Judge is his Advocate, and will plead his cause effectually and successfully. Reader, are you a true and faithful christian?

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

☞ Patrick Henry left in his will the following important passage: "I have now disposed of all my property to my family. There is one thing more I wish I could leave them, and that is the christian religion. If they had that, and I had not given them one shilling, they would be rich; and if they had not that, and I had given them all the world, they would be poor."

"LET US ALONE."

This was the cry of an evil spirit in our Savior's day. The same cry has been borne down on the waves of time, until to-day we hear its echo on every hand. It is the cry of evil-doers. A good cause always invites the keenest scrutiny; but a bad cause shrinks away in fear from the light.

This desire to be let alone is characteristic of the workers of iniquity. Go take a look within that dingy old bar-room; peep behind the flimsy screen which they think hides them from the light; and reprove the inveterate slave of the glass; warn him to flee from the ruin that awaits the drunkard; and how soon they commence the cry, "Let us alone!" Reprove the bloated servant of Satan who deals out the essence of hell to drag men down to the lowest depths of woe, and he echoes the cry to be let alone. They are afraid of the light, because their deeds are evil.

Ascend to the courts of popular amusement; view the proud, the gay, and the godless, decked with the flowers plucked from the Devil's flower garden; and let the voice of warning be uttered, and they cry, "Let us alone!"

Accost the pleasure-seeker in his unsuccessful rambles to allay his insatiable desire, and he wishes to be unmolested in his search. And breathe but a word of warning to the worldly-minded of all stations in life, and they desire to be undisturbed in their delusive dreams of "peace and safety." The warnings of God are met with a frown, and the children of Satan turn away with an air of contempt.

Last of all, turn your eyes to the professed church of Christ. Where shall we look for God's word to meet a hearty welcome if not here? But here the evil spirit has crept in under the mantle of popular theology! When the unadulterated word of God is presented that conflicts with any of the popular usages of the church, they, too, desire to be let alone. A writer remarks:

"There appears to be an active competition between the church and the world, as to which shall furnish, for unsanctified human nature, the most attractive amusements. In the appeal to taste, the church may justly claim the verdict. In but few communities can the other resorts of fashion vie in magnificence with the so-called houses of worship. In exclusiveness the latter clearly have the precedence. The right of admittance depends upon the possession of the monied qualifications. Instead of being an earnest effort to offer acceptable worship to God, the services are evidently intended to gratify the worldly, the cultivated, and the refined. The sermon is carefully written, and the gestures studied before the mirror; and the singing is conducted by the best musical talent that money can command. With the avowed design of keeping the young people under the influence of the church, the weekly sociable is instituted, and fun and frolic prevail. To pay the preacher, a donation party is held, and the old and young, professor and worldling, devote the evening to feasting and merriment. Festivals, picnics and excursions, oyster suppers and lotteries are resorted to, for the purpose of replenishing the funds, or reviving the flagging interests—not religious—in the prosperity of the church."

If a faithful servant of God raises a warning voice against any one of these various expedients for promoting christianity, they instantly raise the cry of the evil spirit, "Let us alone!"

But, brethren in Christ, it does not follow that the desire of Satan and the workers of iniquity to be let alone should be gratified. The devil knows that would advance his cause the most, hence he raises the cry. The true soldier of the cross must grapple with giant wrongs, despite the protests of evil doers. The devil would undoubtedly like to take full possession of the world unmolested. Evil-doers love to enjoy their delusive dreams undisturbed. But we owe it to God, and to the imperiled sons of wrong, to agitate and arouse them from their destructive repose. True, they want to be let alone, because they see not their danger. If you were to see a house on fire, while its occupant was asleep within, you would raise an alarm to warn him of his danger. He might partially arouse himself, and cry, "Let me alone!" but you are aware that to let him alone is certain death; so you continue your warning, increasing in earnestness as the danger increases, until, by your agitation, you arouse him to a full sense of his danger. Then his heart is filled with gratitude to the instrument of his deliverance. He thanks God that he is safe. So with the world. The latent fires are gathering that will consume them. They realize not the danger, hence, when the child of God sees them standing on the awful vortex of eternal death, and sounds the warning to save them, they cry, "Let us alone!" Ah! but that is certain death. If you continue to agitate them until you arouse them to a full realization of their peril, they shrink back in horror from their condition, and will praise God to all eternity that you were the instrument in his hands of saving them from eternal death.

The true militant followers of Christ are those who go forth in the spirit of heroic sacrifice to invade the devil's territory, and "turn the world upside down." We have no time to lose. We stand on the vortex of a glorious eternity. The great day of God's wrath is ready to break forth in all its latent fury, and now is the time to

"Let sinners learn to pray,
Let saints keep near the throne."

O! beloved brethren, turn not a deaf ear to the cries of the world, "Let us alone!" The awful realities of the second death are before them. O! how terrible will be the remorse of that hour. Therefore let us raise our voice of warning above the cries of Satan, and continue to agitate them with God's warnings, until they see their danger, and flee from the wrath to come. The devil is fully aware that his time is short, hence he is in terrible earnest in his work. In view of these facts, we have no time to dally away the remaining golden moments of time by feeble endeavors. We owe it to human beings in peril to awake to real earnestness in warning them of their dangerous position. We shall soon be home. O! how I long for my rest.

"There shall I bathe my weary soul
In seas of heavenly rest;
And not a wave of trouble roll
Across my peaceful breast."

Rochester, N. Y. WM. H. SPENCER.

MEDITATION.—By continual meditation on the sacred writings, a man as naturally improves and advances in holiness as a tree thrives and flourishes in a kindly and well-watered soil. All the fruits of righteousness show themselves at a proper season, as opportunity calls for them and his words, which are to actions what the leaves are to the fruit, fall not on the ground, but are profitable as well as ornamental.

STRUCK WITH DEATH.

The evidence is becoming strong to show that the woman on the "seven hills" at Rome is dying. Her days are numbering rapidly. Her last hours have come. As was remarked by a Florence correspondent, "The surviving of the august patient cannot be an affair of more than a few months." Well might the Pope say, as reported by an Austrian writer:

"The hand of Providence has already written for me the Mene, Mene, Tekel Upharsin. My days are numbered; my acts are weighed in the balance of Divine justice, and I hope they will not be found too far wanting; my empire is falling into secular hands."

The time is at hand to witness that sublime event, so long looked for by the church of Christ,—the fall of modern Babylon.

The following from the Gazette de France will be read with deep interest by the student of prophecy. They are some remarks said to have been recently made by Prince Napoleon:

"Too much hesitation and prudence have been hitherto shown. France ought to have allied herself frankly to Prussia and Italy a year ago; and the hour has now arrived when the flag of the revolution, that of the empire, ought to be widely displayed. What is the programme of that revolution? It is, at first, the struggle commenced against Catholicism—a struggle which must be continued and carried out—it is the constitution of the great national unities on the wrecks of factitious states, and of the treaties which founded them—it is democracy triumphant, having for its basis universal suffrage, but which requires for a century to be directed by the strong hands of the Cæsars—it is imperial France at the summit of this European station—it is war, a long war as the condition and instrument of that policy. Such are the programme and the flag.

But the first obstacle to overcome is Austria. Austria is the most powerful support of the Catholic influence in the world. She represents the federative form as opposed to the principle of separative nationalities; she wishes to bring about the triumph at Vienna, Pesth, and Frankfort of the liberal and parliamentary institutions opposed to democracy; she is the last refuge of Catholicism and feudality; she must therefore be borne down and crushed."

In the foregoing, we think we find the true policy of Napoleon, expressed by the Prince. "The struggle" has "commenced against Catholicism; a struggle which must be continued and carried out." The "war" has begun, and "Austria," "the first obstacle" in the way of the destruction of the temporal power of the Papacy, is "borne down and crushed," and her Emperor is now requested by popular clamor to abdicate his throne. How suddenly has this remarkable change come. Now there is no Catholic nation left but France, that has any political power to sustain the Papacy; and in the foregoing extract from the Gazette as well as various other similar statements, which have been uttered from time to time by the highest French authority, we learn "the programme and the flag" which are to be sustained by Napoleon. He is aiming to be not only the political, but the ecclesiastical head of what was once the old Roman Empire, as ruled by the Cæsars. Julius Cæsar and Napoleon I. are his models.

It is well known that Napoleon III. has been writing the life of Julius Cæsar, in which it is evident he wishes to show to the world that his position is like that of Cæsar; and that he ought to pursue a similar course, and bring all Europe and the rest of the world under his control; for the reason it would be in a much better condition than it is now; because he could establish peace.

He wishes to bring the Catholic powers in full submission to his will, liberate Italy, and receive the applause and support of the Protestant nations in return for his deeds; and thus secure the "basis of "universal suffrage" (in his own favor, of course,) and in this way make "democracy triumphant;" "directed by the strong hands of the Cæsars," in other words, by Napoleon; or as expressed by the Prince,—"It is imperial France at the summit of this European situation."

The same views expressed by the Prince are set forth in the Paris Monde, as follows:—"If Austria succumbs, there will be no state dependent upon the Vicar of Jesus Christ. All will have abjured the official character of the Catholic faith. . . . If she is irremediably vanquished she will . . . close the Catholic cycle of modern peoples. The church and the world will enter upon new struggles full of obscurity, the conditions of which it is impossible to determine."

"But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." Why not? "Ye are the children of light." (1 Thess. 5: 4–5.) What light? "We have also a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn."—2 Pet. 1: 19. If it were not for the prophetic Scriptures, the church of Christ would be in darkness in relation to coming events, because the light comes from that source. Then how can any see the light who neglect and reject the prophecies that relate to these times?

We will conclude this article by an extract from an interesting work just published by a Baptist minister:—

"We say kindly but yet emphatically, that it is a perilous business (for such as could, but would not apprehend the duty which is laid by the Lord on this generation,) to remain willingly uninstructed, unbelieving and inactive. Is it not hazardous to repel and discourage those whom God has raised up to sound the trumpet of this alarm? Yet there is frequently great reluctance on the part of ministers to allow this class of topics to be introduced into their pulpit at all. Will it be best to perpetuate this barrier, until it is overthrown by the logic of necessity, by the [illegible]rable argument of events? . . . Those ministers of the gospel who are indefatigably employed in endeavoring to arouse attention to the momentous themes of prophecy, will not be forgotten in a coming day. Though compelled to encounter an opposing tide of sentiment in the world, and in the church, and to labor with but the scantiest pecuniary compensation, they can well afford to endure a momentary inconvenience, that they may magnify their honorable office.

We have reached an epoch of change. Let us beware of illusions. The whole system of things terrestrial and temporal is in the incipient throes of parturition. It is no time for dreams of earthly prosperity and glory."

A NEW INTEREST.

A new interest is being awakened throughout Christendom on the subject of the Lord's coming. A large number in the various churches are now looking upon the signs of the times with deep attention, and anxiously watching the passing events, expecting to see Jesus soon. Within a few days we have received from ministers three new works, giving evidences that our Savior will soon come to set up his kingdom. This is cheering to all the friends of Jesus; and we are sure it must be to him. There is a "crown" for "all that love his appearing."

Those who love the appearing of the Lord will be pleased to hear all the evidence there is in favor of his speedy coming; and will never be found scoffing at the subject, or even treating it with lightness. We consider the matter settled by the fulfillment of the prophetic scriptures of Daniel and John, Jesus and the Apostles, that the King of kings will soon return to this planet.

The concluding page of one of the works to which we have referred is as follows:

"Reader, these are momentous themes. Let us not throw them aside, and try to satisfy ourselves by saying, 'they are dark subjects, not intended to be understood,—we will have nothing to do with prophecy!' We may depend upon it, then, it will have something to do with us; for 'one jot or tittle' of threatening as well as of promise, shall in no wise fail of accomplishment; and our neglect, and consequent ignorance of God's revealed truth, will only add to our guilt and condemnation in the great and last day which is surely—SPEEDILY coming. Speedily, we say, for every thing conspires to force upon us this conviction. The state of the church and the world exactly accords with all the predictions respecting it immediately preceding the setting up of the kingdom for which we pray. All the prophetic periods also, according to the most careful and patient researches of our profoundest chronologers, converge, with a wonderful harmony, to a narrow point of time in these very days in which we live; so that he who closes his eyes to the 'signs' of the times, and his ears to the solemn and emphatic injunction of the Savior to 'WATCH' for the glorious apocalypse of which these 'signs' were to be the sure precursor, must do so at his peril.

The Lord help us to give 'heed unto his prophetic word, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise in our hearts.'

'Blessed,' says John, 'is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.' 'Behold he cometh with clouds.'

'And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book. He which testifieth these things saith, surely I come quickly; Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.'"

"THE COMING MAN."

The spirits and Spiritualists have much to say about "the coming man," who is soon to be developed, and bring harmony out of our disordered world, through the agency of the spirits. The demons well know that the time for the second coming of Christ is at hand; hence they are trying all ways to divert the attention of the people from the true to a false, or anti-Christ. The spirits deny that there is any personal coming of the Messiah, but claim that his second advent is now taking place in the spiritual manifestations.

We have recently received the first number of a new work, entitled, "A New Bible for the Church of the New Born." It contains 32 octavo pp., and eleven more numbers are promised. It is published in Chicago, Ill. It purports to be under the control of the "World's Congress of Spirits," who claim to be "preparing the way for the true Christ," by which they mean the system of Spiritualism. These spirits say Christ is coming "in a way that but few can comprehend," that is, "clairvoyantly." "Hence," say the spirits, "The masses" may "not find out for several years after Christ makes his appearance clairvoyantly," that he has come. This reminds us of what Jesus said when his disciples asked him, "What shall be the sign of thy coming?" Jesus answered and said unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you; for many shall come in my name saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many." It is said there are some two hundred persons living now who are each claiming to be Christ. "If they shall say unto you (as the spirits and their followers do,) Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth; Behold, he is in the secret chambers (in circles); believe it not."—Matt. 24. "For the Lord HIMSELF shall descend from heaven."—1 Thess. 4: 16.

In the first number of the "New Bible," we find the following "INTRODUCTION BY JESUS:"

"For many years, there has been a number of professing christians looking for my second appearance on earth. Some have believed that I should make my appearance in the same physical body I lived in when on earth: some have believed I would have a new body, formed out of magnetism, electricity, and such grosser elements as might be necessary;—while others have believed that I should appear spiritually (or celestially) to those who were sufficiently developed, either clairvoyantly, or clairsentiently, or both ways, to those who were chosen and unfolded for my reception; and this third class of believers are correct in their judgments; for I have appeared to and influenced several mediums these last few years; but it must be very evident to every one of great wisdom, that however much I may try to communicate through many mediums, I can give the highest and most valuable communications through but one. As persons are differently organized, they stand related to me as superior and inferior. You may now ask, who is my superior medium? If you can not tell by the works and writings I produce through him, then I can not convince you by giving his name; for it is very easy counterfeiting a name, but utterly impossible to perfectly counterfeit my works in all things: for to do so, would make the actor equal to the originator of his medium.

Many discoveries will be published in this Journal, never before given through any medium, or made by persons in the physical body—not even by myself when living on earth. But we shall not claim perfection for all that is published in this book, although it reaches higher and broader, in many parts, than has ever been given to mortal men before on your earth.

In examining this work, let common sense be your guide, praying God the Father to inspire your soul, and give you wisdom and understanding to appreciate and practice all of its truth. Amen.

Signed, JESUS, Formerly of Nazareth.

The "SUPERIOR MEDIUM" referred to in this "Introduction" is one with whom we are personally acquainted. He claims to be Christ's special medium. He is the one who is editing the new Bible of which we have been speaking. We have spent hours in conversation with him, and have heard him advocate purer morals and a higher type of christianity than is ordinarily heard from the pulpit; but have since learned from the most reliable authority, that he was at the same time a very bad man, guilty of the vilest conduct; even so much so, that some Spiritualists refused to associate with him.

Thus Satan transforms himself into an angel of light, by good talk, in order to cover up his wicked designs, and, seduce the unsuspecting. We think nothing can more fully merit the title of "anti-Christ" than SPIRITUALISM.

"SPIRTUALISM UNVEILED."

"Probably as good as any thing that can be said on the subject of this modern delusion, which is ruining thousands who embrace the parent doctrine of inherent immortality."—Herald of Life.

"It is good, and will do good."—D. F. Newton.

Confession of a Spiritualist.—"I have never read or heard any exposition that so well covered the ground, as yours. The great ones of this country, and all countries, have attempted to account for the manifestations, but before their books could be had, other forms would be given by spirits that could not be accounted for by their theory."

"SPIRITUALISM UNVEILED" is a work which we think is conducive of good. The author shows this error to be the offspring of demons, and proves it from believers in the theory to be subversive of morality and christianity; and having tendency to destroy the marriage relation.... We hope our readers will read this book, that they may be convinced of the evils of Spiritualism, and have wherewith to answer those who are in danger of being led away with this delusion.—Friend of Virtue.

NEW WORKS.

We have just received three new works, the object of which is to show that the second personal coming of Christ is at hand. The titles are as follows:—

"The Coming Reign of Christ." By S. W. Paine. Price 75 cents, postpaid.

"'Thy Kingdom Come.' What does it mean?" By S. W. Paine. 25 cts. postpaid. Address A. P. Jolliffe, Box 1199, Philad., Pa.

"The European Sphinx, or Satan's Masterpiece." By C. Colgrove, Baptist Minister, Sardinia, Erie Co., N. Y. Price 25 cts.

By the "European Sphinx" he means Napoleon III. One prominent object of this work is to show that Louis Napoleon is "the personal antichrist and the man of sin," and consequently that "the coming of the Lord is at hand." We learn that a large number of English expositors, who believe in the immediate coming of Christ, hold the same view, as well as many on this continent. This idea is gaining ground among prophetic students.

THE RACE-COURSE.

We commend the following truthful remarks in the New York Independent of Aug. 9th, from the pen of Theo. L. Cuyler, one of its best contributors. When speaking of the race-course at Saratoga, he says:—

"Without going into the enclosure to witness the sports, I have studied the outside developments of the past week, and no longer feel the slightest doubt that the race-course is an unmitigated device of the devil. A christian has no more moral right to pay his dollar at the gate of a racing-ground than he has to patronize a gaming-house or a brothel. Where one man attends to gratify an æsthetic taste for superb animals, ten go there for the excitement of betting. In fact, if the theatre were stripped of its sensuality, and the race-course of its gambling, both of those popular institutions would soon go a-begging for patronage. Passion is the reservoir that feeds them both."

THE ATLANTIC CABLE.

The cable is doing wonderful things. We learn that news from Paris and London at noon is read in the 4 o'clock P. M. edition of the Boston Journal, of the same day. Our grandfathers would not have believed that such things would ever take place in this world, in 1866. The cable transmits a letter each second. It is thought that it takes about one third of a second for an electrical wave to pass from Heart's Content to Valentia Bay.

The following interesting item is from the New York Independent:

"The annihilation of time and space is in itself so astounding that men have to reflect to take in its full meaning. These changes have come so suddenly that one can hardly realize the revolution they bring. Take a single fact, one of many. On Monday, July 30th, Mr. Field received a message of congratulation from Mr. Ferdinand de Lesseps, the projector of the Suez Canal. It was dated at Alexandria, in Egypt, the same day, at half past one o'clock P. M., and received in Newfoundland at half past ten A. M. Let one look at the globe, and see over what a space that message flew. It came from the farthest East, and from the land of the Pharaohs and the Ptolemies; it passed along the shores of Africa, and under the Mediterranean, more than a thousand miles, to Malta; thence it leaped to the continent, and shot across Italy, and over the Alps, and through France, under the Channel, to London; then across England and Ireland, till from the cliffs of Valentia it struck straight into the Atlantic, darting down the submarine mountain which lies off the coast, and over all the hills and valleys of the watery plain, resting not till it touched the shore of the New World. In this morning's flight it has passed over one-fourth of the earth's surface, and so far outstripped the sun in his course that it reached its destination three hours before it was sent! Who shall say that the age of miracles is past?"

THE WEST.

BRO. GRANT:—We have just closed our seventh successful tent meeting. New churches have been raised in nearly every place, so far, this year. I shall be at Wilbraham; and pray for unity, peace, and success of the cause of Christ there. Will you please give our notice of the Western Campmeeting at De-Kalb? You will find it in the last Voice. This meeting comes so soon after Wilbraham, I cannot attend Alton Bay, as I had intended.

Truly yours, JOSHUA V. HIMES.

HOW IT IS RECEIVED.

The Tract, "Universalism." I wish to report that having given a spread of these tracts among many interested friends for their perusal, I have received the unanimous replies—"The best thing I have yet seen; I have sent to my Universalist neighbor that copy. Will you let me have another?" "The system can't stand before the argument advanced in that tract you gave me." "That tract ought to have a wide circulation." "What do they preach for, if all are to be saved? their preaching don't save any body." "That's a capital tract you gave me. I gave it to a friend, and was requested to get another from you."

Thus I find the tract is going. I have noticed that no reply comes as yet from the advocates of that system. Their batteries do not reply. The position we take as a people, advocating the total extinction of life, unless united to the living vine (Jesus Christ); the utter destruction of being, if not found in Christ, when he comes; the complete overthrow of all the wicked, extermination from the presence of God; gives it a citadel that God commands, and will take more than many inferential texts of Scripture to batter it down, so that Satan's hosts can inherit the New Jerusalem.

To be mixed up with pirates and murderers, who died unrepentant of all their crimes, would make endless discomfort (if not misery) for those who have been loyal to Jesus in this life. Let us do what we can, while the day lasts, for that deceived people. Some of the friends have supposed that I proposed to confine myself to this subject, forenoon, afternoon and evening; that was not the intention; but only as an evening address. I believe the subject of the immediate coming of the Lord stands out prominent before every other. May the Lord help us to be ready.

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.

As the time of our meeting at Alton Bay is close at hand, I wish to pen a few lines to the known, yet unknown people scattered abroad, who are looking and longing for the coming of Him who has their heart's affections; whom they have followed in their weakness in the midst of a scoffing, blind world. Come, my brethren and sisters, once more to the pleasant spot, to worship our heavenly Father and his dear Son. To be sure it has been somewhat expensive to you in the past; but a religion that costs nothing, is worth nothing. It cost Christ his life to save us, and it has cost many of his children the same. Lord, help us to follow the cloud of witnesses.

This year there will not be so much done in building, consequently the meeting will not be nearly as expensive. Bro. J. G. Smith is doing all that he can to have rail road and boat fares reduced; and while dealing with the speculating world in these days, he has his patience well tested; but, not being weary in well doing, he is pressing on to have every thing just as pleasant as he can for you to meet together once more to praise our coming King, and to invite our fellow men to Christ. Many of the dear saints that we met with there last year, we shall meet with no more till Jesus comes. A watchman, a father, or a mother in Israel, have fallen asleep in Jesus. A dear wife or husband, and perhaps a little one, have gone to the resting place of the dead, since we took the parting hand at Alton Bay; but you and I still live, and I hope for Christ. Then let us meet once more to worship God, for it may be our last. God help us to come in the name of Christ; and if there is one of God's poor, yet living ones, who has not the means to come, and you believe Jesus is soon coming, sell and give alms, and show by your works you believe what you say. Living men and women are what are wanted; for our dear Lord is coming, and my heart says, Come, my Lord, clothe us with immortality, and bring our dear ones to life. JOSEPH PINKHAM.

A Response to Books Sent.

A minister in Brothertown, Wisconsin, to whom a $10.00 Library was sent some weeks since, for a newly-organized Sunday School, writes:—"The children were quite jubilant over the new books; and well they might be, for they were a choice treasure. We all express our thanks to our friends who were so kind as to heed our call for help. May the good Master's blessing be upon them, and upon those who are ready to perish for lack of knowledge; that, when the harvest is gathered, we may have a good time of rejoicing." J. RAYMOND.

LETTER FROM ST. LOUIS.

BRO. GRANT:—In company with sister Mary, we were called at quite an early hour this morning to visit a dark woman, who was said to be dying of cholera. We wound our way through one of the most God-forsaken alleys our city affords; and in a low, dark room, very small as well, we found the poor sufferer. She had been sick but a few hours, but was suffering as only those know on whom this fatal and dreaded epidemic preys. Of the poverty, filth and misery enclosed within the little room, I shrink from writing. Death's grappling bands were slowly but firmly coiling around her, while the poor victim was without God and without hope. Her companion was administering to her wants, he too unsaved; but every few moments he would burst into tears, and cry out in a most heart-rending and deplorable voice, "Holy Jesus! Master! have mercy!"

We knelt down by her bed-side, and sister Mary prayed, in an earnestness of soul which the time demanded, for her rescue. We then sang, but she being so racked with pain, could exercise but little if any faith. Thus we left the poor sufferer to a just and merciful God.

This is one of the many cases that haunt our great and wicked city, and especially among the dark population, who are deprived of almost every comfort in life, living in poorly ventilated rooms in families, and untidy in the extreme.

Under the divine care and protection of God, our little church is thriving. He has in his own time and order marshalled a small force here, who are constantly on the move, and inspired by the same spirit that Paul had when he said, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me. For when I am weak, then am I strong."

It may interest some to know how we divide our time in regard to meetings. As we like the example left by sister Mary Magdalene, when she was found so early at the sepulchre, we follow it by having a prayer meeting Sunday morning, at five o'clock, to pray more especially for grace to perform the duties of the day, and yield ourselves as clay in the hands of the potter to our Master, for such use as shall be for his glory. We always have a blessed season. Our next meeting is a class at nine o'clock, preaching at half past ten. Sabbath School at half past one, P. M., preaching at three, also at half past seven, after which we have a conference meeting, which usually holds until half past ten.

During the week we have four meetings and a Bible class. At our evening meetings it is quite a common affair that from the outside are introduced chips, gravel, turf; and a few evenings ago a stone of considerable size came whizzing in at the door, passing directly over our heads, falling in my lap. But trifles do not disturb us. The Lord is the refuge of his people, and he will take care of the stones and the vile hands that cast them.

This abuse is from the whites, in consequence of the indignation, shut up like fire in their bones, which bursts forth like a volcanic eruption, discharging all but fire; and even that is not an exception, as the building in which we worship has been badly burned underneath and around us, while our hall came out without the smell of fire. It is supposed to be the work of the incendiary.

In our meetings on Lord's day there always seems to be more or less conviction, but as we are in a business part of the city, in a public hall, sister Mary has not deemed it expedient to invite seekers to the altar; it always creates so much confusion among the African people on such an occasion. But three weeks ago there seemed to be so much conviction, she gave an invitation to any that might wish to come. At once three came, which produced the effect we so much feared. At the same time some were singing, others shouting, others crying for mercy, which combined caused quite an uproar, and the result was, an enemy turned the key upon us, which had been thoughtlessly left in the door; but I suppose his conscience smote him, and he yielded to his better nature and undid his foul doings.

About this time a man living in the vicinity came in raging, and inquired of a gentleman standing near me who had the charge of the meeting? He at once pointed to me, and said, "There is one"; and then to sister Mary, adding, "There is the other." At this time she was trying to silence them so as to dismiss the meeting. The impetuous man then came directly to me saying his wife had been nearly dead for a week, and that the noise commenced at a very early hour in the morning, and had kept up ever since. After he had freed his mind to me, he made the same complaint to sister, saying he would displace us if we had such proceedings. After he became quite satisfied that he could neither frighten nor drive, he concluded to coax by saying, "If you please," to which we willingly complied, as far as we could and please God. Again the words of the Lord proved sure,—"One shall chase a thousand, and two put then thousand to flight"; and we have not heard of him nor seen him since.

The following week, Bro. McNiel, a white man, preached, after which he invited them to the altar, and four came; and again we suffered considerable disturbance. Last Sunday evening, before preaching was over, a young woman came up to the altar, and threw herself upon her knees, crying for mercy. If we continue to have any uncommon noise, I fear that complaints will be made by those living near by, and the hall be taken from us; then we are homeless indeed.

If we but had a church in which to worship, I have every evidence to believe that many would be saved. In a house designed for the worship of God, it is expected it will be used as the worshipers see fit, and a noise is unnoticed; or if not, no one would dare interfere in our land of religious rights and liberty.

To you, my Bro., my sister, individually, I make my plea. Will you in the name of the Lord assist in moving forward this great and glorious work by casting in your mite? But is it possible I hear one here, and another there, who is withholding what God in his goodness has placed him over as steward, saying, "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled"? I answer, "What doth it profit? show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show you my faith by my works. For wilt thou know, oh vain man, that faith without works is dead?" If you could visit one of our meetings, and listen to the dark man or woman so long bound down in tyrannical chains, woven, link after link, by the paler human band, and secured by the arch-fiend that rules the hearts and lives of so many of the children of men, rejoicing in the blessed hope of the soon coming Deliverer; methinks the most covetous heart and miserly grasp would yield up its trust. Which one of you, when the Master cometh, will hear the denunciation penetrating the ear that has so often been stopped to the cries from every quarter, "The poor ye have always with you,"—"Your garments are moth-eaten, your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire?" Rather let me be as the poet has expressed:

"No foot of land do I possess,
No cottage in this wilderness,
A poor wayfaring man."

I have no desire by any word to force any one to give here who feels it is needed more elsewhere. Nay, only be led by the Spirit's promptings, and leave the result with your final Judge. But when I see men and women, professing to believe and preaching that the Lord is coming in one, two, or five years, and holding on with an unyielding grasp to means that rightfully belong to the Lord and are needed in the advancement of his cause,—are enlarging barns, houses, farms, and making various improvements, that this generation will receive little or no benefit from,—I can say, at least, I marvel greatly.

In weakness, and humbleness of mind, I trust, I have tried to discharge my duty. I now feel like casting the care on Jesus, and not forget to pray. I would be glad to write often, but the demands of the church, and calls we have from the sick, press us for time. Sister and I shall visit the East the present month, the Lord willing. Yours,

St. Louis, Mo. FRANCELIA F. CURTIS.

For the World's Crisis.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

The cause is often strengthened and different localities advertised in this way, better than any other; especially new places. We are in the gleaning time, sure enough; but some localities will receive the truth, if it is judiciously presented, and the truth selected for the times and the people. Simple truth, with good religion, will do more in convincing some, yea, many minds, that could not appreciate a strong doctrinal position at first; and those that have but one thing to present, fail of doing any thing in the way of gathering.

I was renewed in my belief on this point in going to Bro. Jacob Wilkinson's barn meeting, my first appointment on this trip. I found a large barn full, ready to hear and receive strong meat,—prophecy, signs, etc., who had been instructed in the first principles by Sr. Julia Bussell, a plainly-dressed and working sister. Much good has been done in that region by her talk, example, and prayers. Like Naomi, she gathered a good bundle for the harvest. I had a good time.

In the next place, there was a fight in the neighborhood, and all the men had gone to quell it, and I was left with a few boys and girls. As I was about to dismiss them, a dispatch came for me to go to the scene of action. The man had been to war, and was drunk, and threatened to shoot any one that interfered with him. He snapped a cap just as I got there at some one. This looked squally for a meeting; but I got a chance to talk with the fellow, and the elements settled down, and we went back and had a meeting, and good attention.

Next to Meredith Neck, but what a time getting there. O what a rain! We were three hours in an open boat on the Lake. I got wet through, and blistered both hands. I borrowed a suit of clothes throughout to preach in. This was worse than the fight for me; but we had three good meetings with an old Advent church, founded in 1843. I found a man who said I took him prisoner fifteen years ago, at a tent meeting in that place, and he was sick in the night, and I doctored him, and let him go. I had forgotten it until now. He is trying to serve the Lord.

Next to Lake Village, and preached in Bro. Bundy's meeting-house, where I had a good, free, high time, thank God.

Next to Concord, where we had a battle for five weeks last spring with Spiritualism

Mohammedanism, and ultra fanaticism, which opposed the work of God, as they always had; yet, the good fruits of the meeting are seen and felt. It is one of the most quiet, spiritual, united churches that I know of in New England, except two or three; and as long as they keep together, praying, instead of talking former troubles, they will live. To talk about troubles will never make them less.

Next to Warner. I got out two miles short of my appointment. When I got to the meeting, I found the long Union hall well filled. They were all strangers to me, but God gave me a good time in preaching the truth.

Next to Waterloo, where all kinds of fanatical errors had been preached. Only the Sabbath before, one preached as follows: The gospel had never been preached, and never would be until Christ came again. He only came the first time to make division, and made things worse. The darkening of the sun was fulfilled at Pentecost; the falling stars was the death of the apostles; the time of trouble at the destruction of Jerusalem; and it was nothing to him whether sinners were saved or not; and he was ashamed that he ever prayed for them, and had done; for they would all have another chance in the "age to come," when millions of children would be born in the kingdom, after Christ comes. He thought there might be fifty resurrections, and those that were lucky enough to get on a wedding garment would be admitted, etc.

Such stuff disgusted nine out of ten; yet some who had formerly been his friends swallowed it down. This class interrupted while I was showing that we had something to do about our salvation. The little flock here are getting their eyes open about what kind of food they eat.

Next to Bradford, over hills and through farms that are burdened with wood and rocks. I thought these farmers ought not be obliged to pay a tax. To be an inhabitant of such a dismal place is curse enough. One man showed me his horse pasture of twenty acres or more, and not over four of land. The rest was covered with round stone, from the size of a boy's head to that of a house. The man said it was a good horse pasture, for they could not run away from him when he went to catch them. I thought so too. What a contrast with Illinois. But with this curse, they were blest with good water and wood, and had no mud. I thought it was a great blessing to Abraham to be dead, and know nothing about what different curses there were on some parts of his great farm. Yet, crops look well. When they can get a spot of ten rods square, it is planted. Apple trees will grow between the rocks, and fruit looks well. In going four miles, we rise and fall over two thousand feet, going over the different hills. Illinois people would call them mountains.

The people turned out to meeting from every hill and valley, but varying in time of arrival one hour, which makes it hard for a preacher who uses no notes.

Next, back to Warner, Union Hall. Stirred up the Rappers and Universalists. Next to Manchester, where I found a few that have lived through the different spiritual epidemics. Next to Lowell, where I found Bro. Daniel Churchill standing up straight for the present truth, determined, if they sink or swim, to reject this floating, wolfish stuff that has so torn and scattered the flock of God in other places. Every body, or church, ought to have one eye in it to look out for wolves in sheep's clothing, that always have one hobby to ride. It is time to have such exposed, some way or other. The dear children are suffering needlessly on this account.

Next to Lawrence, where they have always kept up consistent and full meetings. At South Reading I found a good little church, and some good workers, who have produced an increase. The sisters work there nobly.

At Boston things are in a good state. On the whole, the real cause of the Advent stands well generally. Hiram Munger.

Correspondence.

From Sr. L. Jackson.

Bro. Grant:—I do bless God for the Crisis, which comes laden every week with rich epistles from the dear saints. It has been growing better ever since this year commenced its course. I do not know where I should have been now, if I had never been permitted to read any Advent publications; but now, although the darkness all around is so great it can plainly be felt, we have light in our dwelling. We are trying to serve God and wait for his Son from heaven.

I wish to make a request through the columns of the Crisis. We have a dear son who has been afflicted for years with fits, till his mind is impaired. His health is gone, and he must soon fall by the power of the enemy, unless God should interpose in his behalf. We have done all for him that humanity can do. Now will the saints make it a subject of special prayer and supplication that God would manifest his mighty power in restoring our son to health and usefulness, and cause his great name to be glorified in this place; or will some of the elders, full of the Holy Ghost, visit him according to James 5: 14, 15? We know God is just as able and just as willing to work miracles now, as in the days of the apostles; and he does and will heal the sick, in answer to prayer, just the same as when he sent forth the seventy and commanded them to heal the sick. Luke 10: 9; Matt. 10: 8. Also see his never-failing promises in Luke 16: 17, 18.

May the Lord bless all the dear saints and give them apostolic faith in these last days of time, is the prayer of your sister waiting for the kingdom. Lydia Jackson.

From Bro. J. B. Drew.

Bro. Grant:—I have taken the privilege to write you a few lines. I am old and feeble; but I am trying to get something beforehand, in order to recompense you for the kindness which you have shown me, by sending me the World's Crisis, which, I can assure you, has been a welcome visitor to me. I hold it as a leading star to Jesus. I am now out visiting the brethren. I met with a brother at Great Falls, and heard a discourse from Bro. Smith, who administered the Lord's Supper. I find the principal part of the brethren are looking for Jesus. What a blessed prospect there is before the believer in Christ. The light grows brighter and brighter as we near the portals of glory.

Well, dear brethren and sisters, let us hold fast to the end, and gain that crown which fadeth not away. Your Bro. in Christ,

West Ossipee, N. H. J. B. Drew.

From Bro. J. Morrison.

Bro. Grant:—I would say a few words of comfort to the waiting brethren and sisters, especially those tried ones who have been looking and longing for their absent Lord for the long period of twenty or twenty-five years. Hope long deferred makes the heart sick; but let us rejoice, for the coming of the Lord is drawing nigh. "The trial of" our "faith, being much more precious than of gold, . . . though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ; whom having not seen," we "love; in whom, though now" we "see him not, yet believing," we "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Be of good cheer, for we are loved by God our Father; beloved by his Son, our elder brother, and by the Holy Ghost, which emanated from the Father, and was sent into the world by the Son, for a specific purpose.

Beloved, let us not be dismayed, while surrounded by such an array of strength; though earth and all its powers may oppose, we have nought to fear while we tread the pilgrims' path, marked out by the Savior, who himself was "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." Let us remember it was for the joy the Father set before him, that enabled him to endure the grief and all the scoffs and contempt that an apostate church and the world were capable of heaping upon him. Glory be to his name, that we have the same joy set before us to comfort, console, sustain, and to compel us to hasten on towards the high lands of glory, while we are walking through our pilgrimage; for we know our redemption is drawing nigh, the reign of peace.

O come to Christ, ye troubled and tempted ones; and the lost, and weary, and heavy laden, come to Christ, and have peace and rest, now and for ever more. O come before the door of mercy is shut, for the time is at hand, when they that are filthy will be filthy still; and they that are holy will be holy still. Says Jesus, "I come quickly. Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus." John Morrison.

From Sr. E. L. Marsh.

Bro. Grant:—I think we are living in a time when the christian has great reason to rejoice in view of future prospects, which to those who are ready, waiting and watching, are truly bright and glorious; yet we mourn that many in this vicinity are cold in the blessed cause, and dead while they have a name to live. O that they would awake, and give up the world, and loose themselves from the snares of Satan, and gird themselves anew to the work whereunto they have been called. How true it is there are few that be saved. Where are the true and humble followers of the meek and lowly Jesus? I have looked for them, but often looked in vain. I do think ere long this world will be free from war, strife and bloodshed, and that we shall have a righteous Ruler, who will unfurl the banner of peace and love, and it will wave gloriously over this earth, now so loaded with the curse. O that we all may be faithful to the end, be conquerors through Christ over sin, death, and the grave, and sing the song of the redeemed on the new earth. Your sister in Christ, E. L. Marsh.

Obituaries.

Lambert. Died in Falmouth, Me., July 25th, 1866, Bro. John Lambert, aged sixty-eight years.

During our revival interest in Falmouth last spring, Bro. L. heard that the Lord was converting sinners in our meetings, but did not believe it, being greatly prejudiced against us as a people. Yet he came out to see and hear for himself. After listening two days, he arose and confessed his sins (and prejudice) as a backslider, saying he had been a Baptist many years, and thought he was acquainted with his Bible; but was astonished that he had never seen the truth, as we preached it, before; remarking that he had learned more of his Bible the two days he had attended our meetings, than in forty years before. The truth wrought a thorough change in him. He became a decided believer in Bible truths as we hold them, and rejoiced to know the Lord is coming soon. He labored faithfully for a few weeks, meeting with much bitter opposition, where he should have found sympathy and encouragement; then sickened and died in the joyous hope of immortality and eternal life "at the resurrection of the just." I. C. Wellcome.

Farley. Died in Hillsborough, N. H., July 24th, 1866, after a lingering sickness of about one year, Bro. David Farley, aged thirty-four years.

He leaves a widow and seven small children; the eldest only ten years last March. Bro. Farley tried to live a christian life, and toiled hard to gain a comfortable home for his family. But thus early he had to yield to disease and death. Here is a case where we may show the fruits of "pure religion and undefiled" (James 1: 27), by visiting 'the fatherless and widows in their affliction." And if any one wishes to "lend to the Lord" (Prov. 19: 17), here is an opportunity to "have pity upon the poor."

Words of comfort were spoken on the occasion by the writer, founded upon Rev. 20: 4.

"How long shall death the tyrant reign?" T. M. Preble.

Wilson. Died in Kittery, Me., Jan. 30th, 1866, Bro. Woodbury F. Wilson, son of Bro. Augustus and Sr. Nancy Wilson, aged sixteen years and ten months.

He was taken from us very suddenly. His voice mingled as usual in the family devotions in the evening. About an hour after, he complained of a distress in his stomach. A physician was called immediately, who spoke of it as a simple case, and said he could give him a dose to relieve him very soon. He then gave him a dose, but it did not relieve him. He gave another, and Woodbury never spoke again. He died instantly, without a struggle or a groan. Language fails to express the feelings of the family at that hour., Jesus was there to comfort and console. Praise his name. Nearly a year ago Woodbury indulged a hope in Christ, and his example has been worthy of imitation. May the Lord keep us faithful till Jesus comes. Praise God for the prospect of immortality. I. D. Goodwin.

Burnham. Died in Hollis, July 4th, Miss Lucinda S. Burnham, aged twenty years and six months. T. J. McDaniel.

Knowledge.—Knowledge cannot be acquired without pains and application. It is troublesome, and like deep digging for pure water; but when once you come to the springs they rise up and meet you.

☞ The pious christian needs no outward call to summon him to the hour of prayer. His time of secret prayer is to him a sweet and precious hour—the golden hour of the day.

Summary of News.

Foreign.

Liverpool Aug. 4th, Queenstown 5th.

There has been an extensive discovery and seizure of Fenian ammunition at Limerick, Ireland.

A Florence telegram of the 2d says that the Italian government has agreed to an armistice for four weeks from to-day. The union of Venetia to Italy is assured without any condition. The question of frontiers is reserved for peace negotiations.

France.

It is stated that the Government of the United States has preferred claims on certain persons in France who have disposed of public property belonging to the Southern Confederation.

An Imperial decree suppresses the Courier du Dimanche.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times asserts that the results of the war have occasioned a deep feeling of discontent in France. The Emperor himself was confident of Austria being the victor, and hardly concealed the hope that he should obtain the Rhine provinces without the cost of a single man.

London, Aug. 13. The Prince of Wales reviewed 30,000 volunteers in Yorkshire on Saturday. Cholera is decreasing in London.

Aug. 14. The Prussian Government has informed the Emperor of France that his demand for the extension of the frontier of his Empire to the banks of the river Rhine cannot be complied with, and that the Prussian territory there situated can never be ceded to France.

Paris, Aug. 14—noon. The Moniteur of this morning argues that the course of Napoleon in the recent negotiations has been guided entirely by his endeavors to preserve the peace of his own empire and of all Europe.

Aug. 14—Evening. Advices have been received from the continent indicating a probable renewal of the war between the Prussians and Bavarians upon the territory of the latter Power, and great fears are entertained of such an event.

Paris, Aug. 15. The Emperor received the Prussian ambassador to-day, who delivered the reply of Prussia to the French note, asking an extension of the frontier of France, which Prussia declared to be inadmissible. Napoleon replied that the demand was made to satisfy the public opinion of France. He deemed it just, but acknowledged the fairness of the Prussian Cabinet. He also said that the present relations should in no case be disturbed, and hoped Prussia would not overstep the line of the Main.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 15. The investigation into the attempt on the life of the Czar has ended. Several accomplices confessed that the object was a general revolution in Russia, and that two societies, hostile to the government, named "Orleanization" and "Hell," were at Moscow acting under the orders of the European Revolutionary Committee. Several Poles, who supplied the assassin, belonged to these societies.

Berlin, Aug. 15. The delay of peace is caused not by political differences, but by territorial questions, and especially the partition of Federal property. War with France is probable.

Domestic.

New York, Aug. Only two cases of cholera were reported in this city this morning, and five in Brooklyn.

St. Louis, Aug. 14. A strict quarantine is established below the city. Eighty-seven cases of cholera were reported to the Board of Health during the twenty-four hours ending at noon to-day, of which thirty-six were fatal. The Board of Health forbids the sale of melons, cucumbers, and all stale vegetables in any part of the city.

New Orleans, Aug. 14. There were twenty-eight deaths from cholera during the twenty-four hours ending this morning.

Savannah, Ga. Aug. 14. The Board of Health reports thirty-four deaths for the week ending to-day, including twelve of whites and twenty-two of blacks. There were nine cases of cholera among the blacks.

Town Destroyed.—On the 11th inst., a hurricane passed over the town of Monroe, Ohio, demolishing all the buildings except about half a dozen houses. The Methodist church was among the buildings destroyed. It was stated that two men were killed and two others were missing. A number of persons were injured. The damage to property is very great. As a ludicrous incident of the storm, we will remark that a cow is said to have been caught up by the wind and whirled into an apple tree! The storm passed over a narrow belt of country, destroying buildings and fencing, and uprooting trees in its way.

Fenian Matters.—Brigadier General Gleeson reports from Ireland to James Stephens that the Fenian organization in Ireland is as strong at the present time as any genuine lover of Irish liberty could wish, and numerically stronger than it was before the habeas corpus suspension. The people of Ireland have been taught through disappointment that they have put too much confidence in their American brethren, and that they must rely more independently on themselves; and they are determined to be hopelessly crushed or independent this present year, relying upon themselves entirely.

Items.

☞ An association, it is said, has been founded in Paris with the express object of making a new and "rigorously exact" translation into French of the Holy Scriptures. This translation, which the founders promise shall be far superior to the existing version, is to be the work of a number of competent persons taken from the three religious communities—Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish.

☞ Never in the experience of medical men in this city, as we are informed, have there been so many instances of bowel complaints as are now among us—especially among the young. One physician had eighty-three patients suffering from such affections under his care yesterday. We learn also that many cases prove fatal—suddenly so. Great care in dieting and drinking should be taken by every one.—Journal.

☞ When washing calicoes, infuse three gills of salt in four quarts of water; put the calico in while hot, and leave it till cold, and in this way the colors are rendered permanent, and will not fade by subsequent washing.

☞ A colored woman plucking some ears of corn in a field in the suburbs of Nashville, Tenn., was shot dead by the owner, a Methodist minister, on the 25th ult.

☞ In Egypt, says a gentleman who has traveled in that direction, where sunstrokes are of frequent occurrence, the Arabs dissolve some salt in water and pour it into the patient's ears, which renders speedy relief to the sufferer.

☞ A smoking clergyman observes, "I see no harm in smoking."—"No harm in smoking!"—Smoking only leads to drinking—drinking to intoxication—intoxication to bile—bile to indigestion—indigestion to consumption—consumption to death—nothing more!—Anti-Tobacco Jour.

☞ Although a printer may be "setting" all day, in his own way, he is a great traveler—or, at least, his hand is—as the following will prove: A good printer will set 8,000 ems a day, or about 25,000 letters. The distance traveled by his hand will average one foot per letter going to the boxes in which they are contained, and of course returning, make two feet for every letter he sets. This would make a distance each day of 48,000 feet, or more than nine miles, and in the course of a year, leaving out Sundays, the member travels about three thousand miles. Truly this is hand-power.

☞ The leaves of the elder, if strewn among corn or other grain when it is put into the bin, will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil. The juice will also kill bed bugs and maggots. Insects never touch elder bushes. The leaves of the elder scattered over cabbages, cucumbers, squashes and other plants subject to the ravages of insects, effectually shield them.

☞ Elliot, the missionary to the Indians, used to set apart whole days for prayer, especially when he had any remarkable difficulty before him, adopting Dr. Preston's mind, that "when we would have any great thing to be accomplished, the best policy is to work by an engine which the world sees nothing of."

☞ To clean grease from floors, spread over the stain a thick coat of soft soap, then pass a heated flat-iron a few times across it, after which wash immediately with clear warm water. I'll warrant you, after this treatment, it will never show its vile face again.

☞ Never encourage for an instant a wrong in yourself or your friend. It may not be best always to blame; but by silence, or by a hint, or in some gentle way, show at least your fear, lest an error might poison some weak, sinful mind. A drop of poison may do immense injury.

☞ The difference between rising at five and seven o'clock in the morning, for the space of forty years, supposing a man to go to bed at the same time at night, is nearly equivalent to the addition of ten years to a man's life.

☞ Extremes meet, but they generally meet in ruin.

Tent Meeting in Exeter, Me.

There will be a tent meeting in Exeter, Me., on the ground occupied last year, near the Chamberlain meeting-house, commencing Saturday, Sept. 15th, and hold the following week. Brethren abroad are requested to attend. Will Bro. R. Wendell, D. Holt, S. S. Brewer, and A. Decker attend, with brethren in Maine, to preach the word of life? Those coming from the west by R. R. will leave the cars at Newport, and those from the east at Etna, where they will find conveyance to the ground. We hope all coming with tents, will be on the ground in season to erect them the first day. There will be a boarding tent on or near the ground, for the accommodation of all who wish.

DEAR SAVIOR, COME!

AIR.—"Come home, father."

Savior, dear Savior, O when wilt thou come?
Thy children are looking for thee,
And hoping and praying with thee to go home,
And in thy dear presence to be.
Our hearts are made sad in this dreary world,
Where Satan in triumph holds sway;
O come with thy banner of vict'ry unfurled,—
O come, blessed Savior, we pray!
O come! O come! O come!
Savior, dear Savior, O come!

CHORUS.

Hear our lone cries and complaints,
While along in this cold world we roam;
O hasten and comfort thy sorrowing saints,
Dear Savior, dear Savior, O come!

Savior, dear Savior, when, when wilt thou come?
The time drags so heavily on,
While waiting and watching for morning to break,
And the shadows of night to be gone.
Here our loved ones are fading and passing away,
And o'er their cold ashes we weep;
O come, thou Life Giver, come quickly, we pray,
Awaken those dear ones from sleep.
O come! O come! O come!
Savior, dear Savior, O come!

Savior, dear Savior, soon, soon thou wilt come!
The signs of thy coming we see;
Haste, haste, King of Glory! come, sit on thy throne,
Let us with thy people then be.
How sweet it will be when the last tear is given,
When sorrow and care take their flight;—
The beautiful city will come down from heaven,
All beaming with glory's own light,
O come! O come! O come!
Savior, dear Savior, O come!

LABORS IN SOUTHERN MINNESOTA AND NORTHERN IOWA.

In compliance with the earnest request of friends in different places I have visited, that, on my arrival home, I would write, I take my pen to give an account of this last scene of my labors.

In May I took a trip west to Kasson, Mantorville, and Wasioja, where I was received with much kindness. I have since learned quite an interest was created, particularly in Mantorville and Wasioja. I seldom see a more intellectual and attentive audience than that which filled the hall when I spoke in Mantorville. In Wasioja, I spoke in the college. The professor of the college, with his wife, was present each time, and with others seemed to take a deep interest. I had but recently returned from this effort, thinking to take a week's repose with my family, prior to going to the annual conference of Iowa, to be held at Cascade, which I had partially engaged to attend, when Eld. Allen came to see me, bringing an earnest request from Eld. Sheldon and Bro. Elliot, that I should let nothing prevent my attending the tent meeting at Elliota, and the series of meetings to be held at Preston. This call was as unexpected as it was perplexing; but after much prayer and exercise of mind, I complied with the wishes of our Minnesota friends, wrote to Bro. Dickenson an account of how matters stood, and requesting him to excuse me from attending the conference.

June 16th, in company with my husband, I started for Elliota. We staid in Leonora that night. Next morning, being Lord's day, we pressed on and entered the tent while the brethren and sisters were enjoying a love-feast. We had a large audience to-day, estimated at from seven to eight hundred. Eld. Sheldon gave the morning and evening discourse, while I gave the middle discourse. The meeting continued through the next four days, during which I spoke twice, and Elds. Sheldon and Hough did the balance of the preaching. Thursday evening closed up this series. One young lady had started, been immersed by Bro. Sheldon, and this evening, with another, was added to the church.

Friday, June 22nd, went to Preston. The meeting commenced here this evening, in the Court House hall. Bro. Sheldon preached to a good and attentive audience. Lord's day we had a full house. Eld. Sheldon gave the morning and evening discourses, while it fell to my lot to give the middle discourse. Monday and Tuesday there were three discourses each day; Elds. Hough and myself giving one each. I never heard Brn. Sheldon and Hough preach with more force and earnestness than through these two series of meetings. Their whole heart seems to be in the work.

June 27th. The meeting is to continue this day. I would gladly remain and attend it, but must leave in order to fulfill my engagements at Floyd. I took the stage this morning, and paid my fare to Decorah, and arrived at Burr Oak, and sat down with the passengers to dine. All were strangers to me, although I was not to them. I received an earnest request to remain and speak in Burr Oak that evening, being assured that I could be taken across the country, so as to intersect with the other stage route in the morning, and not delay my arrival at Floyd. Accordingly, my trunk was unstrapped from the stage, and I remained. One young man, who had heard me preach, but was a non-professor, took his team and spent the whole afternoon in circulating the appointment. May He who has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these," my little ones, "ye have done it unto me," give him a rich reward in the kingdom. Spoke in the hall this evening to a good and attentive audience. The dear young lady, who made a start and joined the church at Elliota, was present and took her seat by my side, at the head of the hall, and I believe was greatly strengthened and encouraged by the exercises. How my heart has ever warmed towards this dear young sister. I believe her to be a precious jewel of the Lord, and, should time continue, she may find her mission to be a large one.

Each tavern in the place offered me a free home for the night, but I went home with a lady in the place, with whom I had been previously somewhat acquainted, and whose husband kept the store here.

June 28th. Bade farewell to these dear inquiring people, who, though not even professing godliness, had thus kindly cared for and listened to me, and sent me with a fast team free of expense across the country, twenty miles, to New Oregon, where I arrived sometime before the stage came in from Decorah. I took the stage from here for Howard Centre, where I arrived this evening.

June 29th. I took the stage this morning at three o'clock, and arrived in Osage between one and two o'clock. There is no stage from here to Floyd this afternoon, which is twelve miles distant. I cannot think of remaining in Osage over night, as I am already one day behind my time, and there are anxious hearts in Floyd expecting me. I hired a livery team to take me right through, and when I arrived there I was thankful that I did. I was extremely tired to-night, having rode most of the day since three o'clock in the morning; and most of the way in a crowded stage, over some of the worst roads I ever traversed. I yielded to the entreaties of friends, and went on the stand and addressed the audience twenty minutes, after which Eld. Chandler took up the thread of my discourse, and spoke twenty-five minutes.

Saturday evening I addressed the people again. Lord's day, we had large audiences, and three discourses; Elds. Chandler, Deyo, and myself giving one each. Eld. Deyo addressed the people Monday, myself Monday evening. Tuesday I felt very unwell, and so worn out with constant speaking and traveling, that I felt entirely unfit for duty, and would have returned home; but the friends said so much, I concluded to stay. I took a sweat, and some medicine, and rested two days. Thursday I resumed my labors. July 8th we closed our meetings in Floyd. Agreeable to the arrangements of the committee, I addressed the people at half past ten; then, after a short intermission, Eld. Deyo gave a discourse, after which I retired to sister Smith's house to take some rest, and supposed my labors for the day were ended. But Bro. Deyo and wife soon found me out, and informed me that I must give the closing discourse, which was quite a trial to me; indeed I may truly say, I never spoke under such deep trial, as all the time I was in Floyd. I was so worn out when I arrived there, had such a depression of spirits, and felt myself so entirely unfit for duty, or public speaking, that the constant prayer of my heart was, "I pray thee have me excused;" and as to speaking once more to-day, it really did seem to me that I could not say one word to the edification of any person. Besides, I had spoken so many times, and so little to the purpose, I really felt the people needed something better than what poor me could deal out to them. But Bro. Deyo said I must speak, if it were not for more than ten minutes. Accordingly, I appeared before them again in my weakness, and spoke of the blessed hope. God gave to my sad heart such blissful visions of that precious rest that remains for the overcomer, that I was astonished when I closed to find how long I had talked. We had a melting time, and at the close one man arose. God grant he may be faithful and never fall out by the way. This closed our tent meeting in Floyd, during which I had spoken eight times, and Elders Chandler and Deyo did the balance of the preaching, besides very much valuable assistance in speaking, praying, etc., by other preachers who were present, and took part in the exercises,—Eld. Hiscox, Brn. Berryman, Wilcox and Lamphire, and Sr. Clark. I believe this church in Floyd to be a faithful, earnest church, living as brethren, and looking for the blessed hope. It cost my heart many a pang to bid them farewell, and my earnest prayer is, if we never meet again in this land of trial and tears, we may enjoy the unspeakable bliss of meeting on that glorified shore.

July 9th, Bro. C. Hubbard and wife took Sr. Deyo and myself to Marble Rock; while Eld. Deyo took the tent, arrived there, and pitched it. We had a good audience in the evening. Bro. Lamphire addressed them on the Abrahamic inheritance. July 10th. It fell to my lot to speak in the morning, and Eld. Deyo in the evening. July 11th, closed this series. I spoke at half past ten, after a short intermission; and Eld. Deyo at five o'clock. I gave the closing discourse to a large audience, which listened attentively, while many melted into tears. I expect to see fruits of this meeting in eternity. A certain professor was present and took notes through the meeting, preparatory to a review. I saw him busily engaged at this work, while I was giving my last discourse; but this did not trouble me. Had the pleasure of greeting at this meeting Eld. Janes, who had come on from Boylin's Grove to see about the tent meeting at that place.

July 12th, I went on to Boylin's Grove. I found the tent pitched. Eld. Hiscox, from Marble Rock, preached this evening. Eld. Deyo preached Friday and Saturday through the day, and I spoke each evening. Three females arose at the close of the meeting Saturday evening.

July 15th was a very warm day. The past night had been to me an almost sleepless one. I arose in the morning and sat down to breakfast, but could not eat. At the appointed time, people began to assemble in crowds. I spoke at half past eleven. It was excessively hot, and the sun's rays fell hot upon my head through the thin canvass of the tent, while I felt hardly able to stand, much less to speak; but the promise was verified,—"Lo, I am with you alway." O what a precious promise, amid perils by land, perils by water, and perils among false brethren. Jesus Christ is with us alway. Ah! yes, and thanks be to his name, though we wade through heavy trials, his grace is sufficient for us. Had the pleasure of meeting many of our New Hartford brethren and sisters at this meeting; among the rest, our beloved Bro. and Sr. Ingalls, who were so kind to me last winter. How it cheered my heart to meet them again in the land of the living. At three o'clock Eld. Chandler addressed them; at five I gave the closing discourse. After surrounding the Master's table, we gave the parting hand to the friends, which was very solemn to me, especially the bidding farewell to the dear man and his wife, with their precious children, who, though not professors, had taken me in and so kindly cared for me through this meeting. May God indeed bless them and theirs, sanctify them by his truth, and bring them to meet an unbroken family in the Paradise of our God.

July 16th, I bade farewell to our kind Bro. and Sr. Fryndale, whose house had indeed been a pilgrim's tavern through this series of meetings; and turned our faces toward New Hartford. This meeting in Boylin's Grove closed up my campaign in tent meetings, and engagements to labor in company with other preachers. Tarried to-night at Dea. Dumming's, in N. H. July 17th, took the cars for Manchester, in company with Sr. Deyo, while her husband returned to hold a discussion with the Professor at Marble Rock. We arrived in Manchester about noon, where I bade farewell to dear Sr. Deyo, whose cheerful presence and pleasant smile had been such a balm to my spirits ever since I commenced my present labors in the State. But this is a world of farewells, and we too must part. Well, so be it. We are fast nearing the port, the great haven of rest, where the Abrahamic family will part to meet no more.

This evening I spoke to the people in Manchester. July 19th, I closed my labors in this place. We had a full house, and deep interest. Bro. Goud and wife were here from Earlville, earnestly requesting me to open a series of meetings in that place; but my face is homewards. This campaign has been a long and hard one. I am very hoarse, and much worn, and cannot think of giving out another appointment before reaching my home. Eld. Kenney is still preaching in this place, and very much beloved by his church.

July 20th, I took the cars for Farley, and when I arrived, found Bro. Dickenson's sons and Sr. Gillet there with a team to convey me to Cascade, where I preached this evening. Had the pleasure of meeting Bro. E. P. Burdett, from Illinois, here. Sunday evening we closed up this series of meetings. We had a full house and deep interest. Monday morning I took the parting hand with Bro. Dickenson, wife and children, and other dear friends who had dropped in to say good bye and see me off, and started for Farley. There I took the cars for Dubuque, but found no boat going up the Mississippi that night; so I stopped at the Julien House until morning, then went on board the Key City, which soon commenced beating her way up the river. Wednesday, July 25th, our fair city Winona, with her enterprising and intelligent population, hove in view, and as our boat landed, and I saw my husband on the levee ready to receive me as I descended from the boat, the silent ejaculation of my whole being was, God is good. Nearly the first person I met on the levee, to greet me, was Eld. Hough, who is now stopping in Winona, and trying to build us up in the most holy faith.

July 27th, I preached a funeral sermon in Pleasant Valley. Lord's day, July 29th, I stood up in the midst of the dear brethren and sisters, with whom I stand connected, and tried to dispense the word of life. How like balm to my worn heart, and sunshine to my weary spirit, were their pleasant welcomes and kindly greetings; while I felt to say with the sweet Psalmist of Israel, "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts." "A day in thy courts is better than a thousand." "Blessed are they that dwell in thy house"; "they will be still praising thee. Selah."

For the World's Crisis.

LETTER FROM BRO. G. W. STETSON.

BRO. GRANT:—After an absence of a little over five months from my old field of labor, I returned, in compliance with earnest and pressing solicitations from the church, to Olena, Ohio, on May 17th, '66. During my sojourn east, my labors for the cause of truth were principally in Champlain, Coopersville, Wilmington, and Massena, N. Y., Addison and Rutland, Vt., and Montreal, C. E. In all these places there exist churches who are filled with the spirit of God's promise, and are anxiously looking and waiting for the "blessed hope," even the appearing of the glory of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ.

So far as I could judge, if anything is wanting in the churches which I have visited, it is not faith in the promises of God, or that those promises will not be speedily fulfilled, that is most lacking; but a want of godliness; a want of the Spirit and power which sanctifies soul, body, and spirit, sealing to the day of redemption, and preserving blameless unto the coming of our Lord. This, THIS, is what we now most need as a people—holiness, holiness of life, and holiness of heart; "Holiness to the Lord," by the Spirit of Christ, written upon the fleshly tables of the heart, that we may be Christ's epistles, read and approved of all men; that we may be a PECULIAR people, zealous of good works, whose God is the Lord.

O if every one who has named the name of Christ would "depart from iniquity," God only can tell how soon, if we stood like Sampson with our hands upon the main pillars of the temples of error, the superstructures built upon prejudice, bigotry, superstition and wickedness, would begin to sway, reel, creak, topple, totter and fall with a mighty crash, headlong to the ground, burying all these ungodly systems so deep under TRUTH, that they should be "as though they had not been"; beyond the power of a resurrection. Those who bear the vessels of the Lord should have CLEAN HANDS; yes, and clean hearts, and CLEAN LIFE too.

Another great want among us as a people, seems to me to be a lack of system in supplying the different fields with a fair and equitable amount of labor. It is true the demand is great, and the laborers are comparatively few; but so much the more do we need to reduce the labor of those few into systematized order, that it be made most available; and such arrangements should be entered into by the different local organized bodies, as would be best calculated to develop and bring into active exercise the latent force and talent among them. Feeling the necessity of this, the churches in this part of Ohio have consolidated, with a view to greater efficiency. Norwalk, Berlin, Fairfield, and Nevada, have come under one general head, making Norwalk the central point; but reserving to each its own distinct organic rights and privileges. The present arrangement brings into the field a more efficient working corps of laborers; and consequently a more regular supply to the different congregations than we have ever had before.

One thing more in relation to the churches in this connection, and we are done. The report has somehow gone abroad that we are exclusively "age to come" churches, and will not tolerate any preachers who do not advocate those views. Now I want to say to all the dear brethren everywhere, who love our Lord's appearing, and believe that he died for our sins, was buried, and rose again according to the Scriptures, for our justification; and who accept Paul's corollary, that those who "sleep in Jesus will God bring with him," to reign with Christ on the earth; making nothing but christian character the test of fellowship,—to ALL SUCH who are trying to live godly in Christ Jesus, our doors, our homes, and our hearts, are wide open; and we send greeting to them, and bid them God speed in every good word and work. We hail them with "The Lord is coming," and "bid them welcome." Nevertheless, it is true that probably three fourths or more of the individual members are believers in the "age to come"; but are not willing that this or anything else should be made a "hobby" to the exclusion of the fundamental principles of the gospel, and will not tolerate intolerance, nor be governed by "foreign powers," but administer their own internal policy in the fear of the Lord, fearless of man.

We do not intend to enact anything but what is right; and we intend to submit to nothing that is wrong; freely granting to others their right to be heard in matters of faith, with open ears and charitable hearts. We only reserve to ourselves that right we so gladly and freely accord to others. Having been constantly with and among this people for the past ten years, I know whereof I affirm, and I do know that they only desire TRUTH, that they may be sanctified thereby.

Olena, O. G. W. STETSON.

MY EXPERIENCE.

The following are some interesting items in the experience of M. Arnold, as published in the June number of the Earnest Christian:—

Now the most difficult struggle only commenced with me, to deny myself of all the sinful habits that were so deeply rooted in me from early childhood.

The first was that of drinking whiskey. Satan made me believe there was no harm in taking a little, only so as not to get drunk. And, with this idea, I went on for a while, and kept the liquor in the house; and when I would get out from home, I would stop at the taverns and get a dram. But I soon began to think there was something wrong about that. One day I went to a store and tavern at a village, and, as usual, went up to the bar and took a drink. A short time after this a little boy asked his old uncle whether I did not profess religion. He told him I did. "Well," said the boy, "I don't think he has, for I saw him taking a dram." Oh, what a dim light was I yet to the world. When my old neighbor told me that story, it was like a dagger to my heart. I then came so far by the grace of God, that I have not touched, tasted, or handled the cup for the last ten years. And, my brethren, I think we are showing a bad example if we encourage it in any shape or form.

The next habit to be abandoned was the use of tobacco. That was as near and dear to me as my right arm. But in every way that I looked back to my youth when I commenced the use of tobacco, I could see nothing that brought me to its use but pride and a desire to make a show. I saw it was altogether a filthy habit, and, worst of all, it was spending the Lord's money foolishly, which benefited neither soul nor body, but was an injury to both. And now I was going to quit this luxury in which I had so long indulged. My neighbors told me that such a thing was impossible. I asked the opinion of Bro. Fohl, on the use of the weed. He said that for others he could not tell, but for himself it would be very wrong. Well, that was little encouragement for me to go on, but at last I came to the conclusion that I must do something, so it came into my mind that if God wanted me to quit it he would give me grace, and I was determined to try. One evening I was sitting by the stove smoking my pipe, and when I was done, I threw it upon the kitchen cupboard, exclaiming: "Good bye, old pipe!" My wife told me it would not stay there very long. I then took another chew of tobacco and used it up well before going to bed. I took the rest out my pocket and put it away in a drawer where I had several good plugs. The next morning when I got up I reached in my pocket but no tobacco there. Then I thought, why is this that I have no tobacco? but I felt that God would not be pleased with me if I continued using it. After breakfast the appetite craved for the pipe, but that was thrown away. So I quit the use of tobacco at once. I often wonder how it is that God allows some of his children to indulge in these habits which they formed while yet in their sins, but would have me forsake them all.

SUSPENSION OF THOUGHT.

Dr. Mulholland, practising physician of this county, makes the following statement over his own signature of an incident that occurred in his practice in Milwaukee, Wis.

"In this city in 1859, there was a brick building in process of erection. As I was standing by, a hod carrier was just starting with a load of bricks for the top of the building. The boss workman called out from above, 'More bricks.' The hod carrier was just ready to respond 'Aye' aye,' when a brick fell from above and struck him on the head, breaking the skull and pressing it down upon the brain. He was carried a few rods to a surgeon's room, where he was trepanned, that is, the skull was raised from off the brain. This was about half an hour after he was hurt. The moment the skull was raised so as to allow the brain to act, he responded, 'Aye, aye,' in answer to the call of the workman for brick. Evidently these words were formed in the man's mind before the brick struck him. The pressure upon the brain suspended all thought. When the brain was allowed to act again, the mind took up its thread of thought right where it was broken off.—Dr. Mulholland."

The above incident shows conclusively, that the action of the mind is entirely dependent upon the action of the brain. When the brain ceases to act, thought is entirely suspended. Hence, of course, "The dead know not anything.—Review.

"EUROPEAN CONVULSIONS."

Under the above heading, we find the following in the August number of the Rainbow, an able monthly, published in England, edited by Dr. Wm. Leask:—ED.

It is not too much to believe that the state of the world at the present time is disposing many thoughtful men to look a little more closely into the holy Scriptures. If so, they will find that revelation has a great deal more to do with this world than is generally imagined. It has long been assumed that if we know the way of salvation and are prepared for heaven, we have secured the chief if not really the exclusive object of revelation. Men have been spoken to as if the great work of life was to learn how to die; they have been addressed as "immortal souls," and the business of the pulpit has been to fit them for a disembodied state and an immensely distant heaven. The world we live in, that by right of inheritance, by ransom, and by unfailing covenant, belongs to Jesus Christ our Lord, and upon which creative beneficence has lavished wondrous beauty and grandeur, has either been referred to as a thing of no permanent consequence, or ignored entirely as unworthy of mention when the gospel of salvation was the topic of discourse. Those grave systems of theology, from which the ministry generally, consciously or otherwise, draws its inspiration, are so much taken up with the relative positions of law and grace, and their scientific arrangement, that they have no time to tell us of the bright future of the very world where law and grace have both been manifested. We are not going to talk disparagingly of any of the weighty topics of systematic theology, nor is it possible for us to overstate the importance we attach to the salvation of a single individual; but we believe, and therefore must teach, that the priceless book which reveals JESUS as seeking the lost and shepherding the flock, also reveals Him as the chosen and anointed King, destined to rule the nations that are now and have so long been distracted, torn, and plagued by the sword and fire of horrible war. Creation groans, being burdened.

Human governments are all conspicuous and disastrous failures,—a fact which declares as plainly as a fact can, that the divinely appointed Ruler of humanity has not yet received his sceptre from the Ancient of Days. "Men's hearts are failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth." Many students of prophecy—and some of the most cautious of them in the pages of this magazine—have pointed to the present year as one likely to bring forth events of the most startling character. That 1866 would not come without at least unprecedented European convulsions was foreseen and declared. Already the correctness of the data on which this conclusion was founded is placed beyond doubt; but there is more to come, for the horizon darkens and the complications increase as we move onward.

We beseech men not to deceive themselves any longer with the notion that either art, science, commerce, diplomacy, or the preaching of the gospel, or all united, will bring about a peaceful millennium, either to the world or the church. That day comes not until the LORD JESUS return from heaven to earth to rule the world in righteousness. Every prediction bearing on the time of the end admonishes us that the period of that return is near. We speak without the slightest hesitancy when we say that mighty and marvellous changes are at hand. Assuredly, if christians saw a thousandth part of the issues involved in the Pre-millennial coming of their beloved Lord, they would do all in their power to make that glorious, yet terrible fact known—glorious to his friends, terrible to his foes. We are doing our utmost both to herald the dawn and sound the alarm, but we should have a host of willing helpers if the truth on this great subject were generally known. There is no mission in existence at this moment so important as that in which we are engaged. We speak emphatically and advisedly.

"THE COMING OF THE LORD DRAWETH NIGH." Brethren! help us to proclaim that!

A PREACHER'S TRIAL.

Rev. Robert Hall, one of the greatest of England's pulpit orators, not long after he settled over the Baptist church in Arnsby, in 1753, suffered much from doubts of his call to the ministry. One Monday morning he was so ashamed of his Sunday's work that he told his wife to go to the elders and tell them that he should not preach Sunday, and they must provide a supply. She refused to go, telling him to try what the Lord would do for him. He continued in the same mind all the week, and on Saturday insisted that his wife should comply with his request. She could not be persuaded, and on Sunday morning he went to the meeting, and himself told the people his dismal feelings and that he could not preach. An old member arose and said, "Go up into the pulpit and pray, and if your mind is not set at liberty, come down and we will spend the time in prayer; for I trust you are with a sympathizing people." He did so, and found his soul so enlarged that he preached from "Come, for all things are now ready," to the great edification of his people. He said afterwards that he found such fulness in that text, that there seemed matter enough in it to preach from as long as he lived.

COALS OF FIRE.

During the revolutionary war lived Peter Miller, "a man of great learning, and highly respected by the first men of the revolution." He was the leading member of an humble community of Baptists, located in Lancaster county, in the State of Pennsylvania. Adjoining or near to this community lived a man who distinguished himself for very base conduct toward the society to which Mr. Miller belonged, and treason to his country. On the latter charge he was arraigned, convicted and sentenced to death, and his property confiscated to the United States.

No sooner had this been announced than Peter Miller, with motives which they who know experimentally what it is to love their enemies are alone able to appreciate, set out on foot to visit Gen. Washington, at Philadelphia, for the purpose of interceding for the man's life. He had an interview with the General, and stated his petition; but in answer was told with characteristic decision, that as much as Washington esteemed him, the prayer in behalf of his unfortunate friend could not be granted. "My friend!" exclaimed Miller, "on the contrary, I have not a worse enemy living than this same man." "What!" rejoined Washington, "you have walked sixty miles to save the life of your enemy! That, in my judgment, places the matter in a different light; I will grant you his pardon." The pardon was immediately made out and placed in the hands of the disinterested petitioner, who, without losing a moment's time, proceeded on foot to Old Chester, fifteen miles distant, where the execution was to take place on the afternoon of that day.

Miller arrived at the spot just as the man was being conducted to the scaffold, who, seeing Miller with his long white friar-robe and tall staff in the crowd which had assembled to witness his death, remarked to a bystander: "There is old Peter Miller; he has walked all the way from Ephrata to have his revenge gratified to-day by seeing me hung." These words had scarcely been spoken when he was made acquainted with the very different nature of Miller's visit. The criminal's life was spared.

"Not rendering evil for evil, but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called that ye should inherit a blessing."—Obs.

MANNERS.—I make it a point of morality never to find fault with another for his manners. They may be awkward or graceful, blunt or polite, polished or rustic, I care not what they are, if the man means well and acts from honest intentions without eccentricity or affectation. All men have not the advantage of good society, as it is called, to school them in all its fantastic rules and ceremonies, and if there is any standard of manners it is founded in reason and good sense, and not upon those artificial regulations. Manners, like conversation, should be extemporaneous, and not studied. I always suspect a man who meets me with the same perpetual smile on his face, the same congeing of the body, and the same premeditated shake of the hand. Give me the hearty, it may be rough—grip of the hand, the careless recognition, and when occasion requires, the homely but welcome salutation, "How are you, my old friend?"—Selected.

SMALL COURTESIES.—I want to tell you a secret. The way to make yourself pleasant to others is to show them attention. The whole world is like the miller at Mansfield, who cared for nobody—no, not he, simply because nobody cared for him. And the whole world would serve you so if you gave them the same cause. Let every one, therefore, see that you do care for them, by showing them the small courtesies, in which there is no parade, whose voice is still to please, and which manifest themselves by tender and affectionate looks and little acts of attention, giving others the preference in every little enjoyment at the table, in the field, walking, sitting, or standing.—Ex.

PRAYER.—There never has been a time in the history of the church when more was to be obtained by prayer than at present. What power would the church have with God now, if every christian would awake and cry mightily to God for the overturning of Satan's kingdom, and the building up and enlarging of the kingdom of God's dear Son!

PLEDGE OF THE TRY COMPANY.

We, the Undersigned, hereby pledge ourselves to abstain from Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, and all Intoxicating Drinks as a Beverage.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS.

From C. H. Sweet.

Yes, Bro. Grant, we were pleased with Anna's letter. It was cheering to learn that one member, at least, of the "Try Company" had proved true to the PLEDGE. I trust there are many others who have. Let us hear from such. We want to know how many have been benefitted by becoming members of this Company. It will be encouraging to those who first proposed it for our good, cheering to each other, and may be the means of inducing some to join us who have not yet done so.

As for myself, I feel to thank God that I ever joined it. It has been a great benefit to me. I don't feel the least inclination to break the pledge; but I do feel just like adding another little item to that pledge, and that is, to devote the remainder of my existence to the service of God. How many members of the "Try Company" can sign this pledge? Let us hear from you.

Yours in the blessed hope, C. H. SWEET.

Natick, R. I.

From George.

Dear Mr. Grant:—I want to be a good boy, and serve the Lord, and be ready at his coming. I like the "Children's Corner" very well. I want my name on the pledge of the "Try Company" too. The Bible says, which is the best of all books, "Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right"; as you said in your Crisis in the "Children's Corner." I hereby pledge myself to abstain from tea, coffee, and all intoxicating drinks as a beverage.

GEORGE D. PAWLEY, son of A. F. Pawley.

THOSE LETTERS.

We are waiting for the little letters from the "Try Company." We have some excellent ones this week; one from C. H. Sweet. Do not fail to read it; and your editor wishes you would pay particular attention to what he says about "adding another little item to that pledge." That is the greatest "item" of all. Will not the reader do the same? Come, write and tell us if you are willing to be christians, and so be ready to meet Jesus when he comes. If you keep the pledge of the "Try Company," you will find it easier to live a christian life than you will if you break it. Don't break the pledge. Be firm as the great rock.

ANNA'S LETTER.

What did you think of that, Master and Miss "I CAN'T"? Follow Anna's example, and let your Editor hear from all of you. You can all write a letter if you try. But do you say, "We have tried, and could n't"? Then try again—once, twice, three times. Do you remember how the little ant tried to get a kernel of wheat into its nest? Sixty-nine times did that kernel roll back, but the seventieth time it succeeded. Now if that ant had belonged to the "I can't" family, it would have given up in despair. Remember the spider, which failed so many times, and yet overcame at last. So you see what perseverance can do. Then you have hands to write with, and will not have to "take your pen" in your toes, as did a poor Mr. Nellis, who was born without arms. Cultivate that gem of all worth—perseverance. You will grow stronger and stronger at every attempt.

"MOTHER'S GRAVE."

A stranger was wandering through a grave yard, engaged in deep revery over the many love tokens inscribed to the departed, when he was aroused from his musings by observing the delicate form of a child kneeling over a new-made grave. Approaching her, he inquired:

"My little girl, what are you doing here?"

She started up, surprised at his sudden appearance; and lifting her deep blue eyes to his face, filled with tears, she exclaimed:

"This is mother's grave! She died last week, and left me alone. I am not rich enough to buy a monument; but ma told me it would make no difference; the angels and I would know where her grave was."

Her clear, plaintive voice touched the stranger's heart with sympathy. He asked her if she would not go home with him, and be his little girl. For a moment she seemed puzzled; and then her face brightened up, and, with childish earnestness, she inquired:

"Did God send you to take care of me? Ma said he would take care of me. I knew he would. I knew ma wouldn't tell me anything that wasn't true." And she fairly danced with joy.

What sweet, childish faith this was! God did take care of her, as he will of every little boy or girl that will trust him as this little girl did.

A CHILD'S EVENING PRAYER.

Ere on the bed my limbs I lay,
God grant me grace my prayers to say:—
O God! preserve my mother dear
In health and strength for many a year;
And O! preserve my father too,
And may I pay him reverence due;
And may I my best thoughts employ
To be my parents' hope and joy;
O preserve my brothers and sisters both
From evil doings and from sloth;
And may we always love each other,
Our friends, our father and our mother;—
And still, O Lord, to me impart
An innocent and grateful heart,
That, after my last sleep, I may
Awake to an eternal day.

THE YOUNG EXILE.

Between four and five hundred years ago, in the city of Mayence on the Rhine, was born Hans, the hero of our sketch. Those were times of petty strife between the wealthy and the common people. Hans' father belonged to the nobility, and at a very early age he engaged very ardently in the contests of his father, and with such varied fortunes, that, at the age of nineteen, he was a second time an exile from his birthplace. After several years he was invited to return to his home title and estate, on the conditions that he would make large concessions to the plebeian magistrate. Plebeian means common people; the magistrate belonged to the lower class, and not to the nobility.

But Hans, during his exile at Strasburg, had not been idle. He was engaged in study, and that of the very best kind, even the study of the sacred Scriptures, and he was much esteemed and honored by the citizens of Strasburg. He therefore declined accepting the invitation, choosing to remain an exile. He learned to lightly esteem those empty titles and worldly honors, for which he had been contending. Alone, and on foot, with his books and wardrobe packed in a wallet upon his shoulder, he traversed the Rhenish provinces—Italy, Switzerland, Germany, and Holland. Religion was the one great idea of his thoughts, and his greatest desire was to multiply copies of the word of God, and scatter them among the masses of mankind.

When at Haarlem in Holland, he became acquainted with Lawrence Koster, the verger of the cathedral there. A verger is one who carries the mace, or ensign of authority, before the bishop, or dean; also one who takes charge of the sacred utensils and vestments. We should call him a sexton. Well, this sacristan had a Latin grammar, which was engraved on a wooden board, for the convenience of instructing the pupils. One day, while straying among the willows by the side of a stream, he amused himself by cutting off some small blocks from the boughs, and with his knife engraving on them the interlocked initials of his own and his wife's name, in imitation of the grammar board in the cathedral. After shaping them to his liking, he wrapped them in a bit of parchment. Afterwards, when opening the package, he found that the sap had moistened the letters, and their shape was impressed on the parchment. He applied ink to the surface, and to his joy found that he could produce as many similar prints as he wished. Had he followed out the discovery then made, the verger of Haarlem would have been immortalized as the inventor of printing. But this honor was in reserve for our exile Hans. No sooner had his eye lighted upon the carved grammar board, than he saw in prospective the fulfillment of his long-cherished vision—the accomplishment of his fondest hopes. For this very thing he had prayed, traveled, planned, dreamed and hoped, though without a knowledge of the manner by which it would be brought about.

He immediately left Haarlem, and returned to Strasburg, where he shut himself up to study, invent, and accomplish that great and important work, which was to result in spreading the Holy Scriptures abroad through the world. Here he toiled day after day, until at length, with a cry of joy, he sprang from his seat, ran to a chest, took out a cutting tool, and began to cut out a letter. When finished, he dipped the little block into a black liquid, placed it on parchment, then pressing heavily on it, he printed the letter he had carved out. Again a cry of joy burst from his lips. The problem was solved at last.

Afterward he had a dream which greatly troubled him. He heard two voices which spoke alternately to him. One bade him rejoice, for from henceforth, through his instrumentality, knowledge would be spread over the earth. Nations far distant, and strangers to the ideas of his country, would read and understand thoughts yet silent. The other voice bade him look upon his invention as an attractive but fatal dream, which, if realized, would be productive of great evil,—bring madness, misfortune, pollution and crime upon all men and all ages. "Believe me, John," said this voice, "live as though thy discovery had not been." Hans awoke in an agony of doubt; but the first voice prevailed. He knew that all of the precious gifts of God were susceptible of abuse, and might be employed for evil; yet in themselves they were pure, and designed for a blessing.

We have not room in this sketch to tell you how he carried his new discovery into effect. He encountered a great many obstacles—he was not received with that respect and honor which was his due; and at the age of forty-six, ruined, condemned, impoverished, Hans Gansfleisch Gutenburg von Sorgenboch retired to his native city, Mayence, to begin life anew. At the age of sixty-nine he was laid to rest by the side of his wife and children, leaving but this single legacy of worldly fortune behind him: "I bequeath to my sister all the books which I printed at the monastery of St. Arbogast." But he left to the world at large a noble, a great inheritance, an inexhaustible mine of wealth. "From the tottering little urchin hastening to his infant school, to the eyes that look dimly through the mists that surround the tomb, those mysterious signs of thought, given us by the immortal Gutenburg, are ever before us."

M. D. WELLCOME.

BOOKS OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The following if committed carefully to memory by the children, and repeated occasionally, will enable them during all their lives to keep in mind the order of the books of the Old Testament:

The great Jehovah spake to us
In Genesis and Exodus;
Leviticus and Numbers see,
Followed by Deuteronomy.
Joshua and Judges sway the land,
Ruth gleans a sheaf with trembling hand;
Samuel and numerous Kings appear,
Whose Chronicles we wondering hear;
Ezra and Nehemiah now
Esther the beauteous mourner show;
Job speaks in sighs, David in Psalms,
The Proverbs teach to scatter alms.
Ecclesiastes then comes on,
And the sweet Song of Solomon.
Isaiah and Jeremiah then
With Lamentations takes his pen.
Ezekiel, Daniel, Hosea's lyres
Swell Joel, Amos, Obadiah's.
Next Jonah, Micah, Nahum, come,
And lofty Habakkuk finds room.
While Zephaniah, Haggai calls,
Rapt Zechariah builds his walls;
And Malachi with garments rent,
Concludes the ancient Testament.

A TRUE STORY.

The following story will show the little boys and girls that the blessings of health and strength are far preferable to riches, and also learn them a lesson of contentment.

Little Martin was a poor boy, who gained his living by going on errands. One day, as he was returning home, he seated himself to rest by the wayside, when a carriage passed him, containing a gentleman and his son, followed by a servant on horseback. Little Martin fixed his eyes upon them with so much attention, that the gentleman guessed his thoughts, and said to his son, "Look how that little boy's eyes are fixed upon you. I imagine that he says within himself, 'I wish I was in that young gentleman's place.'"

"Well, said the youth," suppose we ask him if he would like to change places with me."

The indulgent father beckoned little Martin to the carriage, and said, "Seeing how attentively you look at this boy, it appears to me, my little friend, that you would like to be in his place. Will you change with him?"

"Ah! sir," replied Martin, "you must be jesting; but, if he is willing, it shall be done. Our neighbors will be surprised to see me riding home in a fine carriage."

The gentleman called his servant, and desired him to assist his son from the carriage. Alas! what a sight! the legs of the youth were completely crooked, and incapable of supporting him; he was obliged to be held by the servant till crutches were brought to him.

"Now," said the gentleman, "have you still an inclination to change places with him?"

"Oh! no, I have no such wish," said little Martin. "The health I enjoy, and the use of my limbs, are of more value than anything he can give me. I had rather eat my dry bread, and not want any one to help me to walk."

"You are right," said the gentleman. "If you could only give him your legs, he would cheerfully strip himself of all he possesses to give you in return."

LET ME GO.

AIR.—The Captive Indian.

Let me go to the land where the curse resteth not,
Sweet home of fruition, bright goal of my hope;
Where the conflict of ages no more shall be known,
And the great life-work 's ended,—oh! let me go home.

CHO.—For the exiled captives sigh for home,
There's a wail on every breeze;
Let the reapers come with a harvest song,
And bind up the golden sheaves.

Let me go, for the heart boweth down o'er the tomb,
I fain would escape from its portals of gloom;
And Lethe's cold wave murmurs darkly and lone,
I shrink from its slumbers,—O, let me go home.

Let me go, for I pine for the dear ones again,
That went down in the battle, and scorned to complain;
The bravest and truest the dark night bemoan,
And sigh for the morning,—oh! let me go home.

Let me go! in the dim misty future I see
Sweet islands, inlaid in a bright crystal sea,
Where the pure of all ages, with beauty and song,
Share in love's richest banquet,—O, let me go home.

Let me go, ere the hopes of the wicked shall fall,
Ere cheeks that have bloomed shall wax deathly and pale;
Yes, hide me, dear Savior, from earth's final groan,
Let me go with the dear ones—oh! let me go home.

STEPHEN'S PETITION.

"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."—Acts 7: 59.

In discussing the subject of the soul and spirit, our opponents frequently flee to the text we have quoted. This is one of their strong-holds. Drive them out of this by the "sword of the Spirit," which is the word of God and sound arguments; they are frequently willing to yield, or else say, "It don't make much difference either way," or, that "you are a 'no soulist,' consequently are not worth talking with."

1. The position generally assumed is, that the "spirit" spoken of in the text, is the immortal soul; which is the thinking, rational, and responsible part of man.

2. That it goes to heaven, or hell, immediately, at the death of the body, or exterior man.

Let us take our Bible, dear reader, and see whether it will bear out, or by any means favor, the above position. We know that every person that will take the Bible for his standard, will very soon see the folly of assuming such a position.

1. We inquire, Does the word "spirit" in the text mean the soul? We answer, No! because the word Psuchee, rendered soul, is not in the text. O! you are a "no soulist." Not so fast, friend; there is no subject in the Scriptures plainer than the soul. Soul is one idea, and immortal soul quite another. Soul occurs several hundred times in our English version; but immortal soul, or spirit, never occurs a single time. Psuchee occurs about one hundred and five times in the New Testament. Fifty-nine times it is translated soul; forty times life. We now direct the reader's attention to a few passages where Psuchai occurs, evidently meaning a living being or person. Acts 2: 41, . . . And the same day there were added unto the disciples about three thousand (Psuchai) souls, or persons.

Joseph called his father Jacob, and his kindred seventy-five (Psuchais) souls.—See Gen. 47: 26, 27; Deut. 10: 22; Acts 27: 27. We were all in the ship, two hundred and seventy-six (Psuchai) souls. Noah and his family, in all eight (Psuchai) souls, were saved by water. 1 Pet. 3: 20.

In the Revelation of Jesus Christ made known to the apostle, while a prisoner in Patmos, he says, "I saw the (Psuchas) souls under the altar, that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held."—Rev. 6: 9. Again in Rev. 20: 4, John says, "I saw the (Psuchas) souls of them that were beheaded."

A certain D. D., an expounder of Orthodoxy, once told his hearers "that the soul is immaterial, that it cannot be seen with the best telescope!!" Pray tell us, Doctor, how John could possibly have seen the souls that were BEHEADED, if they were immaterial? They must have had heads, otherwise they could not have been cut off by the cruel hand of the persecutor. What kind of a telescope must John have looked through to have seen immaterial souls? We think, Doctor, that your telescope looks altogether too high to see material souls "under the altar," not in heaven.

We have only just glanced at the proof that can be brought in favor of our position. We deem this sufficient for the present.

2. The Spirit. The word translated spirit in the text is not Psuchai, but Pneuma. It is never translated soul in the English Bibles. Hence Stephen could not have meant, Lord Jesus, receive my soul. Pneuma comes from Pneuo, to blow, breathe, of the wind and air. Pneuma, wind, air, the air we breathe, breath, the breath of life.—Liddell and Scott. The following passage will illustrate it: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath (air or wind, not soul) of life," and the consequence was, that this formation out of dust became a living soul, or person, capable of assuming its proper functions in life. Gen. 2: 7. Job evidently understood this subject when he said, "The spirit of God hath made me (out of dust), and the breath of the Almighty hath given me (Job) life."—Job 33: 4. But says one, "Solomon was a very wise man, and he says, 'The spirit returns to God, who gave it.'"—Eccl. 12: 7. Do you believe that he really meant what he said? Yes, certainly. Do you believe that Solomon contradicts himself in Ecclesiastes? No. Very well, you are bound to accept of what he says in his third and ninth chapters as well as the twelfth. For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all (both) one breath or spirit; so man has no pre-eminence in this one respect; all go unto one place,—the dust of the ground from whence he was taken. In other words, man was formed out of the dust of the ground; the breath of the Almighty caused him to live, to have dominion over the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and over every thing that creepeth upon the earth. The other fleshly formations were made out of the dust of the ground; God gave them the breath of life, as he did unto man. Gen. 7: 22. Before the breath was given to either, it was in his hand; after he gave it to them, it was still in his power, for Paul says, concerning the Deity, "In him we live, move, and have our being. He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things."—Acts 27: 25–28.

When he withdraws it from the sons of men, they become subjects of death, and the dead know not any thing; their love, hatred, and envy are now perished. Eccl. 7: 5, 6. This is the sense in which the breath or spirit returns to God, who gave it.

We are satisfied that the above is in harmony with Moses, Job, Solomon, and Paul. They nowhere teach that the soul, nor the spirit is the thinking I, nor the thinking It, neither a spark of Divinity within, like quicksilver in the glass ball of a thermometer.

3. We shall speak on the word "receive," in the text. If the reader will please turn to a Greek Testament, he will find that the word rendered receive, is Dexai. Its true meaning, according to Liddell and Scott, is the right hand, frequently, as a token of saluting, or addressing; also, as a sign of assurance, pledge, or treaty, to give one, and receive from him the pledge of the right hand.

Another writer says:—"Donnegan, in his definition of dexai, says it signifies the right hand, a promise, pact or covenant, assistance, aid, strength, courage, from dexios, and dexios from dechomai." The above definitions most clearly show that the word in question is frequently used in the sense of assistance, aid, and support, also a pledge, etc. Certainly, this gives us some light on this very (to many) perplexing subject. Stephen had been speaking the word of truth to the Jews; they were displeased with him, as many are now. Their indignation was raised against him. They cast him out of the city and stoned him. He being full of the Holy Spirit, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand (Dexniom) of God. Acts 7: 56. This doubtless was a vision. We cannot see how he could have seen the glory of God in any other way, only as the three apostles saw it on the Mount. Matt. 17: 1–9; 1 Pet. 1: 16–18. No one in that trying hour could have supported him like the Lord Jesus, the mediator between God and man (1 Tim. 2: 5); who manifested himself to Israel (Jno. 1: 31) as a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief (Isa. 53), whom the same nation had rejected and crucified.

4. "He (Stephen) fell asleep." This expression is familiar to every student of the Bible. As this may possibly fall into the hands of some good and honest mind, that may not have had opportunity of investigating this very interesting topic, we will briefly show in what sense it is used. As he was probably a Jew, (Acts 7: 2.) we must turn to the archives of that peculiar people, and see in what sense they understood it. Paul says, in Acts 19: 36, that "David fell on sleep." In 1 Kings 2: 19, it reads:—"So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David." Though David slept with his fathers, and it is an undisputed fact that he was buried, yet the apostle Peter, who spoke directly under the influence of the Holy Spirit, some ten hundred years after says, "David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 34. In verse 29 of the same chapter it reads: "David is both dead and buried." But says one, How does this apply to Stephen? Very well, indeed. Devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. Acts 8: 2. Thus they buried David, and they buried Stephen. It may be argued that it was the bodies of David and Stephen that were buried, but the spirit, which our opponents tell us is the thinking and responsible part, might have still lived on in a conscious state of existence! What saith the Scriptures? His (man's) breath (or spirit) goeth forth, in that very day (not another day) his thoughts perish.—Ps. 146: 4. Solomon says: the dead know not anything; also their love, hatred and envy are now perished. Eccl. 9: 5, 6. Hence no person can gain anything by asserting that it is the spirit that thinks, for in death it ceases to think.

Dear readers, we have very briefly presented to you a few thoughts on this subject. It is by no means exhausted. We are satisfied that it will harmonize with the teachings of God's word, which is able to make us wise unto salvation. May we all search as for hidden treasures, to see whether these things are so, and by so doing build our foundation upon the rock—not upon the sand, which the flood will easily wash away. God's word is not designed to make us skeptical, heretical, nor infidel; but to lead us to truth. May we be as earnest as Paul was, when he says, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Then we, if found worthy, shall "put on immortality." Before that event takes place, we are looking for "a time of trouble, such as never was." The seventh and last trumpet will ere long sound, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." And what follows? "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and they that fear thy name, both small and great, and shouldest destroy them that destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 15–18. Be it so, according to thy word.—Prophetic Watchman.

For the World's Crisis.

TIME.

Time reveals to us the verity of those prophecies relative to both the first and second advent of our Savior, although some of our modern teachers have made them mystical, while others have ignored and eschewed that which the apostle declares is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; yet it behooves those whose minds are so illuminated with the Holy Spirit of God as to readily discern the signs of the times, to cry, Behold the Bridegroom cometh! It is true scoffers abounding in these last days will sneer while we yearn for our Lord's return, and will say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" you have already brought yourselves and the doctrine which you advocate into disrepute, by the sad disappointments of past days. But, dear brethren, we can reason with these reflectors on this wise:

In all the transactions of life there is time. No person being engaged in a lucrative business and wishing to succeed will fail in coming up to time, by promptly adjusting all matters that pertain to his business. No public speaker will expect to stand up and address a large concourse of people, unless he first appoints a time and place for them to convene. But few of Adam's sons and daughters are conveyed in Nahum's chariots from place to place without first making themselves acquainted with the hour at which the train leaves, and they are quite sure to be at the station in time. No husbandman expects to reap a bountiful harvest unless he sows the seed in time. And so we might speak of men in all the departments of life, who never consider it dangerous to meddle with time in their business transactions, and whose minds are so engrossed with the things of earth that they never find time to investigate, or even look at the note of promise which God has given to those who are of faith.

Yet these men will brand God's little flock as infidels and heretics, because they are in secret places crying,

"Jesus, come, oh come to reign."

Now if these objectors could only spare the time, they might turn to Dan. 12: 10, and there see that a certain class were to understand the time, which is the subject upon which Daniel treats.

That God will help us all to be wise, and ready for the reception of our coming King, is the prayer of one expecting very soon to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

LIVING HOURS WITH THE PILGRIMS.—No. 1.

"His disciples came and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus."—MATT. 14: 12.

When the disciples discovered that Herod had beheaded John the Baptist, their hearts were filled with sorrow. They took up the body and buried it, and came and poured out their trouble into the ears of Jesus. They longed for the sympathizing heart of a friend to bear a portion of their sorrow. Jesus was their only true friend. His love for them knew no bounds. So they came to him, confident of comfort. What a blessed privilege Jesus has given us, that we may do the same. He will be to us all he was to them. He was their "wisdom, their "righteousness," and their redemption; he will be the same to us. He was their leader and guide; he will be ours. He was their hope, their shield, and their Comforter; he will be the same to us, —our "exceeding great reward," if we will go to him in confidence, as they did.

"Go tell Jesus when thy heart is full
Of keen and bitter agony and woe;
When the dear, precious form of one beloved
Is parted from thee—in the grave laid low;
Go and tell Jesus—he will soothe thy grief;
To thy poor suffering heart speak relief."

That is true. O, how cheering! Is your heart filled with the bitter pangs of agony? Perhaps you are mourning the loss of the departed, who are snatched as a flower in its early bloom. Then "go and tell Jesus." Go to his feet, and pour out your heart of affliction in his ears, and he will soothe and bind up your sad, broken heart, and weep with you as he did with Martha and Mary at the grave of Lazarus.

What a blessed privilege it is, to hold communion with Jesus, who loves us and pitieth as a father pitieth his child! When you are tempest-tost by the wild, surging waves of trouble, go tell Jesus; tell him all—pour out your heart as a child pours out his troubles to an earthly parent. He will command the billows, as he did the waves of Galilee, "Peace, be still," and there will be a great calm.

Does the Prince of this world, the power of darkness, linger around your pathway with manifold temptations? Does he cause clouds to overshadow your mind, and your path to look dark before thee? By cunningly devised fables does he attempt to lead you in the path of apostasy—of world-conforming christianity? Oh, flee to the arms of Jesus! "Cast all your care upon him, for he careth for you." Nail the serpent to the cross. He destroyed the happiness of Eden. Resolve that he shall not destroy the Eden happiness within your breast. Jesus extends his entreating arms to press you nearer his bosom, where the raging winds of temptation will never disturb your heart, welling up with everlasting bliss. Then you can sing;

"No condemnation now I dread,
Jesus, with all in him, is mine;
Alive in him, my living head,
And clothed in righteousness divine."

Perhaps, dear reader, I am addressing one who is without fullness of salvation. You are out of the ark of safety. Perhaps you desire to be a disciple of Christ; but you are weak. The Devil knows your weakness, and attacks you at that point. Then go tell Jesus; confess all. He stoops with listening ears to hear it. Oh, "look to Jesus," and he will give you strength; and will give you all you ask for.

Are you burdened with care, and do your sins rise up before you, like a mountain to overwhelm you? Go tell Jesus. Listen to his sweet, entreating voice:—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." Do this, and you will find sweet and perfect rest for your weary heart.

Who does not long for rest? Go to Jesus with your longing, and receive that perfect repose in God that will be undisturbed by the perils of these last days. In every want of your imperfect nature, may the Spirit lead you to "go and tell Jesus." WM. H. SPENCER.

ANGELS vs. SPIRITUALISM.

Having attended some lectures on "Spiritualism" recently, as a standard bearer for Jesus and his truth, I was compelled to take issue with the speaker on some points, one of which was, that their so-called spirits of the dead, were identical with the angels of scripture. Their great proof text on this point being Rev. 22: 9. And by the way, I always remark that spiritualists in the introduction of their peculiar views in a christian community, are as prompt in quoting Scripture, as the Devil was in the wilderness, though not always quite as correct.

Their tactics in this direction are evidently as follows: If we succeed in establishing this hypothesis in the minds of the christian community, we shall have an easy conquest, for the Bible teaches that angels communicated with mortals in old time, and if then, why not now? So if they can prove their premises correct, their conclusions would have some weight; but, unfortunately for them, although orthodox theology may in some measure sustain that view, Bible theology cannot be made to do so.

The passage quoted (Rev. 22: 8, 9) reads as follows: "And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things; then saith he unto me, See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Worship God."

They wanted to make the angel say that he was one of the prophets. But, on giving the text an analytical examination, it was shown conclusively that the angel neither meant or said, more or less, than that he was fellow-servant to John, fellow servant to his (John's) brethren the prophets, and fellow-servant to them which keep the sayings of the book.

Reference was also made by them to the case of Peter's deliverance from prison, his appearance at the door of Mary, where a prayer meeting was being held, the delight and astonishment of Rhoda, her report to the friends, their doubt of its being Peter, and their reply that it was his angel. Acts 12. But this also, if its proves anything, proves too much for their side.

In the first place, the disciples knew that Peter was imprisoned alive; they were praying for his deliverance. In the second place, it was only a supposition on their part.

Now, if they supposed that this angel was Peter's spirit, knowing that Peter was still in prison (for they did not believe that Peter was at the door), then it follows that when Peter died, his other spirit would turn into an angel; consequently Peter would have two spirits, or spirit angels. How absurd!

The fact is, they believed in guardian angels, as taught in both the Old and New Testaments; (Gen. 48: 16, Matt. 18: 10), and believed in by the saints of God in all ages.

Again, the angel that visited Abraham and Lot were claimed to be spirits of men, because they were called men, had the appearance of men, and partook of man's food; but what does the narrative prove? It proves, first, that angels are personal beings, having identity, tangibility, and reality; and furthermore, their personal appearance bears a close resemblance to that of man. Again it proves that they have organs of speech, and are able to communicate with man in an intelligent manner. Now, if modern spirits would manifest themselves as the angels did to Abraham, instead of rapping on, and tipping over tables, and communicate to us in audible tones of speech, instead of rapping out sentences by the A. B. C. process, intelligent men and women might give heed to their claims. Again, there is no evidence but that Abraham knew his visitors to be angels. It is possible that God had employed this means (his angels) to make known his purposes and promises to Abraham previous to this time.

The attempt, therefore, to prove from the Scriptures, that angels are the spirits of dead men, utterly fails. But, on the contrary, they prove very conclusively that the angels of God are a distinct order of creation. "What is man that thou art mindful of him? . . . For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels." Psa. 8: 4, 5. While this proves that angels are superior to man in intellect, it also proves that man was created subsequent to the angels. 2 Peter 2: 11, also corroborates this view. "Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might," etc. Greater than who? greater than man. Read the context. But Heb. 2: 16, is conclusive on this point. "For verily he (Christ) took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." "But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand? . . . are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. 1: 13, 14.

WHY THE WICKED DEAD ARE RAISED.

It is often asked, in reply to the Scripture testimony that there is to be a second death, "What is the use of raising them up to kill them again?" In reply to this we may say that an unconditional resurrection was foreordained from the foundation of the world, in order to secure the resurrection of those who would be incapable of complying with a conditional resurrection; and as an unconditional resurrection secures the resurrection of all men, the wicked are raised in pursuance of this foreordained decree, while the infliction of the second death is the result of individual sin alone.

It is written, "Known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world"; hence He must have known and foreordained the resurrection of all men, as contingent on their coming under the dominion of death through Adam's transgression. Were this otherwise, multitudes would fail of the future life from sheer inability to comply with a conditional resurrection. Indeed, had it been decreed on condition, the Deity, being holy, could not have allowed sin in the conditions, and so none could have been raised; for we read, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."

So in order that any might attain unto "the resurrection from the dead," it was necessary that the resurrection of all men should have been foreordained independent of conditions. And having been so foreordained, there must be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust; and so on this our hope of a future life depends. And this classification in the resurrection is the result of individual character. And since we cannot fail of a resurrection, that being fixed by an unalterable fiat of Jehovah, let us strive to attain unto that special resurrection,—"the resurrection from the dead"; for on such the second death will have no power. And since God in his goodness and mercy has made the resurrection of all men a sure thing, failure to attain eternal life will be the sole result of man's free will in rejecting that future life, which begins by and with the resurrection.

Let us, then, seek to overcome sin, and to attain life by repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. For we read, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 7, 8. And the certainty of this future punishment is presented as an inducement for such characters to break off their sins by righteousness, and their iniquities by turning unto the Lord.

Be not deceived with the idea that the threatened punishment is a play upon words, for God is not unrighteous, to practice deceit. The second death cannot be a lake of fire, but the part which all liars are to have therein, which is to die thereby. To escape this, we must overcome sin by faith in Christ; for "he that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death," as Christ himself testifies.

TRUTH vs. ERROR.

We witnessed some months since a combat between truth and error. The combatants strongly reminded us of David and Goliath. The one we named in our mind Goliath had armed himself with an old spear, made by Pagans away back in a time of heathenish darkness and ignorance. It was as unfit for the time in which we live, and as unsuitable to protect us from the dangers by which we are surrounded, as the ploughs and other implements of husbandry in use then, would be for our rocky side hill farms. And it is as foolish to trust in it, now that the gospel has revealed a plainer and more excellent way, as it would be for our farmers to reject the modern ploughs, for those in use in Asia thousands of years ago.

The spear was like a weaver's beam, heavy and cumbersome, but without point. His sword had upon its blade, written in large Roman capitals, Philosophy and Reason. It was quite as ancient as the spear, and as wholly unsuitable for warfare. It was without edge, and composed of metal soft and spurious.

Armed with these weapons and trusting in them, Goliath challenged one from an army, (considered by many a band of dwarfs and pigmies,) to meet him. David accepted the challenge in the name of Israel's God, and with smooth stones from the clear brook—bright jewels from the mine—truths from the word of God—with the sling of Faith, he advanced to meet him. Ah! little did Goliath and his brethren think that the humble shepherd, small in stature, was one of the King's Invincibles. How the giant toiled and sweat trying to wield that heavy, uncouth spear. While little David, armed with nothing but Bible truth, which God never intended should be heavy and burdensome, went round and round him, firing his smooth stones, and hitting every time. Spectators were compelled to acknowledge the superiority of the weapons used by the champion of Truth. Goliath was fully capable of winning a victory with the right armor, but his strength was lost in trying to use weapons that were worthless.

We have often been amused while thinking of that encounter, but we have rejoiced continually that by it the truth was made the "brighter, to shine." We love the truth of the Bible; the faith once delivered to the saints. It will stand all tests. Fire will only make it like gold well refined. Floods will only purify it. Storms of persecution will only make [illegible] clearer. We love it; we rejoice in it, we [illegible] by it to be made free; and if the truth make us free, we shall be free indeed. We cling to it, for all else is soon to be shaken, and all the refuges of lies swept away. We thank God for the light of his word, and that immortality is brought to light through the gospel.

We love the name of Jesus because he hath conquered death, and obtained the keys of the grave, and given us a chance to obtain eternal life. God bless the little warrior—his champion for the truth. May his shadow never be less, nor his strength diminish. May Israel's God still go with him, and give him victory over error and tradition, whenever and wherever he may meet it. From one who was there.

"CRY ALOUD!"

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet."—Rev. 58: 1.

Never has there been a time when the church of Christ needed more of the power and love of God than now, in these last days. Many are departing from the faith, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" These difficulties we must meet, and may God help us to endure unto the end, that we may be saved with that little number who shall come up through great tribulation, having washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

I fear we do not heed the above scripture as we should. Many, instead of crying aloud, keep still. "It will not do to say anything; we have no talent; we cannot speak the word well." Such will not do much in the vineyard of the Lord. We cannot find that Jesus when on earth chose the rich and the learned, but went to the poor fishermen, and told them to follow him, and he would make them fishers of men. He taught them to ask of God for what they lacked, who gives to all liberally. Do we heed his word, or shall we keep on grumbling because we have no talent?

Dear Brn., pray for him who pens these lines, that while he is searching the word he may have wisdom, not of men but from God, that he may speak the word when called as one who must in that great day so near give an account of every idle word that is uttered.

"A few more struggles here,
A few more partings sore,
A few more toils, a few more tears,
And we shall weep no more."

THIS GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

I propose to notice what seem to be one or two serious objections to the view generally held by Adventists concerning the gospel of the kingdom, as recorded in Matt. 24: 14. Notwithstanding I am a firm believer in the near advent of our Lord, and delight to dwell and feast upon those Scriptures that teach unmistakably that the Savior is at the door; yet I have a great aversion to wresting or misapplying the word of the Lord, even should such a misapplication seem to confirm other views which we may hold. Adventists nearly all claim that the gospel of the kingdom is not the gospel in the general acceptation of the term; but a particular message in the gospel to be given at a particular time. And as that particular time has come, the gospel of the kingdom is now being preached. To this view we object, and shall endeavor to show from the word of the Lord,

1st, that the gospel of the kingdom was preached over eighteen hundred years since. And 2ndly, that the gospel of the kingdom is not a particular message in the gospel, but the gospel in the general acceptation of the term; the same gospel that has been preached during the whole gospel dispensation.

That the gospel of the kingdom was preached more than eighteen hundred years since, will appear from the following scriptures: "And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness, and every disease among the people." Matt. 9: 35. See also Matt. 4: 23. Mark's testimony is also to the point, as recorded in chapter 1, verses 14, 15,—"Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." Believe what gospel? Why, the gospel that Jesus was preaching to them, the gospel of the kingdom, of course.

From the above testimony we learn that Jesus went about all the cities and villages teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Not only so, but he admonishes his hearers to repent and believe "the gospel," showing conclusively that "the gospel" and "the gospel of the kingdom" are synonymous, one and the same thing.

That the gospel of the kingdom is nothing more nor less than the gospel in the general acceptation of the term, is most positively proved from Mark 13: 10, which reads as follows: "And the gospel must first be published among all nations." Here it will be seen that what Matthew denominates the gospel of the kingdom, Mark calls "the gospel," [illegible] the whole gospel dispensation. B. D. Adventists claim that the everlasting gospel of Rev. 14: 6 (the first angel's message) synchronizes with the gospel of the kingdom, Matt. 24: 14. If this be true, then it follows that the first angel's message dates back more than eighteen hundred years; consequently the three messages must cover the whole gospel dispensation. The writer is alone responsible for the views herein set forth. If any one has any better light, we shall be thankful to receive it.

THE FIRE SPREADING.

Through the kindness of a friend to whom it was written, we are permitted to lay before our readers the following account of the way in which a minister of the Baptist denomination received the blessing of entire sanctification. May all the ministers of Jesus Christ seek and obtain this baptism of holy fire:

In the early part of last December, the Holy Spirit began to work upon my heart convincing me that I was not living as I ought to; at the same time making use of the expressions of a Methodist minister at our union prayer meetings, to show me that there was a higher christian life to which he had attained. At last both the Presbyterian minister and myself were deeply impressed with the conviction that it was our duty, as well as privilege, to go forward and seek a full salvation; the idea of duty being the most prominent. Our experiences from the first were almost identical. We were intimate—had often talked over the matter of our spiritual poverty, and that of all our churches; and when the Methodist minister, just sent to our place, spoke of a higher spiritual life, we were both prepared to take hold of it. All prejudice against the "Methodist doctrine" was removed at the start—for I always had more or less prejudice against that church, and most of its doctrines. But God made me willing to be blessed by any one.

First of all, I consecrated my all to the Lord. This was no small thing. I found that the more I laid down, the more I saw to give up. I drew a form of covenant, or dedication, consisting of fifteen articles, and after a very long struggle, with prayer and fastings, was enabled to say that I was not my own, that all I had, or was, belonged to the Lord; that my will was conformed to his [illegible]. I had no will of my own. [illegible] this time he blessed me with an unusual [illegible] of peace and joy, together with great freedom and boldness in preaching. My knowledge of the Scriptures grew amazingly. It seemed to me that all my previous knowledge of the Bible was only theoretical. Now the word was the bread of life. Prayer, also, seemed to be something wholly different, fresh, and full of power, so that I could spend hours a day communing with my God. It continued so for two weeks, when, in answer to prayer for a fuller measure of the divine presence, the Holy Ghost came upon me in mighty power, and continued with me about an hour and a half, as they told me, (the family of the Presbyterian minister, at whose house I was at the time,) although it did not seem to me one-half as long. During this visitation, I was not unconscious, though nearly speechless, overpowered with a sense of the presence of the Holy Ghost. It was awfully solemn, though I was not frightened, nor did I shrink back in the least. During this they took me up from the floor on which I had sunk, and laid me on a bed. Then came Jesus, and filled me till I wept aloud with a view of his wonderful love for me. This vision (I can hardly call it anything else) lasted some twenty minutes or so. Then, at the same time I arose and began praying, by thanking the Holy Spirit and Christ for their manifestations to me; and while I was engaged in prayer, the love of the Father in giving his Son to die for the world, impressed me so that I lost sight of everything else. Thus it was; first, the Holy Ghost, then the Savior, and lastly, the Father. I shall never forget that day to my dying hour. From that time to this I have been absorbed in the Divine will. I have begun a new life. Everything is new. The work of the ministry is one of the most solemn realities this side of eternity, and at the same time one of the most delightful employments I can conceive of. All my ungodly ambition gone, all selfishness burned up, I seem to stand alone with Jesus, and take supreme delight in his words. To do his will is my meat and my drink. I do love him supremely.—Earnest Christian.

LOOK TO JESUS.

Look to Jesus to be made like him. He is the model of a christian. "His nature and his name is love." He is meek, loving, pure and good. It is not the will of God that you be like some one else, but it is his will that you be like Jesus. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." It is not essential either to your salvation or usefulness that the capacity and gifts of another be yours, but that you have the mind of Christ. When you sit for a likeness, you sit not for some one's else, but for your own.

Look to Jesus in the day of temptation and trial. You have left the service of Satan. He hates you for it. He will do all he can to overthrow you. His stratagems are cunningly devised. He is the "accuser of the brethren." When the waves of discouragement roll around you, he will say, "Where now is your God?" But look to Jesus. He has overcome the devil. He will give you power over him. Is the day of trial upon you? Do cares like a wild deluge come? Do storms of sorrow fall? Look to Jesus. "He is the fullness of the Godhead bodily." "He is mighty to save." [illegible]

LET ME GO

AIR.—The Captive Indian

Let me go to the land where the curse resteth not,
Sweet home of fruition, bright goal of my hope,
Where the conflict of ages no more shall be known,
And the great life-work 's ended,—oh! let me go home

CHO.—For the exiled captives sigh for home,
There's a wail on every breeze;
Let the reapers come with a harvest song,
And bind up the golden sheaves.

Let me go, for the heart boweth down o'er the tomb,
I fain would escape from its portals of gloom,
And Lethe's cold wave murmurs darkly and lone
I shrink from its slumbers,—O, let me go home

Let me go, for I pine for the dear ones again,
That went down in the battle, and scorned to complain,
The bravest and truest the dark night bemoan,
And sigh for the morning —oh! let me go home

Let me go, in the dim misty future I see
Sweet islands, inlaid in a bright crystal sea,
Where the pure of all ages, with beauty and song,
Share in love's richest banquet,—O, let me go home

Let me go, for the hopes of the wicked shall fail,
Ere cheeks that have bloomed shall wax deathly and pale
Yet hide me, dear Savior, from earth's hoarse groan,
Let me go with the dear ones—oh! let me go home.

STEPHEN'S PETITION

"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."—Acts 7: 59

In discussing the subject of the soul and spirit, our opponents frequently flee to the text we have quoted. This is one of their strong-holds. Drive them out of this by the "sword of the Spirit," which is the word of God and sound arguments, they are frequently willing to yield, or else say, "It don't make much difference either way," or, that "you are a 'no soulist,' consequently are not worth talking with."

1. The position generally assumed is, that the "spirit" spoken of in the text, is the immortal soul; which is the thinking, rational, and responsible part of man

2. That it goes to heaven, or hell, immediately, at the death of the body, or exterior man

Let us take our Bible, dear reader, and see whether it will bear out, or by any means favor, the above position. We know that every person that will take the Bible for his standard, will very soon see the folly of assuming such a position.

1. We inquire, Does the word "spirit" in the text mean the soul? We answer, No! because the word Psuchee, rendered soul, is not in the text. O! you are a "no soulist." Not so fast, friend; there is no subject in the Scriptures plainer than the soul. Soul is one idea, and immortal soul quite another. Soul occurs several hundred times in our English version; but immortal soul, or spirit, never occurs a single time. Psuchee occurs about one hundred and five times in the New Testament. Fifty-nine times it is translated soul, forty times life. We now direct the reader's attention to a few passages where Psuchai occurs, evidently meaning a living being or person. Acts 2: 41, . . . And the same day there were added unto the disciples about three thousand (Psuchai) souls, or persons.

Joseph called his father Jacob, and his kindred seventy-five (Psuchais) souls.—See Gen 47: 26, 27; Deut. 10: 22, Acts 27: 27. We were all in the ship, two hundred and seventy-six (Psuchai) souls. Noah and his family, in all eight (Psuchai) souls, were saved by water. 1 Pet. 3: 20

In the Revelation of Jesus Christ made known to the apostle, while a prisoner in Patmos, he says, "I saw the (Psuchas) souls under the altar, that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held."—Rev 6: 9. Again in Rev 20: 4, John says, "I saw the (Psuchas) souls of them that were beheaded."

A certain D. D., an expounder of Orthodoxy, once told his hearers "that the soul is immaterial, that it cannot be seen with the best telescope!!" Pray tell us, Doctor, how John could possibly have seen the souls that were BEHEADED, if they were immaterial? They must have had heads, otherwise they could not have been cut off by the cruel hand of the persecutor. What kind of a telescope must John have looked through to have seen immaterial souls? We think, Doctor, that your telescope looks altogether too high to see material souls "under the altar," not in heaven.

We have only just glanced at the proof that can be brought in favor of our position. We deem this sufficient for the present.

2. The Spirit. The word translated spirit in the text is not Psuchas, but Pneuma. It is never translated soul in the English Bibles. Hence Stephen could not have meant, Lord Jesus, receive my soul. Pneuma comes from Pneuo, to blow, breathe, of the wind and air. Pneuma, wind, air, the air we breathe, breath, the breath of life.—Liddell and Scott. The following passage will illustrate it: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath (air or wind, not soul) of life," and the consequence was, that this formation out of dust became a living soul, or person, capable of exercising its proper functions in life. Gen. 2: 7. Job evidently understood this subject when he said, "The spirit of God hath made me (out of dust), and the breath of the Almighty hath given me (Job) life."—Job 33: 4. But says one, "Solomon was a very wise man, and he says, 'The spirit returns to God, who gave it.'"—Eccl. 12: 7. Do you believe that he really meant what he said? Yes, certainly. Do you believe that Solomon contradicts himself in Ecclesiastes? No. Very well, you are bound to accept of what he says in his third and ninth chapters as well as the twelfth. For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all (both) one breath or spirit; so man has no pre-eminence in this one respect, all go unto one place,—the dust of the ground from whence he was taken. In other words, man was formed out of the dust of the ground; the breath of the Almighty caused him to live, to have dominion over the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and over every thing that creepeth upon the earth. The other fleshly formations were made out of the dust of the ground, God gave them the breath of life, as he did unto man. Gen. 7: 22. Before the breath was given to either, it was in his hand, after he gave it to them, it was still in his power, for Paul says, concerning the Deity, "In him we live, move, and have our being. He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things."—Acts 17: 25-28.

When he withdraws it from the sons of men, they become subjects of death, and the dead know not any thing, their love, hatred, and envy are now perished. Eccl 9: 5, 6. This is the sense in which the breath or spirit returns to God, who gave it.

We are satisfied that the above is in harmony with Moses, Job, Solomon, and Paul. They nowhere teach that the soul, nor the spirit is the thinking I, nor the thinking It, neither a spark of Divinity within, like quicksilver in the glass ball of a thermometer.

3. We shall speak on the word "receive," in the text. If the reader will please turn to a Greek Testament, he will find that the word rendered receive, is Dexai. Its true meaning, according to Liddell and Scott, is the right hand, frequently, as a token of saluting, or addressing, also, as a sign of assurance, pledge, or treaty, to give one, and receive from him the pledge of the right hand.

Another writer says:—"Donnegan, in his definition of dexai, says it signifies the right hand, a promise, pact or covenant, assistance, aid, strength, courage, from dexios, and dexios from dechomai." The above definitions most clearly show that the word in question is frequently used in the sense of assistance, aid, and support, also a pledge, etc. Certainly, this gives us some light on this very (to many) perplexing subject. Stephen had been speaking the word of truth to the Jews; they were displeased with him, as many are now. Their indignation was raised against him. They cast him out of the city and stoned him. He being full of the Holy Spirit, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand (Dexiown) of God. Acts 7: 56. This doubtless was a vision. We cannot see how he could have seen the glory of God in any other way, only as the three apostles saw it on the Mount. Matt 17: 1-9; 1 Pet 1: 16-18. No one in that trying hour could have supported him like the Lord Jesus, the mediator between God and man (1 Tim. 2: 5); who manifested himself to Israel (Jno. 1: 31) as a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief (Isa. 53), whom the same nation had rejected and crucified.

4. "He (Stephen) fell asleep." This expression is familiar to every student of the Bible. As this may possibly fall into the hands of some good and honest mind, that may not have had opportunity of investigating this very interesting topic, we will briefly show in what sense it is used. As he was probably a Jew, (Acts 7: 2.) we must turn to the archives of that peculiar people, and see in what sense they understood it. Paul says, in Acts 13: 36, that "David fell on sleep." In 1 Kings 2: 10, it reads:—"So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David." Though David slept with his fathers, and it is an undisputed fact that he was buried, yet the apostle Peter, who spoke directly under the influence of the Holy Spirit, some ten hundred years after says, "David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 34. In verse 29 of the same chapter it reads: "David is both dead and buried." But says one, How does this apply to Stephen? Very well, indeed. Devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. Acts 8: 2. Thus they buried David, and they buried Stephen. It may be argued that it was the bodies of David and Stephen that were buried, but the spirit, which our opponents tell us is the thinking and responsible part, might have still lived on in a conscious state of existence! What saith the Scriptures? His (man's) breath (or spirit) goeth forth, in that very day (not another day) his thoughts perish.—Ps. 146: 4. Solomon says: the dead know not anything; also their love, hatred and envy are now perished. Eccl. 9: 5, 6. Hence no person can gain anything by asserting that it is the spirit that thinks, for in death it ceases to think.

Dear readers, we have very briefly presented to you a few thoughts on this subject. It is by no means exhausted. We are satisfied that it will harmonize with the teachings of God's word, which is able to make us wise unto salvation. May we all search as for hidden treasures, to see whether these things are so, and by so doing build our foundation upon the rock—not upon the sand, which the flood will easily wash away. God's word is not designed to make us skeptical, heretical, nor infidel, but to lead us to truth. May we be as earnest as Paul was, when he says, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Then we, if found worthy, shall "put on immortality." Before that event takes place, we are looking for "a time of trouble, such as never was." The seventh and last trumpet will ere long sound, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." And what follows? "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and they that fear thy name, both small and great, and shouldest destroy them that destroy the earth." Rev 11: 15-18. Be it so, according to thy word.—Prophetic Watchman.

TIME.

Time reveals to us the verity of those prophecies relative to both the first and second advent of our Savior, although some of our modern teachers have made them mystical, while others have ignored and eschewed that which the apostle declares is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, yet it behooves those whose minds are so illuminated with the Holy Spirit of God as to readily discern the signs of the times, to cry, Behold the Bridegroom cometh! It is true scoffers abounding in these last days will sneer while we yearn for our Lord's return, and will say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" you have already brought yourselves and the doctrine which you advocate into disrepute, by the sad disappointments of past days. But, dear brethren, we can reason with these reflectors on this wise.

In all the transactions of life there is time. No person being engaged in a lucrative business and wishing to succeed will fail in coming up to time, by promptly adjusting all matters that pertain to his business. No public speaker will expect to stand up and address a large concourse of people, unless he first appoints a time and place for them to convene. But few of Adam's sons and daughters are conveyed in Nahum's chariots from place to place without first making themselves acquainted with the hour at which the train leaves, and they are quite sure to be at the station in time. No husbandman expects to reap a bountiful harvest unless he sows the seed in time. And so we might speak of men in all the departments of life, who never consider it dangerous to meddle with time in their business transactions, and whose minds are so engrossed with the things of earth that they never find time to investigate, or even look at the note of promise which God has given to those who are of faith.

Yet these men will brand God's little flock as infidels and heretics, because they are in secret places crying,

"Jesus, come, oh come to reign."

Now if these objectors could only spare the time, they might turn to Dan 12: 10, and there see that a certain class were to understand the time, which is the subject upon which Daniel treats.

That God will help us all to be wise, and ready for the reception of our coming King, is the prayer of one expecting very soon to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

LIVING HOURS WITH THE PILGRIMS.—No. 1.

"His disciples came and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus."—MATT 14: 12

When the disciples discovered that Herod had beheaded John the Baptist, their hearts were filled with sorrow. They took up the body and buried it, and came and poured out their trouble into the ears of Jesus. They longed for the sympathizing heart of a friend to bear a portion of their sorrow. Jesus was their only true friend. His love for them knew no bounds. So they came to him, confident of comfort. What a blessed privilege Jesus has given us, that we may do the same. He will be to us all he was to them. He was their "wisdom, their "righteousness," and their redemption; he will be the same to us. He was their leader and guide, he will be ours. He was their hope, their shield, and their Comforter; he will be the same to us,—our "exceeding great reward," if we will go to him in confidence, as they did.

"Go tell Jesus when thy heart is full
Of keen and bitter agony and woe,
When the dear, precious form of one beloved
Is parted from thee—in the grave laid low,
Go and tell Jesus—he will soothe thy grief,
To thy poor suffering heart speak relief."

That is true. O, how cheering! Is your heart filled with the bitter pangs of agony? Perhaps you are mourning the loss of the departed, who are snatched as a flower in its early bloom. Then "go and tell Jesus." Go to his feet, and pour out your heart of affliction in his ears, and he will soothe and bind up your sad, broken heart, and weep with you as he did with Martha and Mary at the grave of Lazarus.

What a blessed privilege it is, to hold communion with Jesus, who loves us and pitieth as a father pitieth his child! When you are tempest-tost by the wild, surging waves of trouble, go tell Jesus; tell him all—pour out your heart as a child pours out his troubles to an earthly parent. He will command the billows, as he did the waves of Galilee, "Peace, be still," and there will be a great calm.

Does the Prince of this world, the power of darkness, linger around your pathway with manifold temptations? Does he cause clouds to overshadow your mind, and your path to look dark before thee? By cunningly devised fables does he attempt to lead you in the path of apostasy—of world-conforming christianity? Oh, flee to the arms of Jesus! "Cast all your care upon him, for he careth for you." Nail the serpent to the cross. He destroyed the happiness of Eden. Resolve that he shall not destroy the Eden happiness within your breast. Jesus extends his entreating arms to press you nearer his bosom, where the raging winds of temptation will never disturb your heart, welling up with everlasting bliss. Then you can sing;

"No condemnation now I dread,
Jesus, with all in him, is mine;
Alive in him, my living head,
And clothed in righteousness divine."

Perhaps, dear reader, I am addressing one who is without fullness of salvation. You are out of the ark of safety. Perhaps you desire to be a disciple of Christ; but you are weak. The Devil knows your weakness, and attacks you at that point. Then go tell Jesus; confess all. He stoops with listening ears to hear it. Oh, "look to Jesus," and he will give you strength; and will give you all you ask for.

Are you burdened with care, and do your sins rise up before you, like a mountain to overwhelm you? Go tell Jesus. Listen to his sweet, entreating voice:—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." Do this, and you will find sweet and perfect rest for your weary heart.

Who does not long for rest? Go to Jesus with your longing, and receive that perfect repose in God that will be undisturbed by the perils of these last days. In every want of your imperfect nature, may the Spirit lead you to "go and tell Jesus." WM. H. SPENCER.

ANGELS vs. SPIRITUALISM.

Having attended some lectures on "Spiritualism" recently, as a standard bearer for Jesus and his truth, I was compelled to take issue with the speaker on some points, one of which was, that their so-called spirits of the dead, were identical with the angels of scripture. Their great proof text on this point being Rev. 22: 9. And by the way, I always remark that spiritualists in the introduction of their peculiar views in a christian community, are as prompt in quoting Scripture, as the Devil was in the wilderness, though not always quite as correct.

Their tactics in this direction are evidently as follows. If we succeed in establishing this hypothesis in the minds of the christian community, we shall have an easy conquest, for the Bible teaches that angels communicated with mortals in old time, and if then, why not now? So if they can prove their premises correct, their conclusions would have some weight; but, unfortunately for them, although orthodox theology may in some measure sustain that view, Bible theology cannot be made to do so.

The passage quoted (Rev. 22: 8, 9,) reads as follows: "And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things; then saith he unto me, See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Worship God."

They wanted to make the angel say that he was one of the prophets. But, on giving the text an analytical examination, it was shown conclusively that the angel neither meant or said, more or less, than that he was fellow-servant to John, fellow servant to his (John's) brethren the prophets, and fellow-servant to them which keep the sayings of the book.

Reference was also made by them to the case of Peter's deliverance from prison, his appearance at the door of Mary, where a prayer meeting was being held, the delight and astonishment of Rhoda, her report to the friends, their doubt of its being Peter, and their reply that it was his angel. Acts 12. But this also, if its proves anything, proves too much for their side.

In the first place, the disciples knew that Peter was imprisoned alive; they were praying for his deliverance. In the second place, it was only a supposition on their part.

Now, if they supposed that this angel was Peter's spirit, knowing that Peter was still in prison (for they did not believe that Peter was at the door), then it follows that when Peter died, his other spirit would turn into an angel; consequently Peter would have two spirits, or spirit angels. How absurd!

The fact is, they believed in guardian angels, as taught in both the Old and New Testaments; (Gen. 48: 16, Matt. 18: 10), and believed in by the saints of God in all ages.

Again, the angel that visited Abraham and Lot were claimed to be spirits of men, because they were called men, had the appearance of men, and partook of man's food; but what does the narrative prove? It proves, first, that angels are personal beings, having identity, tangibility, and reality; and furthermore, their personal appearance bears a close resemblance to that of man. Again it proves that they have organs of speech, and are able to communicate with man in an intelligent manner. Now, if modern spirits would manifest themselves as the angels did to Abraham, instead of rapping on, and tipping over tables, and communicate to us in audible tones of speech, instead of rapping out sentences by the A. B. C. process, intelligent men and women might give heed to their claims. Again, there is no evidence but that Abraham knew his visitors to be angels. It is possible that God had employed this means (his angels) to make known his purposes and promises to Abraham previous to this time.

The attempt, therefore, to prove from the Scriptures, that angels are the spirits of dead men, utterly fails. But, on the contrary, they prove very conclusively that the angels of God are a distinct order of creation. "What is man that thou art mindful of him. . . For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels." Psa. 8: 4, 5. While this proves that angels are superior to man in intellect, it also proves that man was created subsequent to the angels. 2 Peter 2: 11, also corroborates this view. "Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might," etc. Greater than who? greater than man. Read the context. But Heb. 2: 16, is conclusive on this point. "For verily he (Christ) took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." "But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand? . . . are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. 1: 13, 14.

For the World's Crisis.

WHY THE WICKED DEAD ARE RAISED.

It is often asked, in reply to the Scripture testimony that there is to be a second death, "What is the use of raising them up to kill them again?" In reply to this we may say that an unconditional resurrection was foreordained from the foundation of the world, in order to secure the resurrection of those who would be incapable of complying with a conditional resurrection, and as an unconditional resurrection secures the resurrection of all men, the wicked are raised in pursuance of this foreordained decree, while the infliction of the second death is the result of individual sin alone.

It is written, "Known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world", hence He must have known and foreordained the resurrection of all men, as contingent on their coming under the dominion of death through Adam's transgression. Were this otherwise, multitudes would fail of the future life from sheer inability to comply with a conditional resurrection. Indeed, had it been decreed on condition, the Deity, being holy, could not have allowed sin in the conditions, and so none could have been raised, for we read, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."

So in order that any might attain unto "the resurrection from the dead," it was necessary that the resurrection of all men should have been foreordained independent of conditions. And having been so foreordained, there must be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust, and so on this our hope of a future life depends. And this classification in the resurrection is the result of individual character. And since we cannot fail of a resurrection, that being fixed by an unalterable fiat of Jehovah, let us strive to attain unto that special resurrection.—"the resurrection from the dead", for on such the second death will have no power. And since God in his goodness and mercy has made the resurrection of all men a sure thing, failure to attain eternal life will be the sole result of man's free will in rejecting that future life, which begins by and with the resurrection.

Let us, then, seek to overcome sin, and to attain life by repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. For we read, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 7, 8. And the certainty of this future punishment is presented as an inducement for such characters to break off their sins by righteousness, and their iniquities by turning unto the Lord.

Be not deceived with the idea that the threatened punishment is a play upon words, for God is not unrighteous, to practice deceit. The second death cannot be a lake of fire, but the part which all liars are to have therein, which is to die thereby. To escape this, we must overcome sin by faith in Christ, for "he that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death," as Christ himself testifies.

TRUTH vs. ERROR.

We witnessed some months since a combat between truth and error. The combatants strongly reminded us of David and Goliath. The one we named in our mind Goliath had armed himself with an old spear, made by Pagans away back in a time of heathenish darkness and ignorance. It was as unfit for the time in which we live, and as unsuitable to protect us from the dangers by which we are surrounded, as the ploughs and other implements of husbandry in use then, would be for our rocky side hill farms. And it is as foolish to trust in it, now that the gospel has revealed a plainer and more excellent way, as it would be for our farmers to reject the modern ploughs, for those in use in Asia thousands of years ago.

The spear was like a weaver's beam, heavy and cumbersome, but without point. His sword had upon its blade, written in large Roman capitals, Philosophy and Reason. It was quite as ancient as the spear, and as wholly unsuitable for warfare. It was without edge, and composed of metal soft and spurious.

Armed with these weapons and trusting in them, Goliath challenged one from an army, (considered by many a band of dwarfs and pigmies,) to meet him. David accepted the challenge in the name of Israel's God, and with smooth stones from the clear brook—bright jewels from the mine—truths from the word of God—with the sling of Faith, he advanced to meet him. Ah! little did Goliath and his brethren think that the humble shepherd, small in stature, was one of the King's Invincibles. How the giant toiled and sweat trying to wield that heavy, uncouth spear. While little David, armed with nothing but Bible truth, which God never intended should be heavy and burdensome, went round and round him, firing his smooth stones, and hitting every time. Spectators were compelled to acknowledge the superiority of the weapons used by the champion of Truth. Goliath was fully capable of winning a victory with the right armor, but his strength was lost in trying to use weapons that were worthless.

We have often been amused while thinking of that encounter, but we have rejoiced continually that by it the truth was made the "brighter to shine." We love the truth of the Bible, the faith once delivered to the saints. It will stand all tests. Fire will only make it like gold well refined. Floods will only purify it. Storms of persecution will only make it shine the clearer. We love it: we rejoice in it, we trust by it to be made free; and if the truth make us free, we shall be free indeed. We cling to it, for all else is soon to be shaken, and all the refuges of lies swept away. We thank God for the light of his word, and that immortality is brought to light through the gospel.

We love the name of Jesus because he hath conquered death, and obtained the keys of the grave, and given us a chance to obtain eternal life. God bless the little warrior—his champion for the truth. May his shadow never be less, nor his strength diminish. May Israel's God still go with him, and give him victory over error and tradition, whenever and wherever he may meet it. From one who was there.

"CRY ALOUD!"

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet."—Rev. 58: 1

Never has there been a time when the church of Christ needed more of the power and love of God than now, in these last days. Many are departing from the faith, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" These difficulties we must meet, and may God help us to endure unto the end, that we may be saved with that little number who shall come up through great tribulation, having washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

I fear we do not heed the above scripture as we should. Many, instead of crying aloud, keep still. "It will not do to say anything, we have no talent, we cannot speak the word well." Such will not do much in the vineyard of the Lord. We cannot find that Jesus when on earth chose the rich and the learned, but went to the poor fishermen, and told them to follow him, and he would make them fishers of men. He taught them to ask of God for what they lacked, who gives to all liberally. Do we heed his word, or shall we keep on grumbling because we have no talent?

Dear Brn., pray for him who pens these lines, that while he is searching the word he may have wisdom, not of men but from God, that he may speak the word when called as one who must in that great day so near give an account of every idle word that is uttered.

"A few more struggles here,
A few more partings sore,
A few more toils, a few more tears,
And we shall weep no more."

For the World's Crisis

THIS GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

I propose to notice what seem to be one or two serious objections to the view generally held by Adventists concerning the gospel of the kingdom, as recorded in Matt 24: 14. Notwithstanding I am a firm believer in the near advent of our Lord, and delight to dwell and feast upon those Scriptures that teach unmistakably that the Savior is at the door, yet I have a great aversion to wresting or misapplying the word of the Lord, even should such a misapplication seem to confirm other views which we may hold. Adventists nearly all claim that the gospel of the kingdom is not the gospel in the general acceptation of the term; but a particular message in the gospel to be given at a particular time. And as that particular time has come, the gospel of the kingdom is now being preached. To this view we object, and shall endeavor to show from the word of the Lord,

1st, that the gospel of the kingdom was preached over eighteen hundred years since. And

2ndly, that the gospel of the kingdom is not a particular message in the gospel, but the gospel in the general acceptation of the term; the same gospel that has been preached during the whole gospel dispensation.

That the gospel of the kingdom was preached more than eighteen hundred years since, will appear from the following scriptures: "And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness, and every disease among the people." Matt. 9: 35. See also Matt. 4: 23. Mark's testimony is also to the point, as recorded in chapter 1, verses 14, 15,—"Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." Believe what gospel? Why, the gospel that Jesus was preaching to them, the gospel of the kingdom, of course.

From the above testimony we learn that Jesus went about all the cities and villages teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Not only so, but he admonishes his hearers to repent and believe "the gospel," showing conclusively that "the gospel" and "the gospel of the kingdom" are synonymous, one and the same thing.

That the gospel of the kingdom is nothing more nor less than the gospel in the general acceptation of the term, is most positively proved from Mark 13: 10, which reads as follows: "And the gospel must first be published among all nations." Here it will be seen that what Matthew denominates the gospel of the kingdom, Mark calls "the gospel"—the same gospel that has been preached during the whole gospel dispensation.

S. D. Adventists claim that the everlasting gospel of Rev. 14: 6 (the first angel's message) synchronizes with the gospel of the kingdom, Matt. 24: 14. If this be true, then it follows that the first angel's message dates back more than eighteen hundred years; consequently the three messages must cover the whole gospel dispensation. The writer is alone responsible for the views herein set forth. If any one has any better light, we shall be thankful to receive it.

THE FIRE SPREADING.

Through the kindness of a friend to whom it was written, we are permitted to lay before our readers the following account of the way in which a minister of the Baptist denomination received the blessing of entire sanctification. May all the ministers of Jesus Christ seek and obtain this baptism of holy fire:

In the early part of last December, the Holy Spirit began to work upon my heart convincing me that I was not living as I ought to; at the same time making use of the expressions of a Methodist minister at our union prayer meetings, to show me that there was a higher christian life to which he had attained. At last both the Presbyterian minister and myself were deeply impressed with the conviction that it was our duty, as well as privilege, to go forward and seek a full salvation; the idea of duty being the most prominent. Our experiences from the first were almost identical. We were intimate—had often talked over the matter of our spiritual poverty, and that of all our churches; and when the Methodist minister, just sent to our place, spoke of a higher spiritual life, we were both prepared to take hold of it. All prejudice against the "Methodist doctrine" was removed at the start—for I always had more or less prejudice against that church, and most of its doctrines. But God made me willing to be blessed by any one.

First of all, I consecrated my all to the Lord. This was no small thing. I found that the more I laid down, the more I saw to give up. I drew a form of covenant, or dedication, consisting of fifteen articles, and after a very long struggle, with prayer and fasting, was enabled to say that I was not my own; that all I had, or was, belonged to the Lord; that my will was conformed to his will; indeed, that I had no will of my own. At this time he blessed me with an unusual degree of peace and joy, together with great freedom and boldness in preaching. My knowledge of the Scriptures grew amazingly; it seemed to me that all my previous knowledge of the Bible was only theoretical. Now the word was the bread of life. Prayer, also, seemed to be something wholly different, fresh, and full of power, so that I could spend hours a day communing with my God. It continued so for for two weeks, when, in answer to prayer for a fuller measure of the divine presence, the Holy Ghost came upon me in mighty power, and continued with me about an hour and a half, as they told me, (the family of the Presbyterian minister, at whose house I was at the time,) although it did not seem to me one-half as long. During this visitation, I was not unconscious, though nearly speechless, overpowered with a sense of the presence of the Holy Ghost. It was awfully solemn, though I was not frightened, nor did I shrink back in the least. During this they took me up from the floor on which I had sunk, and laid me on a bed. Then came Jesus, and filled me till I wept aloud with a view of his wonderful love for me. This vision (I can hardly call it anything else) lasted some twenty minutes or so. Then, at the same time I arose and began praying, by thanking the Holy Spirit and Christ for their manifestations to me; and while I was engaged in prayer, the love of the Father in giving his Son to die for the world, impressed me so that I lost sight of everything else. Thus it was, first, the Holy Ghost, then the Savior, and lastly, the Father. I shall never forget that day to my dying hour. From that time to this I have been absorbed in the Divine will. I have begun a new life. Everything is new. The work of the ministry is one of the most solemn realities this side of eternity, and at the same time one of the most delightful employments I can conceive of. All my ungodly ambition gone, all selfishness burned up, I seem to stand alone with Jesus, and take supreme delight in his words. To do his will is my meat and my drink. I do love him supremely.—Earnest Christian.

LOOK TO JESUS.

Look to Jesus to be made like him. He is the model of a christian. "His nature and his name is love." He is meek, loving, pure and good. It is not the will of God that you be like some one else, but it is his will that you be like Jesus. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." It is not essential either to your salvation or usefulness that the capacity and gifts of another be yours, but that you have the mind of Christ. When you sit for a likeness, you sit not for some one else, but for your own.

Look to Jesus in the day of temptation and trial. You have left the service of Satan. He hates you for it. He will do all he can to overthrow you. His stratagems are cunningly devised. He is the "accuser of the brethren." When the waves of discouragement roll around you, he will say, "where now is your God?" But look to Jesus. He has overcome the devil. He will give you power over him. Is the day of trial upon you? Do cares like a wild deluge come? Do storms of sorrow fall? Look to Jesus. "He is the fullness of the Godhead bodily." "He is mighty to save." His eye is on you. You have in him a friend "who sticketh closer than a brother." Trust in Jesus, and all will be well. Look to Jesus.—W. F. Downing.

LET ME GO.

AIR.—The Captive Indian.

Let me go to the land where the curse resteth not,
Sweet home of fruition, bright goal of my hope;
Where the conflict of ages no more shall be known,
And the great life-work's ended,—oh! let me go home.

CHO.—For the exiled captives sigh for home,
There's a wail on every breeze;
Let the reapers come with a harvest song,
And bind up the golden sheaves.

Let me go, for the heart boweth down o'er the tomb,
I fain would escape from its portals of gloom;
And Lethe's cold wave murmurs darkly and lone,
I shrink from its slumbers,—O, let me go home.

Let me go, for I pine for the dear ones again,
That went down in the battle, and scorned to complain;
The bravest and truest the dark night bemoan,
And sigh for the morning,—oh! let me go home.

Let me go! in the dim misty future I see
Sweet islands, inlaid in a bright crystal sea,
Where the pure of all ages, with beauty and song,
Share in love's richest banquet,—O, let me go home.

Let me go, ere the hopes of the wicked shall fail,
Ere cheeks that have bloomed shall wax deathly and pale,
Yes, hide me, dear Savior, from earth's final groan,
Let me go with the dear ones—oh! let me go home.

STEPHEN'S PETITION.

"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."—Acts 7: 59.

In discussing the subject of the soul and spirit, our opponents frequently flee to the text we have quoted. This is one of their strong-holds. Drive them out of this by the "sword of the Spirit," which is the word of God and sound arguments; they are frequently willing to yield, or else say, "It don't make much difference either way," or, that "you are a 'no soulist,' consequently are not worth talking with."

1. The position generally assumed is, that the "spirit" spoken of in the text, is the immortal soul; which is the thinking, rational, and responsible part of man.

2. That it goes to heaven, or hell, immediately, at the death of the body, or exterior man.

Let us take our Bible, dear reader, and see whether it will bear out, or by any means favor, the above position. We know that every person that will take the Bible for his standard, will very soon see the folly of assuming such a position.

1. We inquire, Does the word "spirit" in the text mean the soul? We answer, No! because the word Psuchee, rendered soul, is not in the text. O! you are a "no soulist." Not so fast, friend; there is no subject in the Scriptures plainer than the soul. Soul is one idea, and immortal soul quite another. Soul occurs several hundred times in our English version; but immortal soul, or spirit, never occurs a single time. Psuchee occurs about one hundred and five times in the New Testament. Fifty-nine times it is translated soul; forty times life. We now direct the reader's attention to a few passages where Psuchai occurs, evidently meaning a living being or person. Acts 2: 41, . . . And the same day there were added unto the disciples about three thousand (Psuchai) souls, or persons.

Joseph called his father Jacob, and his kindred seventy-five (Psuchais) souls.—See Gen. 47: 26, 27; Deut. 10: 22; Acts 27: 27. We were all in the ship, two hundred and seventy-six (Psuchai) souls. Noah and his family, in all eight (Psuchai) souls, were saved by water. 1 Pet. 3: 20.

In the Revelation of Jesus Christ made known to the apostle, while a prisoner in Patmos, he says, "I saw the (Psuchas) souls under the altar, that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held."—Rev. 6: 9. Again in Rev. 20: 4, John says, "I saw the (Psuchas) souls of them that were beheaded."

A certain D. D., an expounder of Orthodoxy, once told his hearers "that the soul is immaterial, that it cannot be seen with the best telescope!!" Pray tell us, Doctor, how John could possibly have seen the souls that were BEHEADED, if they were immaterial? They must have had heads, otherwise they could not have been cut off by the cruel hand of the persecutor. What kind of a telescope must John have looked through to have seen immaterial souls? We think, Doctor, that your telescope looks altogether too high to see material souls "under the altar," not in heaven.

We have only just glanced at the proof that can be brought in favor of our position. We deem this sufficient for the present.

2. The Spirit. The word translated spirit in the text is not Psuchai, but Pneuma. It is never translated soul in the English Bibles. Hence Stephen could not have meant, Lord Jesus, receive my soul. Pneuma comes from Pneuo, to blow, breathe, of the wind and air. Pneuma, wind, air, the air we breathe, breath, the breath of life.—Liddell and Scott. The following passage will illustrate it: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath (air or wind, not soul) of life," and the consequence was, that this formation out of dust became a living soul, or person, capable of exercising its proper functions in life. Gen. 2: 7. Job evidently understood this subject when he said, "The spirit of God hath made me (out of dust), and the breath of the Almighty hath given me (Job) life."—Job 33: 4. But says one, "Solomon was a very wise man, and he says, 'The spirit returns to God, who gave it.'"—Eccl. 12: 7. Do you believe that he really meant what he said? Yes, certainly. Do you believe that Solomon contradicts himself in Ecclesiastes? No. Very well, you are bound to accept of what he says in his third and ninth chapters as well as the twelfth. For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all (both) one breath or spirit; so man has no pre-eminence in this one respect; all go unto one place,—the dust of the ground from whence he was taken. In other words, man was formed out of the dust of the ground; the breath of the Almighty caused him to live, to have dominion over the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and over every thing that creepeth upon the earth. The other fleshly formations were made out of the dust of the ground; God gave them the breath of life, as he did unto man. Gen. 7: 22. Before the breath was given to either, it was in his hand; after he gave it to them, it was still in his power, for Paul says, concerning the Deity, "In him we live, move, and have our being. He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things."—Acts 27: 25–28.

When he withdraws it from the sons of men, they become subjects of death, and the dead know not any thing; their love, hatred, and envy are now perished. Eccl. 7: 5, 6. This is the sense in which the breath or spirit returns to God, who gave it.

We are satisfied that the above is in harmony with Moses, Job, Solomon, and Paul. They nowhere teach that the soul, nor the spirit is the thinking I, nor the thinking It, neither a spark of Divinity within, like quicksilver in the glass ball of a thermometer.

3. We shall speak on the word "receive," in the text. If the reader will please turn to a Greek Testament, he will find that the word rendered receive, is Dexai. Its true meaning, according to Liddell and Scott, is the right hand, frequently, as a token of saluting, or addressing; also, as a sign of assurance, pledge, or treaty, to give one, and receive from him the pledge of the right hand.

Another writer says:—"Donnegan, in his definition of dexai, says it signifies the right hand, a promise, pact or covenant, assistance, aid, strength, courage, from dexios, and dexios from dechomai." The above definitions most clearly show that the word in question is frequently used in the sense of assistance, aid, and support, also a pledge, etc. Certainly, this gives us some light on this very (to many) perplexing subject. Stephen had been speaking the word of truth to the Jews; they were displeased with him, as many are now. Their indignation was raised against him. They cast him out of the city and stoned him. He being full of the Holy Spirit, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand (Dexiom) of God. Acts 7: 56. This doubtless was a vision. We cannot see how he could have seen the glory of God in any other way, only as the three apostles saw it on the Mount. Matt. 17: 1–9; 1 Pet. 1: 16–18. No one in that trying hour could have supported him like the Lord Jesus, the mediator between God and man (1 Tim. 2: 5); who manifested himself to Israel (Jno. 1: 31) as a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief (Isa. 53), whom the same nation had rejected and crucified.

4. "He (Stephen) fell asleep." This expression is familiar to every student of the Bible. As this may possibly fall into the hands of some good and honest mind, that may not have had opportunity of investigating this very interesting topic, we will briefly show in what sense it is used. As he was probably a Jew, (Acts 7: 2.) we must turn to the archives of that peculiar people, and see in what sense they understood it. Paul says, in Acts 19: 36, that "David fell on sleep." In 1 Kings 2: 19, it reads:—"So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David." Though David slept with his fathers, and it is an undisputed fact that he was buried, yet the apostle Peter, who spoke directly under the influence of the Holy Spirit, some ten hundred years after says, "David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 34. In verse 29 of the same chapter it reads: "David is both dead and buried." But says one, How does this apply to Stephen? Very well, indeed. Devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. Acts 8: 2. Thus they buried David, and they buried Stephen. It may be argued that it was the bodies of David and Stephen that were buried, but the spirit, which our opponents tell us is the thinking and responsible part, might have still lived on in a conscious state of existence! What saith the Scriptures? His (man's) breath (or spirit) goeth forth, in that very day (not another day) his thoughts perish.—Ps. 146: 4. Solomon says: the dead know not anything; also their love, hatred and envy are now perished. Eccl. 9: 5, 6. Hence no person can gain anything by asserting that it is the spirit that thinks, for in death it ceases to think.

Dear readers, we have very briefly presented to you a few thoughts on this subject. It is by no means exhausted. We are satisfied that it will harmonize with the teachings of God's word, which is able to make us wise unto salvation. May we all search as for hidden treasures, to see whether these things are so, and by so doing build our foundation upon the rock—not upon the sand, which the flood will easily wash away. God's word is not designed to make us skeptical, heretical, nor infidel, but to lead us to truth. May we be as earnest as Paul was, when he says, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Then we, if found worthy, shall "put on immortality." Before that event takes place, we are looking for "a time of trouble, such as never was." The seventh and last trumpet will ere long sound, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." And what follows? "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and they that fear thy name, both small and great, and shouldest destroy them that destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 15–18. Be it so, according to thy word.—Prophetic Watchman.

TIME.

Time reveals to us the verity of those prophecies relative to both the first and second advent of our Savior, although some of our modern teachers have made them mystical, while others have ignored and eschewed that which the apostle declares is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; yet it behooves those whose minds are so illuminated with the Holy Spirit of God as to readily discern the signs of the times, to cry, Behold the Bridegroom cometh! It is true scoffers abounding in these last days will sneer while we yearn for our Lord's return, and will say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" you have already brought yourselves and the doctrine which you advocate into disrepute, by the sad disappointments of past days. But, dear brethren, we can reason with these reflectors on this wise:

In all the transactions of life there is time. No person being engaged in a lucrative business and wishing to succeed will fail in coming up to time, by promptly adjusting all matters that pertain to his business. No public speaker will expect to stand up and address a large concourse of people, unless he first appoints a time and place for them to convene. But few of Adam's sons and daughters are conveyed in Nahum's chariots from place to place without first making themselves acquainted with the hour at which the train leaves, and they are quite sure to be at the station in time. No husbandman expects to reap a bountiful harvest unless he sows the seed in time. And so we might speak of men in all the departments of life, who never consider it dangerous to meddle with time in their business transactions, and whose minds are so engrossed with the things of earth that they never find time to investigate, or even look at the note of promise which God has given to those who are of faith.

Yet these men will brand God's little flock as infidels and heretics, because they are in secret places crying,

"Jesus, come, oh come to reign."

Now if these objectors could only spare the time, they might turn to Dan. 12: 10, and there see that a certain class were to understand the time, which is the subject upon which Daniel treats.

That God will help us all to be wise, and ready for the reception of our coming King, is the prayer of one expecting very soon to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

LIVING HOURS WITH THE PILGRIMS.—No. 1.

"His disciples came and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus."—MATT. 14. 12.

When the disciples discovered that Herod had beheaded John the Baptist, their hearts were filled with sorrow. They took up the body and buried it, and came and poured out their trouble into the ears of Jesus. They longed for the sympathizing heart of a friend to bear a portion of their sorrow. Jesus was their only true friend. His love for them knew no bounds. So they came to him, confident of comfort. What a blessed privilege Jesus has given us, that we may do the same. He will be to us all he was to them. He was their "wisdom, their "righteousness," and their redemption; he will be the same to us. He was their leader and guide; he will be ours. He was their hope, their shield, and their Comforter; he will be the same to us, —our "exceeding great reward," if we will go to him in confidence, as they did.

"Go tell Jesus when thy heart is full
Of keen and bitter agony and woe;
When the dear, precious form of one beloved
Is parted from thee—in the grave laid low;
Go and tell Jesus—he will soothe thy grief;
To thy poor suffering heart speak relief."

That is true. O, how cheering! Is your heart filled with the bitter pangs of agony? Perhaps you are mourning the loss of the departed, who are snatched as a flower in its early bloom. Then "go and tell Jesus." Go to his feet, and pour out your heart of affliction in his ears, and he will soothe and bind up your sad, broken heart, and weep with you as he did with Martha and Mary at the grave of Lazarus.

What a blessed privilege it is, to hold communion with Jesus, who loves us and pitieth as a father pitieth his child! When you are tempest-tost by the wild, surging waves of trouble, go tell Jesus; tell him all—pour out your heart as a child pours out his troubles to an earthly parent. He will command the billows, as he did the waves of Galilee, "Peace, be still," and there will be a great calm.

Does the Prince of this world, the power of darkness, linger around your pathway with manifold temptations? Does he cause clouds to overshadow your mind, and your path to look dark before thee? By cunningly devised fables does he attempt to lead you in the path of apostasy—of world-conforming christianity? Oh, flee to the arms of Jesus! "Cast all your care upon him, for he careth for you." Nail the serpent to the cross. He destroyed the happiness of Eden. Resolve that he shall not destroy the Eden happiness within your breast. Jesus extends his entreating arms to press you nearer his bosom, where the raging winds of temptation will never disturb your heart, welling up with everlasting bliss. Then you can sing;

"No condemnation now I dread,
Jesus, with all in him, is mine;
Alive in him, my living head,
And clothed in righteousness divine."

Perhaps, dear reader, I am addressing one who is without fullness of salvation. You are out of the ark of safety. Perhaps you desire to be a disciple of Christ; but you are weak. The Devil knows your weakness, and attacks you at that point. Then go tell Jesus; confess all. He stoops with listening ears to hear it. Oh, "look to Jesus," and he will give you strength; and will give you all you ask for.

Are you burdened with care, and do your sins rise up before you, like a mountain to overwhelm you? Go tell Jesus. Listen to his sweet, entreating voice:—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." Do this, and you will find sweet and perfect rest for your weary heart.

Who does not long for rest? Go to Jesus with your longing, and receive that perfect repose in God that will be undisturbed by the perils of these last days. In every want of your imperfect nature, may the Spirit lead you to "go and tell Jesus." WM. H. SPENCER.

ANGELS vs. SPIRITUALISM.

Having attended some lectures on "Spiritualism" recently, as a standard bearer for Jesus and his truth, I was compelled to take issue with the speaker on some points, one of which was, that their so-called spirits of the dead, were identical with the angels of scripture. Their great proof text on this point being Rev. 22: 9. And by the way, I always remark that spiritualists in the introduction of their peculiar views in a christian community, are as prompt in quoting Scripture, as the Devil was in the wilderness, though not always quite as correct.

Their tactics in this direction are evidently as follows: If we succeed in establishing this hypothesis in the minds of the christian community, we shall have an easy conquest, for the Bible teaches that angels communicated with mortals in old time, and if then, why not now? So if they can prove their premises correct, their conclusions would have some weight; but, unfortunately for them, although orthodox theology may in some measure sustain that view, Bible theology cannot be made to do so.

The passage quoted (Rev. 22: 8, 9) reads as follows: "And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things; then saith he unto me, See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Worship God."

They wanted to make the angel say that he was one of the prophets. But, on giving the text an analytical examination, it was shown conclusively that the angel neither meant or said, more or less, than that he was fellow-servant to John, fellow servant to his (John's) brethren the prophets, and fellow-servant to them which keep the sayings of the book.

Reference was also made by them to the case of Peter's deliverance from prison, his appearance at the door of Mary, where a prayer meeting was being held, the delight and astonishment of Rhoda, her report to the friends, their doubt of its being Peter, and their reply that it was his angel. Acts 12. But this also, if its proves anything, proves too much for their side.

In the first place, the disciples knew that Peter was imprisoned alive; they were praying for his deliverance. In the second place, it was only a supposition on their part.

Now, if they supposed that this angel was Peter's spirit, knowing that Peter was still in prison (for they did not believe that Peter was at the door), then it follows that when Peter died, his other spirit would turn into an angel; consequently Peter would have two spirits, or spirit angels. How absurd!

The fact is, they believed in guardian angels, as taught in both the Old and New Testaments; (Gen. 48: 16, Matt. 18: 10), and believed in by the saints of God in all ages.

Again, the angel that visited Abraham and Lot were claimed to be spirits of men, because they were called men, had the appearance of men, and partook of man's food; but what does the narrative prove? It proves, first, that angels are personal beings, having identity, tangibility, and reality; and furthermore, their personal appearance bears a close resemblance to that of man. Again it proves that they have organs of speech, and are able to communicate with man in an intelligent manner. Now, if modern spirits would manifest themselves as the angels did to Abraham, instead of rapping on, and tipping over tables, and communicate to us in audible tones of speech, instead of rapping out sentences by the A. B. C. process, intelligent men and women might give heed to their claims. Again, there is no evidence but that Abraham knew his visitors to be angels. It is possible that God had employed this means (his angels) to make known his purposes and promises to Abraham previous to this time.

The attempt, therefore, to prove from the Scriptures, that angels are the spirits of dead men, utterly fails. But, on the contrary, they prove very conclusively that the angels of God are a distinct order of creation. "What is man that thou art mindful of him. . . For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels." Psa. 8: 4, 5. While this proves that angels are superior to man in intellect, it also proves that man was created subsequent to the angels. 2 Peter 2: 11, also corroborates this view. "Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might," etc. Greater than who? greater than man. Read the context. But Heb. 2: 16, is conclusive on this point. "For verily he (Christ) took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." "But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand? . . . are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. 1: 13, 14.

For the World's Crisis.

WHY THE WICKED DEAD ARE RAISED.

It is often asked, in reply to the Scripture testimony that there is to be a second death, "What is the use of raising them up to kill them again?" In reply to this we may say that an unconditional resurrection was foreordained from the foundation of the world, in order to secure the resurrection of those who would be incapable of complying with a conditional resurrection; and as an unconditional resurrection secures the resurrection of all men, the wicked are raised in pursuance of this foreordained decree, while the infliction of the second death is the result of individual sin alone.

It is written, "Known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world"; hence He must have known and foreordained the resurrection of all men, as contingent on their coming under the dominion of death through Adam's transgression. Were this otherwise, multitudes would fail of the future life from sheer inability to comply with a conditional resurrection. Indeed, had it been decreed on condition, the Deity, being holy, could not have allowed sin in the conditions, and so none could have been raised; for we read, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."

So in order that any might attain unto "the resurrection from the dead," it was necessary that the resurrection of all men should have been foreordained independent of conditions. And having been so foreordained, there must be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust; and so on this our hope of a future life depends. And this classification in the resurrection is the result of individual character. And since we cannot fail of a resurrection, that being fixed by an unalterable fiat of Jehovah, let us strive to attain unto that special resurrection,—"the resurrection from the dead"; for on such the second death will have no power. And since God in his goodness and mercy has made the resurrection of all men a sure thing, failure to attain eternal life will be the sole result of man's free will in rejecting that future life, which begins by and with the resurrection.

Let us, then, seek to overcome sin, and to attain life by repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. For we read, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 7, 8. And the certainty of this future punishment is presented as an inducement for such characters to break off their sins by righteousness, and their iniquities by turning unto the Lord.

Be not deceived with the idea that the threatened punishment is a play upon words, for God is not unrighteous, to practice deceit. The second death cannot be a lake of fire, but the part which all liars are to have therein, which is to die thereby. To escape this, we must overcome sin by faith in Christ; for "he that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death," as Christ himself testifies.

TRUTH vs. ERROR.

We witnessed some months since a combat between truth and error. The combatants strongly reminded us of David and Goliath. The one we named in our mind Goliath had armed himself with an old spear, made by Pagans away back in a time of heathenish darkness and ignorance. It was as unfit for the time in which we live, and as unsuitable to protect us from the dangers by which we are surrounded, as the ploughs and other implements of husbandry in use then, would be for our rocky side hill farms. And it is as foolish to trust in it, now that the gospel has revealed a plainer and more excellent way, as it would be for our farmers to reject the modern ploughs, for those in use in Asia thousands of years ago.

The spear was like a weaver's beam, heavy and cumbersome, but without point. His sword had upon its blade, written in large Roman capitals, Philosophy and Reason. It was quite as ancient as the spear, and as wholly unsuitable for warfare. It was without edge, and composed of metal soft and spurious.

Armed with these weapons and trusting in them, Goliath challenged one from an army, (considered by many a band of dwarfs and pigmies,) to meet him. David accepted the challenge in the name of Israel's God, and with smooth stones from the clear brook—bright jewels from the mine—truths from the word of God—with the sling of Faith, he advanced to meet him. Ah! little did Goliath and his brethren think that the humble shepherd, small in stature, was one of the King's Invincibles. How the giant toiled and sweat trying to wield that heavy, uncouth, spear. While little David, armed with nothing but Bible truth, which God never intended should be heavy and burdensome, went round and round him, firing his smooth stones, and hitting every time. Spectators were compelled to acknowledge the superiority of the weapons used by the champion of Truth. Goliath was fully capable of winning a victory with the right armor, but his strength was lost in trying to use weapons that were worthless.

We have often been amused while thinking of that encounter, but we have rejoiced continually that by it the truth was made the "brighter to shine." We love the truth of the Bible, the faith once delivered to the saints. It will stand all tests. Fire will only make it like gold well refined. Floods will only purify it. Storms of persecution will only make it shine the clearer. We love it: we rejoice in it, we trust by it to be made free; and if the truth make us free, we shall be free indeed. We cling to it, for all else is soon to be shaken, and all the refuges of lies swept away. We thank God for the light of his word, and that immortality is brought to light through the gospel.

We love the name of Jesus because he hath conquered death, and obtained the keys of the grave, and given us a chance to obtain eternal life. God bless the little warrior—his champion for the truth. May his shadow never be less, nor his strength diminish. May Israel's God still go with him, and give him victory over error and tradition, whenever and wherever he may meet it. From one who was there.

"CRY ALOUD!"

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet."—Rev. 58: 1.

Never has there been a time when the church of Christ needed more of the power and love of God than now, in these last days. Many are departing from the faith, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" These difficulties we must meet, and may God help us to endure unto the end, that we may be saved with that little number who shall come up through great tribulation, having washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

I fear we do not heed the above scripture as we should. Many, instead of crying aloud, keep still. "It will not do to say anything; we have no talent; we cannot speak the word well." Such will not do much in the vineyard of the Lord. We cannot find that Jesus when on earth chose the rich and the learned, but went to the poor fishermen, and told them to follow him, and he would make them fishers of men. He taught them to ask of God for what they lacked, who gives to all liberally. Do we heed his word, or shall we keep on grumbling because we have no talent?

Dear Brn., pray for him who pens these lines, that while he is searching the word he may have wisdom, not of men but from God, that he may speak the word when called as one who must in that great day so near give an account of every idle word that is uttered.

"A few more struggles here,
A few more partings sore,
A few more toils, a few more tears,
And we shall weep no more."

THIS GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

I propose to notice what seem to be one or two serious objections to the view generally held by Adventists concerning the gospel of the kingdom, as recorded in Matt. 24: 14. Notwithstanding I am a firm believer in the near advent of our Lord, and delight to dwell and feast upon those Scriptures that teach unmistakably that the Savior is at the door; yet I have a great aversion to wresting or misapplying the word of the Lord, even should such a misapplication seem to confirm other views which we may hold. Adventists nearly all claim that the gospel of the kingdom is not the gospel in the general acceptation of the term; but a particular message in the gospel to be given at a particular time. And as that particular time has come, the gospel of the kingdom is now being preached. To this view we object, and shall endeavor to show from the word of the Lord,

1st, that the gospel of the kingdom was preached over eighteen hundred years since. And 2ndly, that the gospel of the kingdom is not a particular message in the gospel, but the gospel in the general acceptation of the term; the same gospel that has been preached during the whole gospel dispensation.

That the gospel of the kingdom was preached more than eighteen hundred years since, will appear from the following scriptures: "And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness, and every disease among the people." Matt. 9: 35. See also Matt. 4: 23. Mark's testimony is also to the point, as recorded in chapter 1, verses 14, 15,—"Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." Believe what gospel? Why, the gospel that Jesus was preaching to them, the gospel of the kingdom, of course.

From the above testimony we learn that Jesus went about all the cities and villages teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Not only so, but he admonishes his hearers to repent and believe "the gospel," showing conclusively that "the gospel" and "the gospel of the kingdom" are synonymous, one and the same thing.

That the gospel of the kingdom is nothing more nor less than the gospel in the general acceptation of the term, is most positively proved from Mark 13: 10, which reads as follows: "And the gospel must first be published among all nations." Here it will be seen that what Matthew denominates the gospel of the kingdom, Mark calls "the gospel"—the same gospel that has been preached during the whole gospel dispensation.

S. D. Adventists claim that the everlasting gospel of Rev. 14: 6 (the first angel's message) synchronizes with the gospel of the kingdom, Matt. 24: 14. If this be true, then it follows that the first angel's message dates back more than eighteen hundred years; consequently the three messages must cover the whole gospel dispensation. The writer is alone responsible for the views herein set forth. If any one has any better light, we shall be thankful to receive it.

THE FIRE SPREADING.

Through the kindness of a friend to whom it was written, we are permitted to lay before our readers the following account of the way in which a minister of the Baptist denomination received the blessing of entire sanctification. May all the ministers of Jesus Christ seek and obtain this baptism of holy fire:

In the early part of last December, the Holy Spirit began to work upon my heart convincing me that I was not living as I ought to; at the same time making use of the expressions of a Methodist minister at our union prayer meetings, to show me that there was a higher christian life to which he had attained. At last both the Presbyterian minister and myself were deeply impressed with the conviction that it was our duty, as well as privilege, to go forward and seek a full salvation; the idea of duty being the most prominent. Our experiences from the first were almost identical. We were intimate—had often talked over the matter of our spiritual poverty, and that of all our churches; and when the Methodist minister, just sent to our place, spoke of a higher spiritual life, we were both prepared to take hold of it. All prejudice against the "Methodist doctrine" was removed at the start—for I always had more or less prejudice against that church, and most of its doctrines. But God made me willing to be blessed by any one.

First of all, I consecrated my all to the Lord. This was no small thing. I found that the more I laid down, the more I saw to give up. I drew a form of covenant, or dedication, consisting of fifteen articles, and aft very long struggle, with prayer and fas was enabled to say that I was not m that all I had, or was, belonged to th that my will was conformed to his w deed, that I had no will of my own. this time he blessed me with an unus of peace and joy, together with gr dom and boldness in preaching. M edge of the Scriptures grew ama seemed to me that all my previous of the Bible was only theoretical. Now word was the bread of life. Prayer, also, seemed to be something wholly different, fresh, and full of power, so that I could spend hours a day communing with my God. It continued so for for two weeks, when, in answer to prayer for a fuller measure of the divine presence, the Holy Ghost came upon me in mighty power, and continued with me about an hour and a half, as they told me, (the family of the Presbyterian minister, at whose house I was at the time,) although it did not seem to me one-half as long. During this visitation, I was not unconscious, though nearly speechless, overpowered with a sense of the presence of the Holy Ghost. It was awfully solemn, though I was not frightened, nor did I shrink back in the least. During this they took me up from the floor on which I had sunk, and laid me on a bed. Then came Jesus, and filled me till I wept aloud with a view of his wonderful love for me. This vision (I can hardly call it anything else) lasted some twenty minutes or so. Then, at the same time I arose and began praying, by thanking the Holy Spirit and Christ for their manifestations to me; and while I was engaged in prayer, the love of the Father in giving his Son to die for the world, impressed me so that I lost sight of everything else. Thus it was; first, the Holy Ghost, then the Savior, and lastly, the Father. I shall never forget that day to my dying hour. From that time to this I have been absorbed in the Divine will. I have begun a new life. Everything is new. The work of the ministry is one of the most solemn realities this side of eternity, and at the same time one of the most delightful employments I can conceive of. All my ungodly ambition gone, all selfishness burned up, I seem to stand alone with Jesus, and take supreme delight in his words. To do his will is my meat and my drink. I do love him supremely.—Earnest Christian.

LOOK TO JESUS.

Look to Jesus to be made like him. He is the model of a christian. "His nature and his name is love." He is meek, loving, pure and good. It is not the will of God that you be like some one else, but it is his will that you be like Jesus. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." It is not essential either to your salvation or usefulness that the capacity and gifts of another be yours, but that you have the mind of Christ. When you sit for a likeness, you sit not for some one's else, but for your own.

Look to Jesus in the day of temptation and trial. You have left the service of Satan. He hates you for it. He will do all he can to overthrow you. His stratagems are cunningly devised. He is the "accuser of the brethren." When the waves of discouragement roll around you, he will say, "where now is your God?" But look to Jesus. He has overcome the devil. He will give you power over him. Is the day of trial upon you? Do cares like a wild deluge come? Do storms of sorrow fall? Look to Jesus. "He is the fullness of the Godhead bodily." "He is mighty to save." His eye is on you. You have in him a friend "who sticketh closer than a brother." Trust in and obey him, and all will be well. Look to Jesus.—M. N. Downing.

LET ME GO.

AIR.—The Captive Indian.

Let me go to the land where the curse resteth not,
Sweet home of fruition, bright goal of my hope;
Where the conflict of ages no more shall be known,
And the great life-work's ended,—oh! let me go home.

CHO.—For the exiled captives sigh for home,
There's a wail on every breeze;
Let the reapers come with a harvest song,
And bind up the golden sheaves.

Let me go, for the heart boweth down o'er the tomb,
I fain would escape from its portals of gloom;
And Lethe's cold wave murmurs darkly and lone,
I shrink from its slumbers,—O, let me go home.

Let me go, for I pine for the dear ones again,
That went down in the battle, and scorned to complain;
The bravest and truest the dark night bemoan,
And sigh for the morning,—oh! let me go home.

Let me go! in the dim misty future I see
Sweet islands, inlaid in a bright crystal sea,
Where the pure of all ages, with beauty and song,
Share in love's richest banquet,—O, let me go home.

Let me go, ere the hopes of the wicked shall fail,
Ere cheeks that have bloomed shall wax deathly and pale;
Yes, hide me, dear Savior, from earth's final groan,
Let me go with the dear ones—oh! let me go home.

STEPHEN'S PETITION.

"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit."—Acts 7: 59.

In discussing the subject of the soul and spirit, our opponents frequently flee to the text we have quoted. This is one of their strong-holds. Drive them out of this by the "sword of the Spirit," which is the word of God and sound arguments; they are frequently willing to yield, or else say, "It don't make much difference either way," or, that "you are a 'no soulist,' consequently are not worth talking with."

1. The position generally assumed is, that the "spirit" spoken of in the text, is the immortal soul; which is the thinking, rational, and responsible part of man.

2. That it goes to heaven, or hell, immediately, at the death of the body, or exterior man.

Let us take our Bible, dear reader, and see whether it will bear out, or by any means favor, the above position. We know that every person that will take the Bible for his standard, will very soon see the folly of assuming such a position.

1. We inquire, Does the word "spirit" in the text mean the soul? We answer, No! because the word Psuchee, rendered soul, is not in the text. O! you are a "no soulist." Not so fast, friend; there is no subject in the Scriptures plainer than the soul. Soul is one idea, and immortal soul quite another. Soul occurs several hundred times in our English version; but immortal soul, or spirit, never occurs a single time. Psuchee occurs about one hundred and five times in the New Testament. Fifty-nine times it is translated soul; forty times life. We now direct the reader's attention to a few passages where Psuchai occurs, evidently meaning a living being or person. Acts 2: 41, . . . And the same day there were added unto the disciples about three thousand (Psuchai) souls, or persons.

Joseph called his father Jacob, and his kindred seventy-five (Psuchais) souls.—See Gen. 47: 26, 27; Deut. 10: 22; Acts 27: 27. We were all in the ship, two hundred and seventy-six (Psuchai) souls. Noah and his family, in all eight (Psuchai) souls, were saved by water. 1 Pet. 3: 20.

In the Revelation of Jesus Christ made known to the apostle, while a prisoner in Patmos, he says, "I saw the (Psuchas) souls under the altar, that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held."—Rev. 6: 9. Again in Rev. 20: 4, John says, "I saw the (Psuchas) souls of them that were beheaded."

A certain D. D., an expounder of Orthodoxy, once told his hearers "that the soul is immaterial, that it cannot be seen with the best telescope!!" Pray tell us, Doctor, how John could possibly have seen the souls that were BEHEADED, if they were immaterial? They must have had heads, otherwise they could not have been cut off by the cruel hand of the persecutor. What kind of a telescope must John have looked through to have seen immaterial souls? We think, Doctor, that your telescope looks altogether too high to see material souls "under the altar," not in heaven.

We have only just glanced at the proof that can be brought in favor of our position. We deem this sufficient for the present.

2. The Spirit. The word translated spirit in the text is not Psuchai, but Pneuma. It is never translated soul in the English Bibles. Hence Stephen could not have meant, Lord Jesus, receive my soul. Pneuma comes from Pneuo, to blow, breathe, of the wind and air. Pneuma, wind, air, the air we breathe, breath, the breath of life.—Liddell and Scott. The following passage will illustrate it: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath (air or wind, not soul) of life," and the consequence was, that this formation out of dust became a living soul, or person, capable of exercising its proper functions in life. Gen. 2: 7. Job evidently understood this subject, when he said, "The spirit of God hath made me (out of dust), and the breath of the Almighty hath given me (Job) life."—Job 33: 4. But says one, "Solomon was a very wise man, and he says, 'The spirit returns to God, who gave it.'"—Eccl. 12: 7. Do you believe that he really meant what he said? Yes, certainly. Do you believe that Solomon contradicts himself in Ecclesiastes? No. Very well, you are bound to accept of what he says in his third and ninth chapters as well as the twelfth. For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them; as one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all (both) one breath or spirit; so man has no pre-eminence in this one respect; all go unto one place,—the dust of the ground from whence he was taken. In other words, man was formed out of the dust of the ground; the breath of the Almighty caused him to live, to have dominion over the beasts of the field, the fowls of the air, and over every thing that creepeth upon the earth. The other fleshly formations were made out of the dust of the ground; God gave them the breath of life, as he did unto man. Gen. 7: 22. Before the breath was given to either, it was in his hand; after he gave it to them, it was still in his power, for Paul says, concerning the Deity, "In him we live, move, and have our being. He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things."—Acts 27: 25-28.

When he withdraws it from the sons of men, they become subjects of death, and the dead know not any thing; their love, hatred, and envy are now perished. Eccl. 7: 5, 6. This is the sense in which the breath or spirit returns to God, who gave it.

We are satisfied that the above is in harmony with Moses, Job, Solomon, and Paul. They nowhere teach that the soul, nor the spirit is the thinking I, nor the thinking It, neither a spark of Divinity within, like quicksilver in the glass ball of a thermometer.

3. We shall speak on the word "receive," in the text. If the reader will please turn to a Greek Testament, he will find that the word rendered receive, is Dexai. Its true meaning, according to Liddell and Scott, is the right hand, frequently, as a token of saluting, or addressing; also, as a sign of assurance, pledge, or treaty, to give one, and receive from him the pledge of the right hand.

Another writer says:—"Donnegan, in his definition of dexai, says it signifies the right hand, a promise, pact or covenant, assistance, aid, strength, courage, from dexios, and dexios from dechomai." The above definitions most clearly show that the word in question is frequently used in the sense of assistance, aid, and support, also a pledge, etc. Certainly, this gives us some light on this very (to many) perplexing subject. Stephen had been speaking the word of truth to the Jews; they were displeased with him, as many are now. Their indignation was raised against him. They cast him out of the city and stoned him. He being full of the Holy Spirit, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand (Dexiom) of God. Acts 7: 56. This doubtless was a vision. We cannot see how he could have seen the glory of God in any other way, only as the three apostles saw it on the Mount. Matt. 17: 1-9; 1 Pet. 1: 16-18. No one in that trying hour could have supported him like the Lord Jesus, the mediator between God and man (1 Tim. 2: 5); who manifested himself to Israel (Jno. 1: 31) as a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief (Isa. 53), whom the same nation had rejected and crucified.

4. "He (Stephen) fell asleep." This expression is familiar to every student of the Bible. As this may possibly fall into the hands of some good and honest mind, that may not have had opportunity of investigating this very interesting topic, we will briefly show in what sense it is used. As he was probably a Jew, (Acts 7: 2.) we must turn to the archives of that peculiar people, and see in what sense they understood it. Paul says, in Acts 19: 36, that "David fell on sleep." In 1 Kings 2: 19, it reads:—"So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David." Though David slept with his fathers, and it is an undisputed fact that he was buried, yet the apostle Peter, who spoke directly under the influence of the Holy Spirit, some ten hundred years after says, "David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts 2: 34. In verse 29 of the same chapter it reads: "David is both dead and buried." But says one, How does this apply to Stephen? Very well, indeed. Devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him. Acts 8: 2. Thus they buried David, and they buried Stephen. It may be argued that it was the bodies of David and Stephen that were buried, but the spirit, which our opponents tell us is the thinking and responsible part, might have still lived on in a conscious state of existence! What saith the Scriptures? His (man's) breath (or spirit) goeth forth, in that very day (not another day) his thoughts perish.—Ps. 146: 4. Solomon says: the dead know not anything; also their love, hatred and envy are now perished. Eccl. 9: 5, 6. Hence no person can gain anything by asserting that it is the spirit that thinks, for in death it ceases to think.

Dear readers, we have very briefly presented to you a few thoughts on this subject. It is by no means exhausted. We are satisfied that it will harmonize with the teachings of God's word, which is able to make us wise unto salvation. May we all search as for hidden treasures, to see whether these things are so, and by so doing build our foundation upon the rock—not upon the sand, which the flood will easily wash away. God's word is not designed to make us skeptical, heretical, nor infidel, but to lead us to truth. May we be as earnest as Paul was, when he says, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Then we, if found worthy, shall "put on immortality." Before that event takes place, we are looking for "a time of trouble, such as never was." The seventh and last trumpet will ere long sound, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." And what follows? "The nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and they that fear thy name, both small and great, and shouldest destroy them that destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 15-18. Be it so, according to thy word.—Prophetic Watchman.

TIME.

Time reveals to us the verity of those prophecies relative to both the first and second advent of our Savior, although some of our modern teachers have made them mystical, while others have ignored and eschewed that which the apostle declares is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; yet it behooves those whose minds are so illuminated with the Holy Spirit of God as to readily discern the signs of the times, to cry, Behold the Bridegroom cometh! It is true scoffers abounding in these last days will sneer while we yearn for our Lord's return, and will say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" you have already brought yourselves and the doctrine which you advocate into disrepute, by the sad disappointments of past days. But, dear brethren, we can reason with these reflectors on this wise:

In all the transactions of life there is time. No person being engaged in a lucrative business and wishing to succeed will fail in coming up to time, by promptly adjusting all matters that pertain to his business. No public speaker will expect to stand up and address a large concourse of people, unless he first appoints a time and place for them to convene. But few of Adam's sons and daughters are conveyed in Nahum's chariots from place to place without first making themselves acquainted with the hour at which the train leaves, and they are quite sure to be at the station in time. No husbandman expects to reap a bountiful harvest unless he sows the seed in time. And so we might speak of men in all the departments of life, who never consider it dangerous to meddle with time in their business transactions, and whose minds are so engrossed with the things of earth that they never find time to investigate, or even look at the note of promise which God has given to those who are of faith.

Yet these men will brand God's little flock as infidels and heretics, because they are in secret places crying,

"Jesus, come, oh come to reign."

Now if these objectors could only spare the time, they might turn to Dan. 12: 10, and there see that a certain class were to understand the time, which is the subject upon which Daniel treats.

That God will help us all to be wise, and ready for the reception of our coming King, is the prayer of one expecting very soon to sing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

LIVING HOURS WITH THE PILGRIMS.—No. 1.

"His disciples came and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus."—MATT. 14: 12.

When the disciples discovered that Herod had beheaded John the Baptist, their hearts were filled with sorrow. They took up the body and buried it, and came and poured out their trouble into the ears of Jesus. They longed for the sympathizing heart of a friend to bear a portion of their sorrow. Jesus was their only true friend. His love for them knew no bounds. So they came to him, confident of comfort. What a blessed privilege Jesus has given us, that we may do the same. He will be to us all he was to them. He was their "wisdom, their "righteousness," and their redemption; he will be the same to us. He was their leader and guide; he will be ours. He was their hope, their shield, and their Comforter; he will be the same to us, —our "exceeding great reward," if we will go to him in confidence, as they did.

"Go tell Jesus when thy heart is full
Of keen and bitter agony and woe;
When the dear, precious form of one beloved
Is parted from thee—in the grave laid low;
Go and tell Jesus—he will soothe thy grief;
To thy poor suffering heart speak relief."

That is true. O, how cheering! Is your heart filled with the bitter pangs of agony? Perhaps you are mourning the loss of the departed, who are snatched as a flower in its early bloom. Then "go and tell Jesus." Go to his feet, and pour out your heart of affliction in his ears, and he will soothe and bind up your sad, broken heart, and weep with you as he did with Martha and Mary at the grave of Lazarus.

What a blessed privilege it is, to hold communion with Jesus, who loves us and pitieth as a father pitieth his child! When you are tempest-tost by the wild, surging waves of trouble, go tell Jesus; tell him all—pour out your heart as a child pours out his troubles to an earthly parent. He will command the billows, as he did the waves of Galilee, "Peace, be still," and there will be a great calm.

Does the Prince of this world, the power of darkness, linger around your pathway with manifold temptations? Does he cause clouds to overshadow your mind, and your path to look dark before thee? By cunningly devised fables does he attempt to lead you in the path of apostasy—of world-conforming christianity? Oh, flee to the arms of Jesus! "Cast all your care upon him, for he careth for you." Nail the serpent to the cross. He destroyed the happiness of Eden. Resolve that he shall not destroy the Eden happiness within your breast. Jesus extends his entreating arms to press you nearer his bosom, where the raging winds of temptation will never disturb your heart, welling up with everlasting bliss. Then you can sing;

"No condemnation now I dread,
Jesus, with all in him, is mine;
Alive in him, my living head,
And clothed in righteousness divine."

Perhaps, dear reader, I am addressing one who is without fullness of salvation. You are out of the ark of safety. Perhaps you desire to be a disciple of Christ; but you are weak. The Devil knows your weakness, and attacks you at that point. Then go tell Jesus; confess all. He stoops with listening ears to hear it. Oh, "look to Jesus," and he will give you strength; and will give you all you ask for.

Are you burdened with care, and do your sins rise up before you, like a mountain to overwhelm you? Go tell Jesus. Listen to his sweet, entreating voice:—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." Do this, and you will find sweet and perfect rest for your weary heart.

Who does not long for rest? Go to Jesus with your longing, and receive that perfect repose in God that will be undisturbed by the perils of these last days. In every want of your imperfect nature, may the Spirit lead you to "go and tell Jesus." WM. H. SPENCER.

ANGELS vs. SPIRITUALISM.

Having attended some lectures on "Spiritualism" recently, as a standard bearer for Jesus and his truth, I was compelled to take issue with the speaker on some points, one of which was, that their so-called spirits of the dead, were identical with the angels of scripture. Their great proof text on this point being Rev. 22: 9. And by the way, I always remark that spiritualists in the introduction of their peculiar views in a christian community, are as prompt in quoting Scripture, as the Devil was in the wilderness, though not always quite as correct.

Their tactics in this direction are evidently as follows: If we succeed in establishing this hypothesis in the minds of the christian community, we shall have an easy conquest, for the Bible teaches that angels communicated with mortals in old time, and if then, why not now? So if they can prove their premises correct, their conclusions would have some weight; but, unfortunately for them, although orthodox theology may in some measure sustain that view, Bible theology cannot be made to do so.

The passage quoted (Rev. 22: 8, 9) reads as follows: "And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things; then saith he unto me, See thou do it not, for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book. Worship God."

They wanted to make the angel say that he was one of the prophets. But, on giving the text an analytical examination, it was shown conclusively that the angel neither meant or said, more or less, than that he was fellow-servant to John, fellow servant to his (John's) brethren the prophets, and fellow-servant to them which keep the sayings of the book.

Reference was also made by them to the case of Peter's deliverance from prison, his appearance at the door of Mary, where a prayer meeting was being held, the delight and astonishment of Rhoda, her report to the friends, their doubt of its being Peter, and their reply that it was his angel. Acts 12. But this also, if its proves anything, proves too much for their side.

In the first place, the disciples knew that Peter was imprisoned alive; they were praying for his deliverance. In the second place, it was only a supposition on their part.

Now, if they supposed that this angel was Peter's spirit, knowing that Peter was still in prison (for they did not believe that Peter was at the door), then it follows that when Peter died, his other spirit would turn into an angel; consequently Peter would have two spirits, or spirit angels. How absurd!

The fact is, they believed in guardian angels, as taught in both the Old and New Testaments; (Gen. 48: 16, Matt. 18: 10), and believed in by the saints of God in all ages.

Again, the angel that visited Abraham and Lot were claimed to be spirits of men, because they were called men, had the appearance of men, and partook of man's food; but what does the narrative prove? It proves, first, that angels are personal beings, having identity, tangibility, and reality; and furthermore, their personal appearance bears a close resemblance to that of man. Again it proves that they have organs of speech, and are able to communicate with man in an intelligent manner. Now, if modern spirits would manifest themselves as the angels did to Abraham, instead of rapping on, and tipping over tables, and communicate to us in audible tones of speech, instead of rapping out sentences by the A. B. C. process, intelligent men and women might give heed to their claims. Again, there is no evidence but that Abraham knew his visitors to be angels. It is possible that God had employed this means (his angels) to make known his purposes and promises to Abraham previous to this time.

The attempt, therefore, to prove from the Scriptures, that angels are the spirits of dead men, utterly fails. But, on the contrary, they prove very conclusively that the angels of God are a distinct order of creation. "What is man that thou art mindful of him. . . For thou hast made him a little lower than the angels." Psa. 8: 4, 5. While this proves that angels are superior to man in intellect, it also proves that man was created subsequent to the angels. 2 Peter 2: 11, also corroborates this view. "Whereas angels, which are greater in power and might," etc. Greater than who? greater than man. Read the context. But Heb. 2: 16, is conclusive on this point. "For verily he (Christ) took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the seed of Abraham." "But to which of the angels said he at any time, Sit on my right hand? . . . are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Heb. 1: 13, 14.

For the World's Crisis.

WHY THE WICKED DEAD ARE RAISED.

It is often asked, in reply to the Scripture testimony that there is to be a second death, "What is the use of raising them up to kill them again?" In reply to this we may say that an unconditional resurrection was foreordained from the foundation of the world, in order to secure the resurrection of those who would be incapable of complying with a conditional resurrection; and as an unconditional resurrection secures the resurrection of all men, the wicked are raised in pursuance of this foreordained decree, while the infliction of the second death is the result of individual sin alone.

It is written, "Known unto God are all his works, from the beginning of the world"; hence He must have known and foreordained the resurrection of all men, as contingent on their coming under the dominion of death through Adam's transgression. Were this otherwise, multitudes would fail of the future life from sheer inability to comply with a conditional resurrection. Indeed, had it been decreed on condition, the Deity, being holy, could not have allowed sin in the conditions, and so none could have been raised; for we read, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God."

So in order that any might attain unto "the resurrection from the dead," it was necessary that the resurrection of all men should have been foreordained independent of conditions. And having been so foreordained, there must be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust; and so on this our hope of a future life depends. And this classification in the resurrection is the result of individual character. And since we cannot fail of a resurrection, that being fixed by an unalterable fiat of Jehovah, let us strive to attain unto that special resurrection,—"the resurrection from the dead"; for on such the second death will have no power. And since God in his goodness and mercy has made the resurrection of all men a sure thing, failure to attain eternal life will be the sole result of man's free will in rejecting that future life, which begins by and with the resurrection.

Let us, then, seek to overcome sin, and to attain life by repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. For we read, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son. But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death."—Rev. 21: 7, 8. And the certainty of this future punishment is presented as an inducement for such characters to break off their sins by righteousness, and their iniquities by turning unto the Lord.

Be not deceived with the idea that the threatened punishment is a play upon words, for God is not unrighteous, to practice deceit. The second death cannot be a lake of fire, but the part which all liars are to have therein, which is to die thereby. To escape this, we must overcome sin by faith in Christ; for "he that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death," as Christ himself testifies.

TRUTH vs. ERROR.

We witnessed some months since a combat between truth and error. The combatants strongly reminded us of David and Goliath. The one we named in our mind Goliath had armed himself with an old spear, made by Pagans away back in a time of heathenish darkness and ignorance. It was as unfit for the time in which we live, and as unsuitable to protect us from the dangers by which we are surrounded, as the ploughs and other implements of husbandry in use then, would be for our rocky side hill farms. And it is as foolish to trust in it, now that the gospel has revealed a plainer and more excellent way, as it would be for our farmers to reject the modern ploughs, for those in use in Asia thousands of years ago.

The spear was like a weaver's beam, heavy and cumbersome, but without point. His sword had upon its blade, written in large Roman capitals, Philosophy and Reason. It was quite as ancient as the spear, and as wholly unsuitable for warfare. It was without edge, and composed of metal soft and spurious.

Armed with these weapons and trusting in them, Goliath challenged one from an army, (considered by many a band of dwarfs and pigmies,) to meet him. David accepted the challenge in the name of Israel's God, and with smooth stones from the clear brook—bright jewels from the mine—truths from the word of God—with the sling of Faith, he advanced to meet him. Ah! little did Goliath and his brethren think that the humble shepherd, small in stature, was one of the King's Invincibles. How the giant toiled and sweat trying to wield that heavy, uncouth spear. While little David, armed with nothing but Bible truth, which God never intended should be heavy and burdensome, went round and round him, firing his smooth stones, and hitting every time. Spectators were compelled to acknowledge the superiority of the weapons used by the champion of Truth. Goliath was fully capable of winning a victory with the right armor, but his strength was lost in trying to use weapons that were worthless.

We have often been amused while thinking of that encounter, but we have rejoiced continually that by it the truth was made the "brighter to shine." We love the truth of the Bible, the faith once delivered to the saints. It will stand all tests. Fire will only make it like gold well refined. Floods will only purify it. Storms of persecution will only make it [illegible] clearer. We love it: we rejoice in it, we [illegible] by it to be made free; and if the truth make us free, we shall be free indeed. We cling to it, for all else is soon to be shaken, and all the refuges of lies swept away. We thank God for the light of his word, and that immortality is brought to light through the gospel.

We love the name of Jesus because he hath conquered death, and obtained the keys of the grave, and given us a chance to obtain eternal life. God bless the little warrior—his champion for the truth. May his shadow never be less, nor his strength diminish. May Israel's God still go with him, and give him victory over error and tradition, whenever and wherever he may meet it. From one who was there.

"CRY ALOUD!"

"Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet."—Rev. 58: 1.

Never has there been a time when the church of Christ needed more of the power and love of God than now, in these last days. Many are departing from the faith, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" These difficulties we must meet, and may God help us to endure unto the end, that we may be saved with that little number who shall come up through great tribulation, having washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

I fear we do not heed the above scripture as we should. Many, instead of crying aloud, keep still. "It will not do to say anything; we have no talent; we cannot speak the word well." Such will not do much in the vineyard of the Lord. We cannot find that Jesus when on earth chose the rich and the learned, but went to the poor fishermen, and told them to follow him, and he would make them fishers of men. He taught them to ask of God for what they lacked, who gives to all liberally. Do we heed his word, or shall we keep on grumbling because we have no talent?

Dear Brn., pray for him who pens these lines, that while he is searching the word he may have wisdom, not of men but from God, that he may speak the word when called as one who must in that great day so near give an account of every idle word that is uttered.

"A few more struggles here,
A few more partings sore,
A few more toils, a few more tears,
And we shall weep no more."

THIS GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM.

I propose to notice what seem to be one or two serious objections to the view generally held by Adventists concerning the gospel of the kingdom, as recorded in Matt. 24: 14. Notwithstanding I am a firm believer in the near advent of our Lord, and delight to dwell and feast upon those Scriptures that teach unmistakably that the Savior is at the door; yet I have a great aversion to wresting or misapplying the word of the Lord, even should such a misapplication seem to confirm other views which we may hold. Adventists nearly all claim that the gospel of the kingdom is not the gospel in the general acceptation of the term; but a particular message in the gospel to be given at a particular time. And as that particular time has come, the gospel of the kingdom is now being preached. To this view we object, and shall endeavor to show from the word of the Lord,

1st, that the gospel of the kingdom was preached over eighteen hundred years since. And

2ndly, that the gospel of the kingdom is not a particular message in the gospel, but the gospel in the general acceptation of the term; the same gospel that has been preached during the whole gospel dispensation.

That the gospel of the kingdom was preached more than eighteen hundred years since, will appear from the following scriptures: "And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing every sickness, and every disease among the people." Matt. 9: 35. See also Matt. 4: 23. Mark's testimony is also to the point, as recorded in chapter 1, verses 14, 15,—"Now after that John was put in prison, Jesus came into Galilee preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God, and saying, the time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the gospel." Believe what gospel? Why, the gospel that Jesus was preaching to them, the gospel of the kingdom, of course.

From the above testimony we learn that Jesus went about all the cities and villages teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom. Not only so, but he admonishes his hearers to repent and believe "the gospel," showing conclusively that "the gospel" and "the gospel of the kingdom" are synonymous, one and the same thing.

That the gospel of the kingdom is nothing more nor less than the gospel in the general acceptation of the term, is most positively proved from Mark 13: 10, which reads as follows: "And the gospel must first be published among all nations." Here it will be seen that what Matthew denominates the gospel of the kingdom, Mark calls "the gospel"—the same gospel that has been preached during the whole gospel dispensation.

S. D. Adventists claim that the everlasting gospel of Rev. 14: 6 (the first angel's message) synchronizes with the gospel of the kingdom, Matt. 24: 14. If this be true, then it follows that the first angel's message dates back more than eighteen hundred years; consequently the three messages must cover the whole gospel dispensation. The writer is alone responsible for the views herein set forth. If any one has any better light, we shall be thankful to receive it.

THE FIRE SPREADING.

Through the kindness of a friend to whom it was written, we are permitted to lay before our readers the following account of the way in which a minister of the Baptist denomination received the blessing of entire sanctification. May all the ministers of Jesus Christ seek and obtain this baptism of holy fire:

In the early part of last December, the Holy Spirit began to work upon my heart convincing me that I was not living as I ought to; at the same time making use of the expressions of a Methodist minister at our union prayer meetings, to show me that there was a higher christian life to which he had attained. At last both the Presbyterian minister and myself were deeply impressed with the conviction that it was our duty, as well as privilege, to go forward and seek a full salvation; the idea of duty being the most prominent. Our experiences from the first were almost identical. We were intimate—had often talked over the matter of our spiritual poverty, and that of all our churches; and when the Methodist minister, just sent to our place, spoke of a higher spiritual life, we were both prepared to take hold of it. All prejudice against the "Methodist doctrine" was removed at the start—for I always had more or less prejudice against that church, and most of its doctrines. But God made me willing to be blessed by any one.

First of all, I consecrated my all to the Lord. This was no small thing. I found that the more I laid down, the more I saw to give up. I drew a form of covenant, or dedi[illegible] tion, consisting of fifteen articles, and af[illegible] very long struggle, with prayer and fa[illegible] was enabled to say that I was not m[illegible] that all I had, or was, belonged to th[illegible] that my will was conformed to his w[illegible] deed, that I had no will of my own. [illegible] this time he blessed me with an unus[illegible] of pease and joy, together with g[illegible] dom and boldness in preaching. M[illegible] edge of the Scriptures grew ama[illegible] seemed to me that all my previous [illegible] of the Bible was only theoretical. No[illegible] word was the bread of life. Prayer, also, seemed to be something wholly different, fresh, and full of power, so that I could spend hours a day communing with my God. It continued so for for two weeks, when, in answer to prayer for a fuller measure of the divine presence, the Holy Ghost came upon me in mighty power, and continued with me about an hour and a half, as they told me, (the family of the Presbyterian minister, at whose house I was at the time,) although it did not seem to me one-half as long. During this visitation, I was not unconscious, though nearly speechless, overpowered with a sense of the presence of the Holy Ghost. It was awfully solemn, though I was not frightened, nor did I shrink back in the least. During this they took me up from the floor on which I had sunk, and laid me on a bed. Then came Jesus, and filled me till I wept aloud with a view of his wonderful love for me. This vision (I can hardly call it anything else) lasted some twenty minutes or so. Then, at the same time I arose and began praying, by thanking the Holy Spirit and Christ for their manifestations to me; and while I was engaged in prayer, the love of the Father in giving his Son to die for the world, impressed me so that I lost sight of everything else. Thus it was; first, the Holy Ghost, then the Savior, and lastly, the Father. I shall never forget that day to my dying hour. From that time to this I have been absorbed in the Divine will. I have begun a new life. Everything is new. The work of the ministry is one of the most solemn realities this side of eternity, and at the same time one of the most delightful employments I can conceive of. All my ungodly ambition gone, all selfishness burned up, I seem to stand alone with Jesus, and take supreme delight in his words. To do his will is my meat and my drink. I do love him supremely.—Earnest Christian.

LOOK TO JESUS.

Look to Jesus to be made like him. He is the model of a christian. "His nature and his name is love." He is meek, loving, pure and good. It is not the will of God that you be like some one else, but it is his will that you be like Jesus. "Let this mind be in you which was in Christ Jesus." It is not essential either to your salvation or usefulness that the capacity and gifts of another be yours, but that you have the mind of Christ. When you sit for a likeness, you sit not for some one's else, but for your own.

Look to Jesus in the day of temptation and trial. You have left the service of Satan. He hates you for it. He will do all he can to overthrow you. His stratagems are cunningly devised. He is the "accuser of the brethren." When the waves of discouragement roll around you, he will say, "where now is your God?" But look to Jesus. He has overcome the devil. He will give you power over him. Is the day of trial upon you? Do cares like a wild deluge come? Do storms of sorrow fall? Look to Jesus. "He is the fullness of the Godhead bodily." "He is mighty to save." His eye is on you. You have in him a friend "who sticketh closer than a brother." Trust in and obey him, and all will be well. Look to Jesus.—M. N. Downing.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

In Dr. Cumming's last work, "Behold the Bridegroom Cometh: the last Warning Cry: With Reasons for the Hope that is in me," we find the following interesting passage, showing what he expects when Jesus comes.

"When the Lord our God returns, how shall he come? for what shall he come? and who are they that shall be with him when he comes? How shall he come? The answer is given by himself: as a 'thief in the night,' unexpected and unlooked for. He shall come when men are crying, 'Peace, peace; where is the promise of his coming?' It will be one of the striking and impressive premonitory proofs that 'the Lord is at hand,' that thousands, in the press, by public statements, by private remarks, will say, What fools these people are that speak of such things; what nonsense to talk of this earth undergoing a great change, and of the Son of God coming to it; all things continue as they were from the beginning, therefore all things will continue as they are for ever. But says Peter, 'Of this they are willingly ignorant,' that these things have not continued as they were, but that vast changes have taken place in the interior contents of the earth, great transformations have passed on its surface, and so far from all things continuing as they were, every thing has been changed, from an atom to an orb, from the humblest ephemeral insect of a day, to the mightiest and most magnificent object upon the earth. When we hear a general outcry against these solemn truths, we shall have in that very outcry irresistible premonitory proof that the Lord is at hand.

"But for what shall he come? To raise the sleeping dust of all with whom we took sweet counsel, whose peace was our peace, whose prosperity was our joy. The very first event when the Redeemer comes will be the opening of every grave, the moving aside of every monument, the quickening of all the dead in Christ. The dead in our world are many times more numerous than the living. Our fields are reaped, our corn is gathered, over the ashes of the dead. Our Royal Exchange, our palaces, our abbeys, our cathedrals, our churches, rest upon the foundations of the dead; the congregation of the dead infinitely outnumbers all the congregations of the living. When Christ comes, the sheeted dead in countless millions will emerge from the waves of the desert sea, and around you, and about you, and every where, shall come forth some familiar face shining in the splendors of immortality and glory. In this first resurrection there will not be a single lost soul; all that are then wakened (for it is the first resurrection) shall see him, and live, and rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. His next act will be to change the living. 'All shall not die,' says the apostle, 'but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.' A secret virtue will penetrate every frame, a divine breath will be breathed into all nostrils; a sanctifying, ennobling, purifying force will run through every artery, and nerve, and limb, and restore and transfigure our whole nature, and this mortal shall [illegible] into immortality, and this corruptible [illegible] break into incorruption, and death shall [illegible] swallowed up in victory. [illegible] next event will be his gathering together all his people. The apostle says in the [illegible] chapter of Romans, 'The whole crea[illegible] groaneth and travaileth in pain, waiting [illegible] manifestation of the sons of God.' [illegible] folds will be merged in one flock; [illegible] in one grand empire; all congre[illegible] in one glorious and catholic church. We shall no more praise him with faltering songs, no more pray to him with stammering lips; we shall see him as he is, and we shall praise him as we ought. He will then pronounce on earth and ocean the everlasting and irreversible benediction. Creation groans, travails, waits in expectancy for him. At that day all those beautiful figures, the bride, the bridegroom, the festival, the song, shall be actual, all prophecy fulfilled, all promise performed, and deep Artesian springs of living water shall break up through the earth, and cover it as with a sea, even as the waters of the ocean cover the channels of the great deep. He will then show that Calvary is not a fable, that redemption is not a fancy; and that all he said, or promised, and inspired, is realised, and that not one jot has dropped from a single promise that has not been fulfilled."—Ex.

BELIEVE NOW.

"Believe and be saved." Believe now, where you are, and as you are. Wait not to be either better or worse, softer or harder, but now resolutely "believe that he doeth it,"—that he doeth it now. Falter not because of a hard heart, or poverty of grace or feeling, or from weakness of faith. I say, believe now, and God will work as he can, and as he will, but save you he will. I believe it. Hallelujah!

You have believed, but you are not satisfied. What is to be done? Rest as you are? Nay, God forbid! "Negative salvation" is next to no salvation. The Lord save us from a mere negative sanctification, that is unaccompanied by a conscious deliverance from all sin. I believe because I will believe. Nay! but if you believe as you ought, you shall be saved as you should, and as you would, with a full salvation. However, be not discouraged. Stop not where you are. Try again. Wait neither for more grace, or more feeling. Make your way to Jesus as fast as you can by believing. That is it—by believing. You touch him when you believe. Your arm is long enough to reach him, at least to touch the hem of his garment—his promise. "And all things whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive, and ye shall have." There it is. Can you not touch it? O, reach out the withered hand. You do, and healing, saving virtue cometh forth from your glorious Savior. Waver not; only keep on desiring, praying, and believing. Repeat the act of believing, until you feel Jesus reigns within your heart, the Lord of every motion.

Let me shout in the ear of your faith that caution, or direction of the seraphic Fletcher, and may its echoes accompany thee and it to the gates of glory. Beware of looking for any grace previous to believing, and let this be uppermost in your mind. Believe till you are drawn above yourself and earth—until your flaming soul mounts and loses itself in the sun of righteousness. Amen, and amen. O Jesus, ride on! Ride on in the chariot of thy truth, and save the people to the uttermost.—J. Caughey,—Earnest Christian.

CORRESPONDING EDITOR.

Our dear friend, Bro. D. T. Taylor, of Rouse's Point, N. Y., has been appointed corresponding editor of the "World's Crisis." We trust our readers will feel a new interest in perusing "our family paper," and will make still greater efforts to extend its circulation. Jesus is coming. Let us all do what we can to spread the glad tidings, that the people may be prepared to meet him, and receive him with a hearty welcome.

WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.

We know our readers, who have not enjoyed the blessed privilege of being present, are anxious to hear about the great meeting at Wilbraham. We can only give a portion of the good news this week, for we write while the meeting is in progress. Before the commencement of the meeting, many prayers were offered by the friends of Jesus that it might be the best meeting ever enjoyed on Wilbraham camp-hill; and results show that their prayers were heard by our Mediator.

There is a charm about the consecrated spot, to those who have been partakers of its joys in other days, that is seldom afforded in this world. It seems as the gate to paradise. The scenery around is so pleasant and cheering, that one cannot fail of being delighted at the prospect. The camp-ground is in the midst of a quiet, rural country, where the inhabitants are mostly farmers enjoying the comforts of this world, friends of good order and religion, and ever ready to help sustain them. On this account our meetings are free from all rowdyism, that often mars the peace of meetings in other places. We lay down to rest at night as quietly as in our own homes.

This year our brethren and sisters came earlier than usual, which added a new interest to the meeting. On Saturday, Aug. 18th, over fifty tents were up, and some twelve preachers were present. In the evening we had an excellent meeting in the Boston tent. It was a real feast to the weary pilgrims, some of whom had come several hundred miles for the sake of enjoying this feast of tabernacles.

Sabbath morning, at an early hour, the people began to come in from the surrounding country, and at nine o'clock we had a very good prayer and conference meeting in front of the preachers' stand. The great burden of feeling was for the conversion of sinners. We look upon this feature of the meeting as very important. So far as our observation goes, we have never known a good campmeeting where this feeling was not prominent, nor known a church to prosper when it stopped laboring for the conversion of sinners. Discord, distraction, backbiting, evil-speaking, confusion and death are almost sure to follow. We have never known a happy, rejoicing christian, who was not active in the cause of Christ, as far as opportunity offered. Whenever we witness this spirit of labor for the salvation of sinners, we are sure of seeing growth in grace. This was gloriously manifested at Wilbraham this year.

At the hour of preaching, Bro. O. R. Fassett, pastor of the church at Sandy Hill, N. Y., spoke to an attentive audience on the evidences of the speedy coming of Christ. We find the people are anxious to hear about the coming of our Savior, and that this interest is increasing. This is a most encouraging symptom.

In the afternoon, there was preaching by the writer, and in the evening by Bro. Peter Noka, an Indian of the Narragansett tribe. The subject was prayer, which was presented in an interesting manner, and followed by earnest exhortations.

At the close of the afternoon service, we had a nice rain, which laid the dust, and added much to the comfort of the encampment during the following week.

Monday morning, Aug. 20th, broke upon us in a most lovely manner. Every thing around seemed to smile, and the children of the Lord rejoiced in his love. During the day each train of cars brought additions to our numbers, and at the close of the day eighty-seven tents bedecked the hill-top, and the children of the Lord stood rejoicing in happy union. Many tears started in the eyes of beholders as they witnessed the greetings when loved ones met. It was a foretaste of what is to be in the coming kingdom.

During the day, prayer meetings were held in different tents. Two meetings for the young people were held by Sister Hastings, which were productive of special good. Seven requested prayers.

In the evening we heard a stirring sermon from Bro. Charles Goodrich, followed by exhortations, and an interesting prayer meeting, when several requested prayers.

Tuesday Aug. 21st, was another most beautiful day,—we think we never enjoyed a brighter one, nor ever witnessed a more heavenly scene than was enjoyed in our general prayer meeting in front of the preacher's stand, which commenced at 8½ o'clock. The first hour was spent in prayer and in speaking of what Jesus had done for them. We have never seen people more anxious to speak of the Lord's goodness than they were on that occasion. It was a soul-stirring scene that will ever be remembered with joy. Much anxiety was expressed for the salvation of sinners. After we had continued the prayer and conference for an hour, those who did not feel ready to meet Jesus were invited to manifest it, when a large number came forward and requested the prayers of christians. Some of them were backsliders, others were unconverted. So far as we could learn, every one was blessed. Those who came forward loaded down with sin and sorrow, were praising God at the close of the meeting, because they had found Jesus precious, and the one altogether lovely. The common remark was,—"this is the best meeting I ever enjoyed." The whole encampment seemed to be moving towards the Lord. No jarring notes were heard. Such exhibitions of love have rarely been witnessed in these last days. The spectator could not help saying, see how these christians love one another.

At the hour of preaching, we listened to a profitable sermon from Bro. H. F. Carpenter, showing the importance of seeking the Lord with the whole heart, if we wished to find him, and be ready for his coming.

In the afternoon, Bro. Ralph Williams preached on the evidences of the Lord's speedy coming, showing that we have but a little time left to labor for the salvation of our fellow men. Following this discourse were some very interesting prayer meetings, which caused great rejoicing among the saints.

At 4 o'clock, the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association was held, which was conducted with the most complete harmony, and adjourned till the next day.

In the evening we had another interesting sermon from Bro. A. Ross, showing that our Savior is soon to appear in all his glory. Several interesting prayer meetings were held in the tents. Thus closed one of the best days we ever enjoyed in our life. At night all was quiet, while one hundred and eight tents were filled with those who are looking for the coming of the King of kings. During the night, the Lord sent a slight rain to lay the dust, and make the encampment more delightful.

Wednesday. This was another pleasant day. At 8½ o'clock another very excellent general prayer and conference meeting was held. The meeting of the Advent Christian Association met also at 8½ o'clock, and the business was all completed a few minutes past 11 o'clock, without the sound of a discordant note. On other occasions, in consequence of varied plans and views, it has taken about two days to do the same work. During the transaction of the whole business not a single hand was raised on the negative. When the chairman called for the "contrary minds," the remark was often made, "There are no contrary ones here." We never before attended such a harmonious business meeting, where so many were assembled.

No changes were made in the official departments of the different associations.

Bro. Henry Pratt preached a stirring practical sermon in the morning. In the afternoon we listened to a very solemn and interesting discourse from Bro. J. Couch, showing that "the end of all things is at hand." In the evening, Bro. C. B. Turner preached an able discourse on the promise made to Abraham, showing very plainly that the saints will yet inherit the earth, when the curse is removed; and that the fulfillment of this promise depends upon the resurrection of the dead. At the close of the meeting we had a conference meeting for about an hour, that surpassed any thing we had enjoyed. The brethren and sisters were filled with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Several would be up speaking at the same time. We found it difficult to close the meeting. One could well afford to go a hundred miles for the sake of enjoying one such meeting as that.

LAST DAYS OF ROME.

All careful obseverers are becoming satisfied that Papal Rome is very near its end. The head of that church begins to feel very sensibly that his power is rapidly departing, if not already gone; and, apparently, there is no chance for ever gaining it again. This being true, the coming of Christ can not be far in the future.

We see no way to doubt this conclusion, but by throwing away all prophecy and history; for the same prophecies that prove the Bible true show that we are near the end of prophetic events.

A Roman correspondent of the Independence Belge, when speaking of the present condition of Rome, says:—

"Misfortune, it is well known, has the power of humbling the pride of the court of Rome. The isolation in which it stands, and the perils with which it is threatened, might render it more tractable, if not more reasonable, and it would be desirable, to profit by its present position in order to impress upon it conditions. The Roman government is dragging out the last days of its existence painfully. Its authority is giving way; its prestige is vanishing, it is bending beneath the weight of its debt and its financial embarassments; its friends are abandoning it, and its creatures are preparing to worship the rising sun. The old machine is out of order; it is time to renovate it. The clericals have lost their arrogance; they feel that power is escaping them. In vain do their allies, the Bourbons, hold their banquets, sparkling with the champagne supplied by Francis II. to celebrate the battle of Custozza; all these are begging humbly to say that an Italy, great and powerful, would not displease them, provided the rights of the church and the independence of the holy father, which no one seeks to disregard, were respected."

The foregoing expresses the prevailing sentiment as expressed by those who are best informed in these things. Every week additional evidence appears in favor of the idea that the power of Rome will soon come to a perpetual end.

INTERESTING FROM ROME.

There are some new developments in matters relating to the Papal power, that are of special interest to the student of prophecy. The present state of things indicates that the head of the Catholic church must bid farewell for ever to all temporal power before the end of this year. We may expect startling events soon. Signs are clearly indicating that we are almost home to glory.

A writer from Rome to the London Herald, Aug. 3d, says:—

"The reports current in Rome, if not absolutely alarming, are such as to create considerable uneasiness. A letter is said to have reached the Pope within the last few days from the Emperor Napoleon, stating that in consequence of the progress of the revolution both at home and abroad, he should no longer be able to provide for the maintenance of the temporal power, and that the Pope must now prepare for the execution of the convention in December. The Pope received the intimation, it is said, with the greatest calmness, and said that he had long ceased to rely on the aid of man, and committed his cause and that of the church to God. Gen. Rufhsking, the minister of the United States, subsequently waited on his holiness, and offered him the escort, if necessary, of the American squadron now cruising in the Mediterranean. The Pope declined the offer, with a strong expression of thanks, saying he had no intention of deserting his post, save in case of the most urgent necessity, or that the freedom of the church's action was coerced."

Another says:—"The crisis on the Roman question is near at hand. Napoleon has notified the Pope that the French troops will positively be withdrawn September 15th, and that consequently the Holy See will have to come to an understanding with the Italian government. That understanding will have to be reached when the Pope renounces his temporal power and Rome passes, as it will ere long, under the government of Victor Emanuel."

A NEW TRACT.

"GENTILE INFIDELITY AND WICKEDNESS OF THIS AGE." The above is the title of a tract written by Hiram Munger, and published by the A. C. P. Society. Price 7 cts. single; 25 cents for six; and 50 cents for thirteen copies, sent by mail, postpaid.

CHARACTER OF THE YOUTH.

One of the marked signs of the times is the unruly, irreverent, disobedient character of the youth of this country. "Young America" has assumed a remarkable degree of independence, and a kind of dare-devil spirit, that is really shocking and alarming. This corresponds with the apostle's description of "the last days," when he says of the children, they will be "disobedient to parents." This trait of character is rapidly developing itself and spreading very generally among the American youth. We look for no improvement till Jesus comes.

In the address of Dr. Thomas before the Old School Presbyterian General Assembly at St. Louis, he made the following allusion to the spirit manifested by the youth in these last days:—

"The great want of our age, sir, is a spirit of obedience to law; of reverence for constituted and legitimate authority; of respect for those who exercise authority, whether in the family, the State or the church. Let me illustrate the habits and temper of Young America, sir, by an anecdote respecting the late Hon. B. F. Butler, whose sobriquet of 'Sandy Hill' was familiar to politicians of twenty years since. He was invited to a Mission Sunday School in the city of New York. The Superintendent introduced him to the boys as the Attorney General of the United States, one of the most distinguished citizens of their native state, and an active friend of friendless youth, adding, while he pointed to the clock, that Mr. B. would limit his speech to fifteen minutes.

Well, sir, they listened with fixed attention, but they kept an eye on the clock. The orator, warming with his theme, forgot the limitation of his time, and had passed the bound only a few seconds, when a tattered urchin, probably a newsboy, and so familiar with slang terms, suddenly sprang up, and pointing to the clock, exclaimed, 'Sandy Hill, your time is out!' That, sir, is an illustration of our respect for those in authority.

Our political papers practice and cherish this pernicious and degrading habit. Our people speak familiarly and contemptuously of the President of the United States of America, the highest dignitary on earth, as 'Old Buck,' 'Abe Lincoln,' or 'Brandy Johnson.' Is it in the use of such epithets that we 'fear and honor the king?' Is not this the conduct of those that 'despise government?' of whom St. Peter says, 'presumptuous are they, self-willed; they are not afraid to speak evil of dignitaries.'

Sir, the tendency of our times—perhaps it may be a natural abuse of the nature of our free institutions—is to despise government, to cultivate a spirit of insubordination. Why, sir, if you will pardon me for relating it, I had once a curious exemplification of this Young Americanism in my own household. It has already appeared in the public prints without my consent, and, therefore, it may not be indecorous to allude to it. I had a little son about four years old, who, of course, I thought a very bright and promising fellow. During my temporary absence from home for a few days on one occasion, his mother relieved the weary interval with reading to him the story of the Revolutionary war. The little fellow treasured up the scattered facts and anecdotes, and narratives of the battle-field, until his youthful patriotism was kindled to a flame, and his blood began to boil. I returned home late in the night, when he was wrapped in slumber. He rose later than usual. While we sat at breakfast he came down, and seated himself by my side in silence. He withheld the familiar welcome—the customary kiss. Evidently his mind was engrossed with something. He sat brooding his topic for a few moments, and then turning to me, he said, 'Father, are you British?' 'My son,' said I, 'I had the good or bad fortune to be born in England, but like the Irishman, I was brought over here so early that I became a native.' 'Well, sir,' said he, his childish face all aglow, and, shaking his little fist at me, "We whipped you once, and can do it again.'"

HINDS, Wilmington, July 13th, writes:—"Brn. and Srs.: I would inform you that when the Crisis and Voice come to me, they come like a table loaded with all the rich provisions that any one could possibly desire. Those letters,—how I feast on them. At one time I had about made up my mind that christians were very scarce in the world, but after I had been to Wilbraham last year, a few days, I had altered my mind."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL FUND.

Several calls have been made by Bro. Herron in behalf of the S. S. Fund, but still the needed aid comes in slowly. It is true we have many calls for our money, and many of us are poor, and have but little to give; but let us remember that this is a very important object indeed. How very necessary to train the young aright.

Would you build a good house? A good foundation is the first thing needed. Would you see your child saved now, and so prepared for usefulness, and to meet our King when he comes? Educate him in the truth. The Sabbath school is eminently calculated to accomplish this.

But the school cannot be sustained without means. There must be teachers and books, and to buy books we must have money. Many of us can give but little; but let us see to it that we give all we can, and pray God to bless that little to the good of the cause.

Let us not neglect to give because it is but little we can do. If it is but five cents, give that. Call on Bro. A. and Sister B., and see what they will give; put your mites together, and forward them to the Crisis office, to use in the work of God, and he will bless you. Do not say as the sister did upon whom I called a few days ago: "I do not think it is my duty to give anything. I do not get any benefit from the Sabbath school;" still living within about a mile of one.

Suppose we cannot go, will not God hold us accountable in the coming judgment for neglecting to aid in this work of saving the young from the destroyer's snare? How many of you, my brothers or sisters, who read this, use tobacco? Think of it, paying away dime after dime for that vile weed, and yet cannot give anything to aid in training the young for a blissful immortality beyond the grave.—Is this right? Are you doing your whole duty before God? "To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—Jas. 4: 17. S. TENNEY.

"ATLANTIC CABLE."

Seeing the following passing the round of papers, and believing that it would be interesting to students of prophecy, I send the item to the Crisis:—

"SCRIPTURAL PROPHECY OF THE ATLANTIC CABLE.—Rev. Tresham Dawes Gregg, Chaplain of Nicholas Within, Dublin, Ireland, has made an original translation of the Prayer of Habakkuk, in which he finds Scriptural prophecy concerning the Atlantic Telegraph, according to his version of the third chapter of Habakkuk, which differs in essential particulars from the accepted version. The ninth verse reads as follows: 'Thou didst make thy bow quite naked, seven rods each, spoke Selah; thou didst cleave the earth with flowings.' The explanation is, 'Here the cable is the bow, composed of seven compartments (or wires), or seven may stand for a sufficiency. The oracle is marvellous in its accuracy.' 11th verse, 'The sun and the moon stood still in their habitation. For enlightenment thine arrows went for illumination, the lightning of thy spear.' Comment: 'Through telegraphic rapidity, the element of time seems illuminated, as though heavenly bodies were stationary.'"

CREATION OF MAN.—NO. 2.

"And God said, let us make man in our image, after our likeness."—GEN. 1: 26.

In my last it was clearly shown that the above text does not prove man to have been created in righteousness and true holiness, neither does it prove him to have been immortal; on the contrary, that man was neither mortal or immortal, but could choose either according to his own free will. He chose death, and hence became mortal. But in what did that image and likeness consist? I answer, in his form and shape. This idea may be new to some, but to the law and the testimony.

Let me first call attention to Gen. 5: 3; "And Adam lived a hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image." Here the same language is used. Can it be supposed for a moment that this language referred to his moral character, or that Seth was righteous and holy at his birth? By no means. If this construction be put upon it, what becomes of the darling theory of perfect depravity we hear so much about? What does it mean? Simply, that he looked like his father; or, to use a common expression, he was a complete picture of his father. I think any unprejudiced mind can see at once that it could have had no reference to his moral character at all. But we are not confined to one solitary passage. There is plenty of proof on this point. Matt. 22: 20, "Whose is this image and superscription?" 21st verse,—"They say unto him, Cæsar's"; that is, the image on the penny looked like Cæsar. Please look at 1 Cor. 15: 49,—"And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." When? At the resurrection. Then our vile bodies will be made like unto Christ's glorious body. I quote 2 Cor. 4: 4. This says that Christ is the image and glory of God. I understand this literally, and the next passage I shall quote proves my position to be correct. Heb. 1: 3,—"Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person."

This passage also explains John 14: 9,—"He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Christ was the express image of his Father's person; that is, he looked exactly like him. If so, what becomes of the Orthodox notion that God is a spirit, without body and parts? and yet we are told that in this one God there are three persons. Please look at Col. 1: 15, "Who is the image of the invisible God." These passages are too plain and positive to need any comment from me.

I will now quote a few passages in which "likeness" occurs. Rom. 8: 3,—"God, sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh." Was he not in the form and shape of man? See Phil. 2: 7,—"And was made in the likeness of man"; and yet he is the express image of his Father's person. Can anything be plainer? Again, Acts 14: 11,—"The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men."

In all the above passages of Scripture, the meaning is too plain to be misunderstood. Let us believe, not as we have been taught, but as the infallible word teaches, and then we shall be led into all truth. With the earnest desire that these remarks on Gen. 1: 26, will awaken in the minds of some, at least, the spirit of investigation, and cause them to search the Scriptures, I close, lest my article may be too long. O that we may have courage to follow truth wherever it may lead, and get ready for the Master's return.

SCRIPTURAL ANSWERS TO INSURMOUNTABLE DIFFICULTIES.

They are insurmountable to some, but in the light of "the word" they are easily surmounted. They are in themselves as easy of apprehension as was the truth in Sampson's riddle, and no more obscure than any parable of the Great Teacher, after hearing his own explanation.

Elder —— urged me, and vehemently demanded of me, at once, to tell him "which city Abraham looked for"? Whether that in Isa. 60, or Gal. 4: 26? This is the sum.

My answer was promptly begun by saying that Abraham looked for all that God's promises embraced; though some of the details as to its accomplishment, were given by the prophets of both Testaments, long after Abraham himself had died.

The inquirer then assumed that he knew the whole that I should say, and said, "tell me! WHICH?"

Others ask the same, or like questions, and in the same positive spirit. The answer to all such inquirers may be given thus:—comprehending the wider range and higher import of the truth inquired for.

I. Abraham looked for the day of Christ. John 8: 56. Now "tell me which day? Yes or no? Come, tell me! I want to know!" So says the Anti-Second Adventist. To such a mere believer in the first advent, as if it were all that pertains to Christ's coming, the difficulty seems insurmountable; but to the Second Adventist the whole question and answer is plain. Abraham's expectation embraced the whole day and whole work of Christ, especially his triumphant coming in his kingdom.

II. Abraham's covenant promise did embrace the deliverance from Egypt four hundred years, and in the fourth generation after his time; but in God's disclosures of this one promise, we find that it was not exhausted there. He speaks of a "new covenant" (not "new" in respect to Abraham, but new as to Israel and Judah, in their wonderful history, as a whole), Jer. 31; Ezek. 36; Rom. 11: 27; Heb. 8.

Now shall any one assume his ground on the first covenant, and ask "which did Abraham look for? Tell me which"? Abraham looked for the fulfillment of the divine promise, made to him in the gracious covenant, as recorded in Gen. 22: 14, 18. But the detail is given to us by God, subsequently.

III. Thus, precisely, as to "the city." The promise to Abraham was one; and at first, only given with one apparent idea as to the fulfillment. Like the day of Christ and the covenant, there seems at first no two nor varied ideas pertaining to either of these primary parts of the one promise; so with regard to the land as an inheritance. But the expanded, varied, and super-added views of the one grand gospel, preached before to Abraham, as given in the law, the psalms and the prophets, are assumed and re-asserted by our Lord Jesus Christ. Luke 24: 25 to 44; John 14: 1–3; Heb. 11: 14–17; 12: 22; 13: 14, etc. These embrace Ps. 72: 16; 102: 13–22; 132: 13; Isa. 59: 21 to 60, and many more,—none at all too good for God to give.

Now "which did Abraham look for"? I answer, he looked for that which God promised. But WE only know the fulness and glory and God-likeness of that promise, by taking in what the law foreshadowed, the prophets more fully proclaimed, and the gospel gilds with its own proper glory.

What was done to fulfill "the promise . . . to Abraham," in Palestine and Jerusalem, under the law, does not impair, but confirm it. Then, Isa. 60, and other like advancing portions of promise, will only carry forward the one complete accomplishment, to its crowning consummation, in the new heavens and new earth, and the new Jerusalem, the city of the living God. Amen.

The rule in reading the Word is not to take the least or mere seeming idea of one form of the promise, to the exclusion of the more complete, and comprehensive, and crowning views. No, No. See Rev. 22: 17–18. The Jews knew right well that Jesus, as the "man of sorrows," was not the triumphant "Deliverer" then come to Zion. And over their puerile, and primary, and SEEMINGLY right idea, they stumbled under wrath to the end. "Having eyes," they saw not that Jesus must needs have suffered preparatory to his entrance into glory. They did not distinguish as to his three-fold office of prophet, priest and king. They did "greatly err."

Beloved brethren, let others do as they may, but let us not "fall after the same example of unbelief." Jesus says, "All things . . . written in the law, . . . and in the prophets, and in the psalms, concerning me," "must be fulfilled." Lord, open our understanding, that we may understand (not ignore) the Scriptures. With great respect and fond affection, yours, J. B. COOK.

THE COMMANDMENTS OF GOD.

"I have seen an end of all perfection; but thy commandments are exceeding broad."—Ps. 119: 96.

To know just what is required, every good and obedient child applies himself to learn, as well as to perform. The rule of faith and practice is marked by the finger of God,—by Him who cannot err. The divine standard may at times seem too high for human attainment; but "with God all things are possible." If our lives are hid with him, if we truly walk with him, we feel that whatever is enjoined is binding, and a sacred sense of those obligations continually stirs us up to conformity to them.

Perhaps some are inquiring like one of old, "What good thing shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" Jesus says, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments."

Another inquires, "Which is the first commandment of all?" Jesus answering says, "The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord: and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first and great commandment. And the second is like, namely this; thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these."

It seems that as we can not in reality benefit the Lord, he is pleased to consider what we do one for the other as done unto himself; every act of kindness and benevolence is for HIM. Is it possible that we can love our neighbor as ourselves? How do we love ourselves? First, we "think no evil." Second, we speak no evil; and those faults are never once mentioned, but concealed with all the cunning of secretiveness. Do I love my neighbor as myself? Alas! like the publican I smite my hands upon my breast crying, "God be merciful to me a sinner!" Can it be my Savior has borne so long with me, and I refuse to bear the offences of others, when he says, "Forbearing one another in love"? Do I ask to be forgiven? He says, "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Solemn thought! just as I forgive, so shall I be forgiven. O for more grace! I am poverty-stricken. I must go to Jesus and buy gold, such as he he has long counseled me to buy, that I may be rich.

Christians, love one another; be kind to each other. Do as you would be done by. If you bear hardness toward any, I entreat you in Christ's stead, be reconciled. Be humble, then each will esteem the other as better than himself, and so "fulfill the law of Christ." "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." A. M. STARK.

Correspondence.

From Sr. L. W. Bragg.

Beloved Pilgrims in the Lord:—Holiness to the Lord in all things should be our motto, if we hope to see God. Says he, "Be ye holy, for I am holy"; and, "Be ye holy in all manner of conversation"; which is easily done, when we are really consecrated to God, soul, body and spirit, and every thought brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ; for from the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. If we are really looking for the Just One from glory, to change these vile bodies, our conversation will be as much devoted to that, and to a real preparation for the glory that is coming, as the worldling is in his conversation for this world and the future glories he expects. Our words must be with grace (or a favor to them that hear), seasoned with salt, that we may know how to answer every man; indulging in no foolish talking or jesting, which are not convenient, but rather, giving of thanks. How very important that we walk circumspectly, and redeem the time; because the days are evil. Not say, as many do, that times have changed, and we must conform some to the customs and ways of the world, or we shall lose our influence. Not so with Paul, who says, "I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified"; or, as one translation reads, "make known." How blessed to know nothing, save Jesus Christ; and by his cross be crucified to the world, and the world to us. Then all we have to make known or talk about is Jesus, his coming, and the glory which is so soon to be brought unto us.

What a glorious thought! it lifts my heart to things above, and I long to behold his lovely face shining in immortal beauty. And the thought that I shall so soon be made like his glorious body, to die no more, sinks me in the dust before him, feeling unworthy, unworthy. It is all of matchless grace and dying love,—the scheme to rescue fallen man. Praise the good Lord forever, for the purifying hope which works by love, purifies the heart, and overcomes the world. We read, "If any man love the world (or the things that are in the world), the love of the Father is not in him." Then it is explained thus: "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, are not of the Father, but of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof; but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." So we see if we abide forever, we shall gladly turn our eyes from beholding vanity, as we are commanded to, and abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul, making no provision for the flesh to fulfill the lust thereof; casting off all the works of darkness (which are works of unbelief), and putting on the armor of light; and by faith walking just as honestly before God, as though we were in the eternal day of glory. Thus we see the path of the just is as a shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. The pride and ambition of this life is gone, and we seek that honor which comes from God only; having a good report through faith, but disrepute from carnally minded professors, who receive honor one of another.

How appalling to see how this death-like principle has grown up among us as a people. But why so deathly in its effects? Because we cannot believe, that receive honor one of another, and seek not that honor which comes from God only. And "without faith it is impossible to please God." "For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek
